PREFACE

This edition of Martin's Annual Criminal Code contains the annotated Criminal Code, Canada Evidence Act, Food and Drugs Act, Narcotic Control Act and Young Offenders Act as enacted by R.S.C. 1985, and excerpts from the Constitution Act, 1982. At the time of printing, the new Controlled Drugs and Substances Act (Bill C-8) had not yet been passed by Parliament. That Act, when brought into force, repeals the Narcotic Control Act and effects substantial amendments to the Food and Drugs Act and some amendments to the Code. These proposed amendments are included in this volume. When the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act receives Royal Assent, subscribers will be provided with the full text in a supplement.

This edition is updated with all statutory amendments. The text of any amendments which have not been brought into force are printed in italics and subscribers will be notified in supplements when the provisions are brought into force. Any other amendments which receive Royal Assent before the next edition is published will also be included in the supplements. At the date of printing, the important amendments to the Criminal Code from S.C. 1995, c. 22 (Bill C-41) have not yet been brought into force and are therefore printed in italics. Bill C-41, inter alia, replaces Part XXIII - SENTENCING and contains important procedural and substantive changes to the sentencing part of the Code. Amendments to the Criminal Code effected by 1995, c. 39 (Bill C-68) an Act Respecting Firearms and Other Weapons are of course included in the Criminal Code. The complete text of the new Firearms Act, S.C. 1994-95, c. 39, is included in the 1996-97 edition of Martins Related Criminal Statutes.

This edition contains annotations of all relevant decisions reported to April 30, 1996. In addition, unreported decisions of particular significance which have come to our attention prior to April 30, 1996 are also included. Where there is a large volume of case law under a section, headings are included to make the annotations more accessible. The annotations under the Charter of Rights sections are of general application. Cases dealing with a specific provision (of the Criminal Code, for example) are noted under that section.

After many years of experience with the Charter of Rights, it is apparent that the Canadian Bill of Rights is of limited use in the criminal law context and therefore the Bill of Rights is not included in this edition. Those needing to refer to the Bill of Rights should see Martin's Annual Criminal Code, 1990 or Martin's Related Criminal Statutes, 1996-97.

The practice initiated in the very first edition of Martin's Criminal Code (1955) of including cross-references has been continued in this edition in order to assist the user in locating related provisions.

A synopsis of all but the simplest sections is also included, along with the cross-references and annotations.

This edition continues a new feature, an Offence Grid which is based upon charts prepared by the Provincial Judges' Association of British Columbia. We wish to acknowledge the kind offer of the Association to permit us to include these charts in this edition of Martin's. We also wish to thank Alison Wheeler of Greenspan & Associates for her assistance in updating the Offence Grid.

A comprehensive Index, updated by Ken Chasse, is included in this edition. We are sure users will find this of significant value.

We would also like to thank Marie Henein of Greenspan & Associates for her thorough research which has contributed to the completeness, currency and accuracy of this book.

We are also grateful to Sharon Gibson, Maggie Tyson and Fran Cudlipp of Canada Law Book for their able assistance in the preparation of this edition.

CRIMINAL CODE CONCORDANCE

This Table sets out all sections of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34 as amended to December 1988 and the corresponding numbering in R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46 as amended to February, 1995. References to subsections, paragraphs and subparagraphs appear only when the numbering has been changed in the R.S.C. 1985 Code. The numbers listed under the heading "R.S.C. 1985" reflect the numbering scheme set out in the main volumes of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, the First, Second, Third and Fourth Supplements and amendments.

Locate the number under the heading R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34 and cross-refer to the number that appears in the opposite column under the heading R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46. Where a case cites provisions from the 1970 Code, consult the R.S.C. 1985 column for the corresponding 1985 Code section numbers. Where contemporary cases cite the 1985 Code, consult the R.S.C. 1970 column for the corresponding 1970 Code numbers.

Note: Users should bear in mind, however, that the Concordance is not a citator and has been assembled only as a guide to the numbering of the 1985 Code.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions set out in this section which are applicable to the Criminal Code as a whole, certain provisions contain their own definitions of particular words or phrases. Some Parts of the Criminal Code also contain definition sections as follows: Part III, firearms and other offensive weapons, s. 84; Part IV, offences against the administration of law and justice; Part V, sexual offences, public morals and disorderly conduct, s. 150; Part VI, invasion of privacy, s. 183; Part VII, disorderly houses, gaming and betting, s. 197; Part VIII, offences against the person and reputation, ss. 214, 254; Part IX, offences against rights of property, s. 321; Part X, fraudulent transactions relating to contracts and trade, s. 379; Part XI, wilful and forbidden acts in respect of certain property, s. 428; Part XII, offences relating to currency, s. 448; Part XII.1, instruments and literature for illicit drug use, s. 462.1; Part XII.2, proceeds of crime, s. 462.3; Part XVI, compelling appearance of accused before a justice and interim release, s. 493; Part XIX, indictable offences – trial without jury, s. 552; Part XXI, appeals – indictable offences, s. 673; Part XXIII, punishment, fines, forfeitures, costs and restitution of property, s. 716; Part XXIV, dangerous offenders, s. 752; Part XXV, effect and enforcement of recognizances, s. 762; Part XXVII, summary convictions, s. 785.

Refer also to the newly enacted Part XX.1 of the Criminal Code containing definitions for the following: accused, assessment, chairperson, court, justice, dual status offender, hospital, medical practitioner, party, placement decision, prescribed, Review Board and verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder, s. 672.1; protected statements, s. 672.21; psychosurgery, s. 672.61(2); electro-convulsive therapy, s. 672.61(2); Minister, s. 672.68(1).

Reference should also be made to the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which, pursuant to s. 3(1) of that Act, applies to every federal enactment, "unless a contrary intention appears". That Act, in addition to codifying certain rules of interpretation, also defines certain terms in s. 35. Other federal enactments may also contain definitions of words or phrases which are applicable to the Criminal Code by virtue of s. 4(4) of the Code and s. 15(2) of the Interpretation Act which provides that, "where an enactment contains an interpretation section or provision, it shall be read and construed . . . as being applicable to all other enactments relating to the same subject-matter unless contrary intention appears". For example, s. 747(1) makes reference to "parole" which, however, is defined only in s. 2 of the Parole Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-2. Throughout the Criminal Code in th note of related sections, an attempt has been made to identify these related sections in other enactments.

ANNOTATIONS

“Attorney General” / also see definition of prosecutor, infra – It is clear that Parliament may constitutionally vest exclusive jurisdiction in the Attorney General of Canada to prosecute offences which do not depend for their validity on s. 91(27) of the Constitution Act, 1867: R. v. Hauser (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 481, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 984, 8 C.R. (3d) 89 (5:2). It would also seem that Parliament may also vest prosecutorial authority in the federal Attorney General under this section even where the offence depends for its validity on the criminal law power in s. 91(27): A.-G. Can. v. Canadian National Transportation, Ltd.; A.-G. Can. v. Canadian Pacific Transport Co. Ltd. (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 38 C.R. (3d) 97, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 206 (the court splitting 4:3 on the issue) with respect to the Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23; and R. v. Wetmore and A.-G. Ont. (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 507, 38 C.R. (3d) 161, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 161 (6:1) with respect to the Food and Drugs Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-27.

Where the Attorney General of Canada does not intervene in a prosecution, such as for an offence under the Fisheries Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-14, then counsel for the provincial Attorney General may conduct the prosecution: R. v. Sacobie and Paul (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 430, 28 N.B.R. (2d) 288 (C.A.), affd 1 C.C.C. (3d) 446n, 47 N.R. 59, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 241 (7:0).

It was open to the Crown Attorney by letter to appoint a federal prosecutor as an ad hoc counsel or agent for the provincial Attorney General to prosecute an offence under the Criminal Code which was jointly charged with an offence under the Narcotic Control Act: R. v. Luz (1988), 5 O.R. (3d) 52 (H.C.J.).

Proceedings under the Narcotic Control Act are commenced at the instance of the Government of Canada if charges are laid pursuant to agreed procedures which confer general authority on officers of a municipal police force to institute or commence proceedings on behalf of the Government of Canada. It is not necessary that counsel for the Attorney-General of Canada be consulted specifically with respect to each particular charge or that there be specific authority to lay that charge: R. v. King (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 359 (Ont. C.A.).

“bank-note” – Most offences relating to currency are found in Part XII which also defines certain terms in s. 448. Under s. 35(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, “bank” means a bank to which the Bank Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-1, applies.

“Canadian Forces” – Note definition of “peace officer” in this section. Reference may also be made to National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5.

“cattle” – The principal offences relating to injury to cattle and other animals are in ss. 444 to 447.

An information charging the accused with wilfully killing a “heifer” properly charged the offence contrary to s. 444 of wilfully killing “cattle”, heifer” being the familiar name for a young cow: R. v. Allen (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 549, 8 N.B.R. (2d) 131 (S.C. App. Div.).

“clerk of the court” – The definition of this position is wide enough to include a person describing himself as a Deputy Clerk: Ex p. Leclerc (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 346 (Que. Q.B.).

“counsel” – In light of this definition, reference must be made to the applicable provincial legislation which will define the matters which barristers and solicitors are required to do. Note also s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms giving a person arrested or detained the right to “counsel”.

"dwelling-house" – A motel unit is a dwelling house: R. v. Henderson, [1975] 1 W.W.R. 360 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

"Curtilage" is not a term of normal usage in Canada, but has been extensively considered in the United States because of the Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable search and seizure. In United States v. Potts, 297 F. 2d 68 (6th Cir. 1961), curtilage was defined to include all buildings in close proximity to a dwelling, which are continually used for carrying on domestic employment; or such place as is necessary and convenient to a dwelling and is habitually used for family purposes.

"day" – "Day" as defined in this section refers to "day" as distinguished from "night" and has no application to provisions which, for example, require that a notice be served within seven clear days: R. ex rel. McLearn v. Meagher (1956), 117 C.C.C. 198, 26 C.R. 48, 39 M.P.R. 142 (N.S.S.C.). Thus, this definition would apply where there is a requirement that a certain act be done "by day" as in execution of a search warrant in s. 488. For other definitions relating to periods of time, see Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 35: "local time", "month", "standard time", s. 37: "year". As to calculation of time periods, see ss. 26, 27, 28 and 29 of the Interpretation Act, especially s. 27 relating to calculation of number of days where the time is expressed in terms of "clear days" or "at least" a number of days.

"every one" / "person", "owner" and similar expressions / Liability of corporation – In the case of true criminal offences requiring proof of mens rea, liability is attributed to the corporate accused through the identification theory of liability. This theory produces the element of mens rea in the corporate entity. The theory establishes the identity between the directing mind and the corporation which results in the corporation being found guilty for the act of the natural person, the employee. The identity of the directing mind and the corporation coincide and the corporation is liable so long as the actions of the directing mind are performed by the manager within the sector of operation assigned to him by the corporation. The sector may be functional or geographic or may embrace the entire undertaking of the corporation. The act in question must be done by the directing force of the company when carrying out his assigned function in the corporation. Acts of the ego of a corporation taken within the assigned managerial area may give rise to corporate criminal responsibility whether or not there be formal delegation; whether or not there be awareness of the activity in the board of directors or the officers of the company, and whether or not there be express prohibition from the board of directors. The identity doctrine merges the board of directors, the managing director, the superintendent, the manager or anyone else to whom the board of directors has delegated the governing executive authority of the corporation, and the conduct of any of the merged entities is thereby attributed to the corporation. Accordingly, a corporation may have more than one directing mind. However, the outer limit of the delegation doctrine is reached and exceeded when the directing mind ceases completely to act, in fact or in substance, in the interests of the corporation. The identification doctrine, accordingly, only operates where the Crown demonstrates that the action taken by the directing mind was within the field of operation assigned to him, was not totally in fraud of the corporation and was by design or result partly for the benefit of the company: Canadian Dredge & Dock Co. Ltd. et al. v. The Queen (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 45 C.R. (3d) 289, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 662 (8:0).

In R. v. City of Sault Ste. Marie (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 3 C.R. (3d) 30, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299, Dickson, J., for the Court considered the issue of corporate responsibility with respect to a strict liability offence for which proof of due diligence would be a defence. Dickson, J., pointed out that where an employer is charged in respect of an act committed by an employee acting in the course of employment, the question will be whether the act took place without the accused's direction or approval, thus negating wilful involvement of the accused, and whether the accused exercised all reasonable care by establishing a proper system to prevent commission of the offence and by taking reasonable steps to ensure the effective operation of the system. The availability of the defence to a corporation will depend on whether such due diligence was taken by those who are the directing mind and will of the corporation, whose acts are therefore in law the acts of the corporation itself.

Liability of the Crown and Crown corporations – In determining the liability of the Crown or a Crown corporation for alleged criminal acts, reference must be made to s. 17 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, which provides that, “No enactment is binding on Her Majesty or affects Her Majesty or Her Majesty’s rights or prerogatives in any manner, except as mentioned or referred to in the enactment.”

The definitions of “person” and “every one” in this section were held to apply to the C.B.C. which was charged with broadcasting an obscene film contrary to s. 163, although the Corporation, as a Crown corporation, is an agent of Her Majesty. It is only when the C.B.C. is lawfully executing the powers entrusted to it by the Broadcasting Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-9, that it is deemed to be a Crown agent and entitled to Crown immunity. When the Corporation exercises its powers in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the Broadcasting Act, it steps outside its agency role: Canadian Broadcasting Corporation v. The Queen (1983), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 339, 145 D.L.R. (3d) 42 (7:0).

The Crown was held to be immune from prosecution under the former Combines Investigation Act. This immunity also extends to Crown corporations who are agents of the Crown for all their purposes, acting within their authorized purposes: R. v. Eldorado Nuclear Ltd.-Eldorado Nucleaire Ltée; R. v. Uranium Canada Ltd.-Uranium Canada Ltée (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 449, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 551, 4 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 77 C.P.R. (2d) 1, 50 N.R. 120 (5:2).

Where, from an examination of the statute as a whole, it is apparent that Parliament’s intention was that the Crown be bound then, notwithstanding the Crown is not expressly referred to, it will be bound by the statute. Thus it was apparent from the provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to costs in summary conviction appeal matters that both the Crown and the defendant were to be treated equally with respect to costs and accordingly the court had power to award costs against the Crown in summary conviction appeals notwithstanding the applicable provisions of the Criminal Code did not expressly mention the Crown: R. v. Ouellette (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 336, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 568, 15 C.R. (3d) 372.

person – “person” is also defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, to include a corporation and it was held in R. v. Township of Richmond (1983), 4 D.L.R. (4th) 189, [1984] 4 W.W.R. 191 (B.C.C.A.), that “corporation” included a municipal corporation which could therefore be charged with an offence contrary to the Fisheries Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-14, which prohibits the doing of certain acts by any “person”.

“explosive substance” – The principle provisions relating to liability for the handling of explosives are found in ss. 79 to 82.

A logging road, however, built and maintained by the company which controls access to the road by means of a permit system, is not a highway: R. v. Sahonovitch (1969), 69 W.W.R. 674 (B.C.S.C.).

“indictment” – See definition of “count” above. As to provisions respecting sufficiency of indictments and informations, see ss. 581 to 601.

“mental disorder” – The definition of “mental disorder” as a disease of the mind clearly imports the terminology used to define insanity under the previous provisions of s. 16. Therefore, see the notes under s. 16.

"military" and "military law" – See definition of "Canadian Forces" above. Reference may also be made to National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5, and the Regulations made thereunder, especially the Queen's Regulations.

"motor vehicle" – This definition contemplates a kind of vehicle, not whether the vehicle is actually operable or effectively functionable: Saunders v. The Queen, [1967] 3 C.C.C. 278, [1967] S.C.R. 284, 1 C.R.N.S. 249. Thus, an automobile which is out of gas is still a motor vehicle: R. v. Lloyd, [1988] 4 W.W.R. 423, 66 Sask. R. 100, 6 M.V.R. (2d) 240 (C.A.).

"municipality" – See notes under "person", supra.

"night" – See notes under "day", supra.

"offensive weapon" – See notes under "weapon", infra.

"peace officer" / municipal enforcement officers – In an interesting and lengthy judgment, applying the interpretation tests, it was found that a municipal by-law enforcement officer was not entitled to enforce the provisions of the Criminal Code: R. v. Laramée (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 433, [1972] 6 W.W.R. 30 (N.W.T. Mag. Ct.). Folld: Wright v. The Queen, [1973] 6 W.W.R. 687 (Sask. D.C.).

In R. v. Jones and Huber (1975), 30 C.R.N.S. 127, [1975] 5 W.W.R. 97 (Y.T. Mag. Ct.) it was held that an animal control officer appointed under a municipal by-law enacted pursuant to the Municipal Ordinance, R.O.Y.T. 1971, c. M-12 is a peace officer within the Code as is a poundkeeper appointed under a municipal by-law: Moore v. The Queen, [1983] 5 W.W.R. 176, 21 Man. R. (2d) 77 (Co. Ct.).

Territorial limits – A peace officer is limited territorially by the authority which appoints him: R. v. Soucy (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 561, 36 C.R.N.S. 129 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

Military Police – A military police officer is not a peace officer within the meaning of para. (f)(i) when exercising authority over persons not subject to the Code of Service Discipline. He is, however, a peace officer within the meaning of para. (f)(ii) if the circumstances fall within s. 22.01(2) of the Queen's Regulations which sets out duties of a kind as to necessitate the officers and men performing them to have the powers of peace officers, including duties performed as a result of established military action or practice related to the maintenance of law and order, protection of property and persons, and the arrest or custody of persons. This would include the detection and arrest of an impaired driver and making of a breathalyzer demand after the driver, a civilian, was stopped, albeit on a public highway, for breach of a traffic regulation on an armed forces base: R. v. Nolan (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 58 C.R. (3d) 335, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 1212 (7:0).

A military police officer, appointed pursuant to s. 156 of the National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5, is a peace officer within the meaning of this section when exercising authority over a person, such as a regular member of the armed forces, who is subject to the Code of Service Discipline even where the offence was committed by that person off a military establishment: R. v. Courchene (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 375, 22 M.V.R. (2d) 1, 36 O.A.C. 29 (C.A.).

Gaoler – The word "permanent" in para. (b) of the definition does not apply to the words "keeper, gaoler, guard" and therefore a person hired as a temporary guard is a peace officer: R. v. Burtasson (1982), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 268, 25 C.R. (3d) 331 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Game wardens and wildlife enforcement officers – Similarly, a wildlife officer appointed under the Wildlife Act, 1979 (Sask.), c. W-13.1 is a peace officer: R. v. Rutt

(1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 147, 123 D.L.R. (3d) 121 (Sask. C.A.), as is a game warden appointed under the Fish and Wildlife Act, 1980 (N.B.), c. F-14: R. v. Rushton (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 403 (N.B.C.A.); and a conservation officer appointed under the Game and Fish Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 186; R. v. Renz (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 250 (Ont. C.A.).

Band constable / Indian reserve – A band constable on an Indian reserve appointed as a special constable to enforce certain provisions of the Indian Act, such as s. 97 which involves drunkenness on the reserve, is a person “employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace” and thus within the definition of “peace officer”: R. v. Whiskeyjack and Whiskeyjack (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 245, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 481 (Alta. C.A.).

in flight – This term is defined in s. 7(8).

“prison” – This definition would override the narrower definition of “prison” in the Prisons and Reformatory Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-20. The term “penitentiary” is defined in s. 2 of the Penitentiary Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-5.

“property” – A promissory note falls within this definition and is also “anything” capable of being stolen within the meaning of s. 322: R. v. Cinq-Mars (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 248 (Que. C.A.).

“prosecutor” – Notwithstanding the accused elects trial by provincial court judge, where the offence charged is an indictable offence he is tried under the provisions of Part XIX and it is the definition of “prosecutor” in this section which applies rather than the definition in Part XXVII. Accordingly, a police officer who is neither the informant nor counsel may not conduct the prosecution: R. v. Edmunds (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 485, 29 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 345, 35 N.R. 611 (S.C.C.) (4:1).

However, a police officer, as agent of the Attorney-General, may communicate to the court the Attorney-General’s decision as to whether or not to proceed by indictment on a Crown option offence and the officer is not at that stage a prosecutor: R. v. Parsons (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 490, 50 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 9 (Nfld. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused November 22, 1984.

Absent flagrant impropriety, the Attorney General has the right to intervene in any private prosecution: R. v. Kowalski (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 168, 107 A.R. 60, 75 Alta. L.R. (2d) 110 (Prov. Ct.).

“public officer” – This definition is not exhaustive and therefore an officer who reports to a provincial or municipal government such as a municipally appointed agricultural inspector is a public officer for the purposes of the offence contrary to s. 129 of the Criminal Code: R. v. Cartier; R. v. Libert (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 553 (Que. S.C.).

Also see definition in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

“unfit to stand trial” – The definition of “unfit to stand trial” statutorily entrenches the extensive case-law in the area. Any individual who is unable to understand either the nature or object of the proceedings, the possible consequences or to communicate with counsel as a result of a mental disorder is rendered “unfit to stand trial”. The terminology provides clarification of the conflicting case-law by requiring the issue of fitness to be raised solely in the context of a mental disorder and at any stage in the proceedings prior to the rendering of a verdict. Reference should also be made to ss. 672.22 to 672.33 relating to the trial of the issue of fitness.

“valuable security” – A travellers cheque is a valuable security, its value being the amount paid for it by the owner: R. v. Pennell, [1966] 1 C.C.C. 258, 47 C.R. 200 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Zinck (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 150 (N.B.C.A.).

“weapon” – A firearm as defined in s. 84 will always fall within the definition of weapon. It is not necessary to prove that the accused used it or intended to use it for causing death or injury or for a purpose of threatening or intimidation: R. v. Felawka, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 199, 85 C.C.C. (3d) 248, 25 C.R. (4th) 70.

DESCRIPTIVE CROSS-REFERENCES.

3. Where, in any provision of this Act, a reference to another provision of this Act or a provision of any other Act is followed by words in parenthesis that are or purport to be descriptive of the subject-matter of the provision referred to, the words in parenthesis form no part of the provision in which they occur but shall be deemed to have been inserted for convenience of reference only. 1976-77, c. 53, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Other rules of interpretation may be found in the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. See especially s. 14 relating to marginal notes and historical references.

SYNOPSIS

This section is designed to avoid confusion arising from the use of descriptive cross-references within sections. It states that such words, which appear in parentheses, are not intended to have any interpretative value and are solely added for ease of cross-reference. (For an example of a descriptive cross-reference, see s. 183 – definition section within the “wiretap” section of the Criminal Code.)

Part I / GENERAL

POSTCARD A CHATTEL, VALUE / Value of valuable security / Possession / Expressions taken from other Acts / Sexual intercourse / Proof of service by affidavit / Attendance for examination.

4. (1) For the purposes of this Act, a postal card or stamp referred to in paragraph (c) of the definition “property” in section 2 shall be deemed to be a chattel and to be equal in value to the amount of the postage, rate or duty expressed on its face.
- (2) For the purposes of this Act, the following rules apply for the purpose of determining the value of a valuable security where value is material:
  - (a) where the valuable security is one mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the definition “valuable security” in section 2, the value is the value of the share, interest, deposit or unpaid money, as the case may be, that is secured by the valuable security;
  - (b) where the valuable security is one mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the definition “valuable security” in section 2, the value is the value of the lands, goods, chattel personal or interest in the chattel personal, as the case may be; and
  - (c) where the valuable security is one mentioned in paragraph (e) of the definition “valuable security” in section 2, the value is the amount of money that has been paid.
- (3) For the purposes of this Act,
  - (a) a person has anything in possession when he has it in his personal possession or knowingly
    - (i) has it in the actual possession or custody of another person, or
    - (ii) has it in any place, whether or not that place belongs to or is occupied by him, for the use or benefit of himself or of another person; and
  - (b) where one of two or more persons, with the knowledge and consent of the rest, has anything in his custody or possession, it shall be deemed to be in the custody and possession of each and all of them.

(4) Where an offence that is dealt with in this Act relates to a subject that is dealt with in another Act, the words and expressions used in this Act with respect to that offence have, subject to this Act, the meaning assigned to them in that other Act.

(5) For the purposes of this Act, sexual intercourse is complete on penetration to even the slightest degree, notwithstanding that seed is not emitted.

(6) For the purposes of this Act, the service of any document and the giving or sending of any notice may be proved by oral evidence given under oath by, or by the affidavit of, the person claiming to have served, given or sent it.

(7) Notwithstanding subsection (6), the court may require the person who appears to have signed an affidavit or solemn declaration referred to in that subsection to appear before it for examination or cross-examination in respect of the issue of proof of service. R.S., c. C-34, s. 3; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 2; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 3; 1994, c. 44, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Subsec. (1) – “property” is defined in s. 2.

Subsec. (2) – “valuable security” is defined in s. 2.

Subsec. (3) – The definition of possession in this subsection is applicable to all offences. However, s. 358 enacts a special provision relating to possession for the purposes of ss. 342, 354 and 356(1)(b). Also note the rule in s. 588 respecting deemed ownership of property.

Subsec. (4) – Also see similar rule in s. 15(2) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, and note under s. 2, supra.

Subsec. (5) – With the gradual amendment to the sexual offences, sexual intercourse as an element of an offence is now rare. However, it is still relevant to the incest offence in s. 156.

Subsecs. (6), (7) – As to service of subpoena, see ss. 509(2) and 701.

As to service of summons, see s. 509.

Note: This section formerly provided the formula for determining when a person gained a certain age. Resort must now be had to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The effect of that provision is that, for example, a person attains the age of 16 years on the day of the anniversary of her birthday rather than the following day as was the effect of the former Code provision.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (3) / personal possession – To constitute possession for purposes of the criminal law, in a case of manual handling of the object, there must also be knowledge of what that thing is; and both these elements must be co-existent with some act of control (outside public duty): Beaver v. The Queen (1957), 118 C.C.C. 129, 26 C.R. 193 (S.C.C.).

There can exist circumstances where there is no possession in law notwithstanding there is a right of control with knowledge of the presence and character of the thing if there is no intent to exercise control over it, as where the accused manually handles the thing to destroy it or turn it over to the police: R. v. Christie (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 282, 21 N.B.R. (2d) 261 (App. Div.).

Whether or not the inference of possession from the presence of fingerprints on the contraband can be drawn is not subject to a hard and fast rule. It is a question of fact which depends on all of the circumstances of the case and all of the evidence adduced: R. v. Lepage, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 654, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 36 C.R. (4th) 145.

Constructive possession – In R. v. Terrence (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 33 C.R. (3d) 193, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 357 (7:0), the Court held that for para. (b) to apply there must be evidence of a measure of control on the part of the accused. In upholding the acquittal of the accused, a passenger in the stolen motor vehicle, the Court noted that there was no such evidence and no evidence that he was a party to the offence of the person actually in possession (the driver) pursuant to s. 21.

The requisite element of control can be found in the fact that the contraband was in the accused's room and she had the right to grant or withhold her consent to the contraband being stored there: Re Chambers and The Queen (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 440 (Ont. C.A.).

Application – The definition of “possession” in this subsection is applicable to all proceedings under the Criminal Code and is not limited to possession offences. Possession of certain articles may link the accused to pieces of evidence in respect of a crime, such as robbery, in which their possession is not, otherwise, a material element: R. v. Lovis and Moncini (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 732 (S.C.C.) (8:0).

An accused may be found in possession as a party by virtue of s. 21. The accused's liability is not confined to this subsection: Zanini v. The Queen, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 1, [1967] S.C.R. 715, 2 C.R.N.S. 219 (5:0).

Subsec. (5) – When intercourse “complete”: “. . . for the purposes of [s. 4(5)] of the Code sexual intercourse is complete upon the penetration of the labia, either labia majora or labia minora, no matter how little, even though the hymen is never touched nor is there any penetration of the vagina”: R. v. Johns (1956), 25 C.R. 153, 20 W.W.R. 92 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

Subsec. (6) – A certificate of analysis under s. 258 is a document within the meaning of this section and therefore proof of service may be made by way of affidavit: R. v. Spreen (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 190, 8 M.V.R. (2d) 148, 82 A.R. 318 (C.A.).

CANADIAN FORCES NOT AFFECTED.

5. Nothing in this Act affects any law relating to the government of the Canadian Forces. R.S., c. C-34, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “Canadian Forces”, “Her Majesty's Forces”, “military” and “military law” are defined in s. 2. In addition, in certain circumstances, members of the armed forces come within the definition of “peace officer” in s. 2 and officers of the Canadian Forces are within the definition of “public officer” in s. 2. As to offences involving the military, see ss. 46, 50, 52, 53, 62, 269.1, 419, 420. As to immunity of armed forces personnel from firearms and weapons provisions, see ss. 92, 98.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that the Criminal Code does not affect other laws relating to the Canadian Forces. The National Defence Act and its regulations set out a full Code of Service Discipline and it also provides that a breach of an offence under the Criminal Code may be tried by court martial. However, neither this section of the Criminal Code nor the National Defence Act exempt members of the armed forces from trial by a civilian court for a Criminal Code offence committed in Canada.

PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE / Offences outside Canada / Definition of “enactment”.

6. (1) Where an enactment creates an offence and authorizes a punishment to be imposed in respect of that offence,

- (a) a person shall be deemed not to be guilty of the offence until he is convicted or discharged under section 736 of the offence; and
- (b) a person who is convicted or discharged under section 736 of the offence is not liable to any punishment in respect thereof other than the punishment prescribed by this Act or by the enactment that creates the offence.

(2) Subject to this Act or any other Act of Parliament, no person shall be convicted or discharged under section 736 of an offence committed outside Canada.

(3) In this section, “enactment” means

(a) an Act of Parliament, or

(b) an Act of the legislature of a province that creates an offence to which Part XXVII applies, or any regulation made thereunder. R.S., c. C-34, s. 5; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 4.

NOTE: Subsections (1)(a), (b) and (2) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Subsec. (2) – For offences committed on territorial sea or inland waters of Canada, see s. 477. As to definition of territorial sea, see Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-8.

Those sections providing for trial in Canada of offences committed outside Canada are as follows: s. 7(1), offence committed on Canadian aircraft; s. 7(2), hijacking and offences relating to aircraft where accused found in Canada; s. 7(3), certain offences against internationally protected person committed on Canadian aircraft or ships, by Canadian citizen or against internationally protected person performing duties on behalf of Canada; s. 7(3.1), hostage taking in certain circumstances; s. 7(3.2) to (3.6), offences involving nuclear material; s. 7(3.7), torture; s. 7(3.71) to (3.77), war crimes and crimes against humanity; s. 7(4), indictable offences by employee within meaning of Public Service Employment Act; s. 57, passport offences; s. 58, offences in relation to certificate of citizenship or naturalization; s. 74, piracy; s. 75, piratical acts; s. 290, bigamy; s. 342, possession in Canada of credit card obtained by crime outside Canada; s. 354, possession in Canada of goods obtained by crime outside Canada; s. 357, bringing into Canada property obtained by crime; s. 462.31, laundering proceeds of offences committed outside Canada; s. 465(1)(a), conspiracy to commit murder outside Canada; s. 465(4), conspiracy outside Canada to commit offence inside Canada.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1)(a) provides a legislative statement of the presumption of innocence, first articulated in the Common Law and now enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If the accused is convicted, or found guilty and discharged under s. 736, subsec. (1)(b) states that the only punishment which can be imposed is that set out in the enactment creating the offence. The enactment, as defined in subsec. (3), may be either the Criminal Code, another federal statute or a provincial statute creating a summary conviction offence.

Subsection (2) states the rule limiting the territorial application of Canadian criminal law to those offences committed in Canada, unless Canadian jurisdiction is specifically extended by federal law. For an example of such a provision, see s. 7. If the relevant legislation does not extend jurisdiction, it will be necessary to show that there is a real and substantial link between the offence and Canada.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(a) – In R. v. Negridge (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 304, 17 C.R. (3d) 14 (Ont. C.A.) reference was made to this subsection when the Court held that an accused was not liable to the increased minimum penalties for a second or subsequent “offence” when the second or subsequent offence was committed before the earlier conviction although after the commission of the offence that led to the earlier conviction.

Subsec. (1)(b) – Where the offence with which the accused was charged has been repealed and new offences created which would apply to the accused’s conduct, had it occurred after enactment of these new offences, then the accused is entitled to the benefit of the lesser maximum punishment prescribed for the new offences. This results not from s. 11(i) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms but s. 44(c) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21: R. v. B.(J.W.) (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 35 (P.E.I.S.C.).

Subsec. (2) – All that is necessary to make an offence subject to the jurisdiction of Canadian courts is that a significant portion of the activities constituting that offence take place in Canada. It is sufficient that there is a real and substantial link between the offence and this country. For this purpose, the court must take into account all relevant facts that take place in Canada that may legitimately give this country an interest in prosecuting the offence. The court must then consider whether there is anything in those facts that offends international comity and it may be that the outer limits of the test of a real and substantial link are coterminous with the requirements of international comity. Where the evidence with respect to charges of fraud and conspiracy was that the fraudulent inducements were made by persons in Canada, albeit over the telephone, to residents of the United States, and that some of the proceeds found their way back to Canada, then the charges were properly tried in Canada: R. v. Libman (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 206, 21 D.L.R. (4th) 174 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

OFFENCES COMMITTED ON AIRCRAFT / Idem / Offences against fixed platforms or international maritime navigation / Offences against fixed platforms or navigation in the internal waters or territorial sea of another state / Offence against internationally protected person / Offence of hostage taking / Offences involving nuclear material / Idem / Idem / Idem / Definition of "nuclear material" / Jurisdiction / Jurisdiction: war crimes and crimes against humanity / Procedure and evidence / Defences / Conflict with internal law / Attorney General of Canada / Definitions / "conventional international law" / "crime against humanity" / "war crime" / Meaning of "act or omission" / Offences by Public Service employees / Jurisdiction / Appearance of accused at trial / Where previously tried outside Canada / Consent / Definition of "flight" and "in flight" / Definition of "in service" / Certificate as evidence / Idem.

7. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who
  - (a) on or in respect of an aircraft
    - (i) registered in Canada under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act, or
    - (ii) leased without crew and operated by a person who is qualified under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act to be registered as owner of an aircraft registered in Canada under those regulations, while the aircraft is in flight, or
  - (b) on any aircraft, while the aircraft is in flight if the flight terminated in Canada, commits an act or omission in or outside Canada that if committed in Canada would be an offence punishable by indictment shall be deemed to have committed that act or omission in Canada.
- (2) Notwithstanding this Act or any other Act, every one who
  - (a) on an aircraft, while the aircraft is in flight, commits an act or omission outside Canada that if committed in Canada or on an aircraft registered in Canada under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act would be an offence against section 76 or paragraph 77(a),
  - (b) in relation to an aircraft in service, commits an act or omission outside Canada that if committed in Canada would be an offence against any of paragraphs 77(b), (c) or (e),
  - (c) in relation to an air navigation facility used in international air navigation, commits an act or omission outside Canada that if committed in Canada would be an offence against paragraph 77(d)
  - (d) at or in relation to an airport serving international civil aviation, commits an act or omission outside Canada that if committed in Canada would be an offence against paragraph 77(b) or (f), or
  - (e) commits an act or omission outside Canada that if committed in Canada would constitute a conspiracy or an attempt to commit an offence referred to in this subsection, or being an accessory after the fact or counselling in relation to such an offence, shall be deemed to have committed that act or omission in Canada if the person is, after the commission thereof, present in Canada.

(2.1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who commits an act or omission outside Canada against or on board a fixed platform attached to the continental shelf of any state or against or on board a ship navigating or scheduled to navigate beyond the territorial sea of any state, that if committed in Canada would constitute an offence against, a conspiracy or an attempt to commit an offence against, or being an accessory after the fact or counselling in relation to an offence against, section 78.1, shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada if it is committed

- (a) against or on board a fixed platform attached to the continental shelf of Canada;
- (b) against or on board a ship registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament;
- (c) by a Canadian citizen;

- (a) if it is committed as described in any of paragraphs (2.1)(b) to (g); and
- (b) if the offender is found in the territory of a state, other than the state in which the act or omission was committed, that is
  - (i) a party to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, done at Rome on March 10, 1988, in respect of an offence committed against or on board a ship, or
  - (ii) a party to the Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf, done at Rome on March 10, 1988, in respect of an offence committed against or on board a fixed platform.

(3) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who, outside Canada, commits an act or omission against the person of an internationally protected person or against any property referred to in section 431 used by that person that if committed in Canada would be an offence against section 235, 236, 266, 267, 268, 269, 271, 272, 273, 279, 279.1, 280 to 283, 424 or 431 shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada if

- (a) the act or omission is committed on a ship that is registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament;
- (b) the act or omission is committed on an aircraft

- (i) registered in Canada under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act, or
- (ii) leased without crew and operated by a person who is qualified under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act to be registered as owner of an aircraft in Canada under those regulations;
- (c) the person who commits the act or omission is a Canadian citizen or is, after the act or omission has been committed, present in Canada; or
- (d) the act or omission is against
  - (i) a person who enjoys the status of an internationally protected person by virtue of the functions that person performs on behalf of Canada, or
  - (ii) a member of the family of a person described in subparagraph (i) who qualifies under paragraph (b) or (d) of the definition "internationally protected person" in section 2.

(3.1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who, outside Canada, commits an act or omission that if committed in Canada would be an offence against section 279.1 shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada if

- (a) the act or omission is committed on a ship that is registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament;
- (b) the act or omission is committed on an aircraft
  - (i) registered in Canada under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act, or
  - (ii) leased without crew and operated by a person who is qualified under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act to be registered as owner of an aircraft in Canada under such regulations;
- (c) the person who commits the act or omission
  - (i) is a Canadian citizen, or
  - (ii) is not a citizen of any state and ordinarily resides in Canada;
- (d) the act or omission is committed with intent to induce Her Majesty in right of Canada or of a province to commit or cause to be committed any act or omission;
- (e) a person taken hostage by the act or omission is a Canadian citizen; or
- (f) the person who commits the act or omission is, after the commission thereof, present in Canada.

(3.2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, where

- (a) a person, outside Canada, receives, has in his possession, uses, transfers the possession of, sends or delivers to any person, transports, alters, disposes of, disperses or abandons nuclear material and thereby
  - (i) causes or is likely to cause the death of, or serious bodily harm to, any person, or
  - (ii) causes or is likely to cause serious damage to, or destruction of, property, and
- (b) the act or omission described in paragraph (a) would, if committed in Canada, be an offence against this Act, that person shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada if paragraph (3.5)(a), (b) or (c) applies in respect of the act or omission.

(3.3) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who, outside Canada, commits an act or omission that if committed in Canada would constitute

- (a) a conspiracy or an attempt to commit,
- (b) being an accessory after the fact in relation to, or
- (c) counselling in relation to, an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of subsection (3.2) shall be deemed to commit the act or omission in Canada if paragraph (3.5)(a), (b) or (c) applies in respect of the act or omission.

(3.4) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who, outside Canada, commits an act or omission that if committed in Canada would constitute an offence against, a conspiracy or an attempt to commit or being an accessory after the fact in relation to an offence against, or any counselling in relation to an offence against,

- (a) section 334, 341, 344 or 380 or paragraph 362(1)(a) in relation to nuclear material,
  - (b) section 346 in respect of a threat to commit an offence against section 334 or 344 in relation to nuclear material,
  - (c) section 423 in relation to a demand for nuclear material, or
  - (d) paragraph 264.1(1)(a) or (b) in respect of a threat to use nuclear material
- shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada if paragraph (3.5)(a), (b) or (c) applies in respect of the act or omission.

(3.5) For the purposes of subsections (3.2) to (3.4), a person shall be deemed to commit an act or omission in Canada if

- (a) the act or omission is committed on a ship that is registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament;
- (b) the act or omission is committed on an aircraft
  - (i) registered in Canada under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act, or
  - (ii) leased without crew and operated by a person who is qualified under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act to be registered as owner of an aircraft in Canada under those regulations; or
- (c) the person who commits the act or omission is a Canadian citizen or is, after the act or omission has been committed, present in Canada.

(3.6) For the purposes of this section, “nuclear material” means

- (a) plutonium, except plutonium with an isotopic concentration of plutonium-238 exceeding eighty per cent,
  - (b) uranium-233,
  - (c) uranium containing uranium-233 or uranium-235 or both in such an amount that the abundance ratio of the sum of those isotopes to the isotope uranium-238 is greater than 0.72 per cent,
  - (d) uranium with an isotopic concentration equal to that occurring in nature, and
  - (e) any substance containing anything described in paragraphs (a) to (d),
- but does not include uranium in the form of ore or ore-residue.

(3.7) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every one who, outside Canada, commits an act or omission that, if committed in Canada, would constitute an offence against, a conspiracy or an attempt to commit an offence against, being an accessory after the fact in relation to an offence against, or any counselling in relation to an offence against, section 269.1 shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada if

- (a) the act or omission is committed on a ship that is registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament;
- (b) the act or omission is committed on an aircraft
  - (i) registered in Canada under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act, or
  - (ii) leased without crew and operated by a person who is qualified under regulations made under the Aeronautics Act to be registered as owner of an aircraft in Canada under those regulations;
- (c) the person who commits the act or omission is a Canadian citizen;
- (d) the complainant is a Canadian citizen; or
- (e) the person who commits the act or omission is, after the commission thereof, present in Canada.

(3.71) Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, every person who, either before or after the coming into force of this subsection, commits an act or omission outside Canada that constitutes a war crime or a crime against humanity and that, if committed in Canada, would constitute an offence against the laws of Canada in force at the time of the act or omission shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada at that time if,

- (a) at the time of the act or omission,
  - (i) that person is a Canadian citizen or is employed by Canada in a civilian or military capacity,
  - (ii) that person is a citizen of, or is employed in a civilian or military capacity by, a state that is engaged in an armed conflict against Canada, or
  - (iii) the victim of the act or omission is a Canadian citizen or a citizen of a state that is allied with Canada in an armed conflict; or
- (b) at the time of the act or omission, Canada could, in conformity with international law, exercise jurisdiction over the person with respect to the act or omission on the basis of the person's presence in Canada and, subsequent to the time of the act or omission, the person is present in Canada.

(3.72) Any proceedings with respect to an act or omission referred to in subsection (3.71) shall be conducted in accordance with the laws of evidence and procedure in force at the time of the proceedings.

(3.73) In any proceedings with respect to an act or omission referred to in subsection (3.71), notwithstanding that the act or omission is an offence under the laws of Canada in force at the time of the act or omission, the accused may, subject to subsection 607(6), rely on any justification, excuse or defence available under the laws of Canada or under international law at that time or at the time of the proceedings.

(3.74) Notwithstanding subsection (3.73) and section 15, a person may be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission referred to in subsection (3.71) even if the act or omission is committed in obedience to or in conformity with the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission.

(3.75) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no proceedings may be commenced with respect to an act or omission referred to in subsection (3.71) without the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General of Canada, and such proceedings may only be conducted by the Attorney General of Canada or counsel acting on his behalf.

(3.76) For the purposes of this section, "conventional international law" means

- (a) any convention, treaty or other international agreement that is in force and to which Canada is a party, or
- (b) any convention, treaty or other international agreement that is in force and the provisions of which Canada has agreed to accept and apply in an armed conflict in which it is involved;

"crime against humanity" means murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, persecution or any other inhumane act or omission that is committed against any civilian population or any identifiable group of persons, whether or not it constitutes a contravention of the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission, and that, at that time and in that place, constitutes a contravention of customary international law or conventional international law or is criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

"war crime" means an act or omission that is committed during an international armed conflict, whether or not it constitutes a contravention of the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission, and that, at that time and in that place, constitutes a contravention of the customary international law or conventional international law applicable in international armed conflicts.

(3.77) In the definitions “crime against humanity” and “war crime” in subsection (3.76), “act or omission” includes, for greater certainty, attempting or conspiring to commit, counselling any person to commit, aiding or abetting any person in the commission of, or being an accessory after the fact in relation to, an act or omission.

(4) Every one who, while employed as an employee within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act in a place outside Canada, commits an act or omission in that place that is an offence under the laws of that place and that, if committed in Canada, would be an offence punishable by indictment shall be deemed to have committed that act or omission in Canada.

(5) Where a person is alleged to have committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of this section, proceedings in respect of that offence may, whether or not that person is in Canada, be commenced in any territorial division in Canada and the accused may be tried and punished in respect of that offence in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that territorial division.

(5.1) For greater certainty, the provisions of this Act relating to

- (a) requirements that an accused appear at and be present during proceedings, and
- (b) the exceptions to those requirements, apply to proceedings commenced in any territorial division pursuant to subsection (5).

(6) Where a person is alleged to have committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of this section and that person has been tried and dealt with outside Canada in respect of the offence in such a manner that, if that person had been tried and dealt with in Canada, he would be able to plead autrefois acquit, autrefois convict or pardon, that person shall be deemed to have been so tried and dealt with in Canada.

(7) No proceedings shall be instituted under this section without the consent of the Attorney General of Canada if the accused is not a Canadian citizen.

(8) For the purposes of this section, of the definition “peace officer” in section 2 and of sections 76 and 77, “flight” means the act of flying or moving through the air and an aircraft shall be deemed to be in flight from the time when all external doors are closed following embarkation until the later of

- (a) the time at which any such door is opened for the purpose of disembarkation, and
- (b) where the aircraft makes a forced landing in circumstances in which the owner or operator thereof or a person acting on behalf of either of them is not in control of the aircraft, the time at which control of the aircraft is restored to the owner or operator thereof or a person acting on behalf of either of them.

(9) For the purposes of this section and section 77, an aircraft shall be deemed to be in service from the time when pre-flight preparation of the aircraft by ground personnel or the crew thereof begins for a specific flight until

- (a) the flight is cancelled before the aircraft is in flight,
- (b) twenty-four hours after the aircraft, having commenced the flight, lands, or
- (c) the aircraft, having commenced the flight, ceases to be in flight, whichever is the latest.

(10) If in any proceedings under this Act a question arises as to whether any person is a person who is entitled, pursuant to international law, to special protection from any attack on his person, freedom or dignity, a certificate purporting to have been issued by or under the authority of the Minister of Foreign Affairs stating any fact relevant to that question is admissible in evidence in those proceedings without proof of the signature or authority of the person appearing to have signed it and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the fact so stated.

(11) A certificate purporting to have been issued by or under the authority of the Minister of Foreign Affairs stating

- (a) that at a certain time any state was engaged in an armed conflict against Canada or was allied with Canada in an armed conflict,
- (b) that at a certain time any convention, treaty or other international agreement was or was not in force and that Canada was or was not a party thereto, or
- (c) that Canada agreed or did not agree to accept and apply the provisions of any convention, treaty or other international agreement in an armed conflict in which Canada was involved, is admissible in evidence in any proceedings without proof of the signature or authority of the person appearing to have issued it, and is proof of the facts so stated. R.S., c. NOTE: Subsection (11) amended 1995, c. 5, s. 25(1)(g) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the expression "Secretary of State for External Affairs" with the expression "Minister of Foreign Affairs".

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section deals with some, but not all, of the circumstances where offences may be tried in Canada although the act may have been committed outside Canada. Thus, see note of related sections under s. 6, supra. As to other terms referred to in this section, see the following s. 2, definition of "internationally protected person"; Citizenship Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-29, definition of Canadian citizen; s. 465, definition and punishment of conspiracy; s. 24, definition of attempt; s. 463, punishment for attempt; s. 23, definition of accessory after fact; s. 463, punishment of accessory after fact; s. 22, definition of counselling; s. 464, punishment of counselling; s. 21, parties generally; s. 2, definition of "territorial divisions"; Part XVI, commencement of proceedings and compelling appearance; ss. 607 to 610, autrefois pleas, especially limitation on plea of autrefois in s. 607(6).

SYNOPSIS

This section extends Canadian criminal law jurisdiction to cover a number of offences which often have international law implications such as air piracy, offences against diplomats, protection of nuclear material, torture, war crimes and crimes against humanity. A number of the offences referred to in this section, such as torture (s. 269.1) or crimes against internationally protected persons (s. 431), were created to fulfil Canada's obligations under international treaties aimed at preventing and suppressing certain types of offences.

Section 7 permits such offences to be tried in Canada as if the offence had occurred here. The bulk of the section contains definitions and deeming provisions to facilitate the trial within Canada of these offences when they have occurred largely or entirely outside Canada. Section 7(4) extends Canadian jurisdiction to permit the trial in Canada of offences committed outside Canada by public service employees, while so employed, as long as the conduct would be an indictable offence if it had occurred here.

To preserve defences otherwise available if the accused had been tried elsewhere, s. 7(6) makes the special pleas of autrefois acquit, convict and pardon applicable. This means that, if an accused had previously been tried and acquitted, convicted or pardoned elsewhere in connection with the same conduct which led to the Canadian prosecution, the accused could rely on the special plea as if the prior trial had been in Canada.

Section 7(7) prevents the institution of proceedings under this section against non-citizens without the consent of the federal Attorney General.

ANNOTATIONS

War crimes and crimes against humanity / Subsec. (3.71) – The definition of war crimes and crimes against humanity is not so vague as to violate s. 7 of the Charter. While the effect of these provisions of the Criminal Code is to create two new offences, namely crimes against humanity and war crimes, retroactive application of these provisions does not violate s. 7 or s. 11(g) of the Charter. These laws are retroactive only in the sense that individual criminal responsibility is established for acts which, at the time, the law provided only collective responsibility. The fact that the provisions apply only to crimes committed outside Canada does not violate either s. 7 or s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The apparent difference in treatment is not based on a personal characteristic but on the location of the crime: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.R. (4th) 265.

A Canadian court has jurisdiction to try individuals living in Canada for crimes allegedly committed on foreign soil only where certain requirements are made out, the most important of these being that the alleged crime constitutes a war crime or a crime against humanity. The stigma attaching to persons who have committed crimes against humanity or war crimes is overwhelming and, before a person may be convicted of such crime, elements in addition to the underlying offence such as manslaughter or unlawful confinement must be proved. With respect to crimes against humanity, the additional element is that the inhumane acts were based on discrimination against or the persecution of an identifiable group of people. With respect to war crimes, the additional element is that the action constitutes a violation of the rules of conflict. These elements must be established, both in order for a Canadian court to have the jurisdiction to try the accused and in order to convict the accused of the offence. These issues must be left to the jury to determine: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.R. (4th) 265.

It is not sufficient that the Crown merely prove the mens rea for the underlying offence such as manslaughter or unlawful confinement. The requisite mental element of a war crime or a crime against humanity must be based on a subjective test. While it is not necessary to prove that, for example, the accused knew that his actions were inhumane, the accused must be aware of the facts or circumstances which would bring the acts within the definition of a crime against humanity or a war crime as the case may be. Alternatively, the mens rea requirement would be met if it were established that the accused was wilfully blind to the facts or circumstances that would bring his actions within the provisions of these offences. Proof that the accused committed a war crime or a crime against humanity is an integral and essential aspect of the offence. It is not sufficient simply to prove that the offence committed in Canada would constitute robbery, forcible confinement or manslaughter. An added element of inhumanity must be demonstrated to warrant a conviction: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.R. (4th) 265.

The Crown must not only prove the elements of the substantive offences allegedly committed by the accused under the Criminal Code in force at the time the acts were committed, but knowledge of the circumstances or facts which bring the act within the definition of a war crime or crime against humanity. This mental element does not, however, depend on how the accused personally would have characterised his acts, nor on his personal moral code or perception of the international law: R. v. Finta, supra.

On a prosecution for war crimes and crimes against humanity alleged to have occurred in Europe during the Second World War, it was open to the trial judge to admit hearsay evidence, in favour of the accused, consisting of testimony given at a judicial proceeding when the accused was tried in Europe in absentia for war crimes. The declarant was deceased and the evidence exhibited sufficient indicia or reliability to justify its admission in favour of the accused: R. v. Finta, supra.

The 1907 Hague Convention, on the laws and customs of war on land, prohibited the use of prisoners of war and nationals of the hostile party from being compelled to take part in labour having connection with the operations of the war or in taking part in military operations against their own country. Thus, using civilian prisoners from allied countries to take an active part in the production of the V-2 rocket, whose purpose and eventual use was to cause death and destruction among the civilian populations of the allied countries during World War II, fell within the prohibition in the Hague Convention. Such actions also were contrary to customary international law. That customary international law, as set out in the Charter of the International Military Tribunal, established following the War and as affirmed by the United Nations in 1946, recognized as war crimes the ill treatment or deportation to slave labour of civilian population and the ill treatment of prisoners of war as crimes against humanity, the enslavement, deporation and other inhumane acts against civilian populations: Rudolph v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration) (1992), 73 C.C.C. (3d) 442, 91 D.L.R. (4th) 686, 14 C.R. (4th) 169 (Fed. C.A.).

Subsec. (3.74) – The peace officer defence under s. 25(2) and the defence of obedience to superior orders are distinct from the defence of obedience to the law in force at that time and place. The defence of compliance with the laws of the country where the alleged offence took place will be available if the laws of that country at the time of the offences are held to be valid. Even if the laws are invalid, it may still be open to the members of the military or police to rely on the defence of obedience to superior orders or the peace officer defence. Those defences are not available where the orders in question were manifestly unlawful and where the accused had no moral choice as to whether to follow the order. An order from a superior is manifestly unlawful where it offends the conscience of any reasonable, right thinking person, being an order which is obviously and flagrantly wrong. Even if it could be established that the order was manifestly illegal and that the subordinate was aware of the illegality, the person may be compelled to obey either because of natural causes placing the individual in a condition of danger or because of pressure which is brought to bear on him by another person. The threat however must be so imminent, real, and inevitable as to deprive the subordinate of any real moral choice. In any event, this subsection gives the court a discretion to deny a defence of reliance on laws in force at the time and in the place of commission of the offence: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.R. (4th) 265.

The war crimes and crimes against humanity provisions of the Criminal Code do not violate the Charter. Removal of the defence of obedience to de facto law by s. 7(3.74) does not violate the principles of fundamental justice under s. 7 of the Charter. Section 7(3.74) is permissive rather than mandatory and there may well be situations where the law is not manifestly unlawful, and as a consequence the accused may be able to argue mistaken belief in the validity of the law successfully. Removal of a defence when to permit the defence would be inconsistent with the offence proscribed does not violate s. 7. It would be illogical and senseless to permit an accused to rely on the laws of a sovereign state which violate international law by legislating the commission of crimes against humanity on the grounds of the laws themselves justified criminal conduct: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.R. (4th) 265.

APPLICATION TO TERRITORIES / Application of criminal law of England / Common law principles continued.

- 8. (1) The provisions of this Act apply throughout Canada except
- (a) in the Yukon Territory, in so far as they are inconsistent with the Yukon Act; and
  - (b) in the Northwest Territories, in so far as they are inconsistent with the Northwest Territories Act.

NOTE: Subsec. (1) amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by striking out the word “and” at the end of para. (a), by adding the word “and” at the end of para. (b) and by enacting para. (c). The text of para. (c), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

(c) in Nunavut, in so far as they are inconsistent with the Nunavut Act.

(2) The criminal law of England that was in force in a province immediately before April 1, 1955 continues in force in the province except as altered, varied, modified or affected by this Act or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada.

(3) Every rule and principle of the common law that renders any circumstance a justification or excuse for an act or a defence to a charge continues in force and applies in respect of proceedings for an offence under this Act or any other Act of Parliament except in so far as they are altered by or are inconsistent with this Act or any other Act of Parliament. R.S., c. C-34, s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Subsec. (1) – Definition of “Attorney General” for the Territories is the Attorney General of Canada pursuant to s. 2.

Subsecs. (2), (3) – The combined effect of this section and s. 9 is to abolish criminal liability, except as provided in a Canadian statute. The only common law crime which has been preserved is contempt of court. On the other hand, this section preserves any common law defence, except as it may be inconsistent with a statutory provision. The purpose of preserving the criminal law of England was to provide for gaps in procedure or rules of evidence not provided for in the Criminal Code. However, it should be noted that it is the criminal law of England which was in force in the province in 1955 and this varies somewhat between provinces because of the different dates of reception of the law of England. [See 1955 Martin’s at p. 34.] As far as procedure, this can have little practical effect since the Criminal Code, to a large extent, codifies the procedure and renders obsolete the criminal procedure in England. On the other hand, very recently it was held in R. v. Jacobson, noted under s. 672, infra, that a trial judge had jurisdiction to exercise the common law power to arrest judgment where it was discovered after conviction, but prior to sentence, that the accused had been convicted of an offence unknown to law. As regards the rules of evidence, these are largely a creature of common law which is declared by the various courts in Canada from time to time. The most important effect of this section is to preserve the common law defences and excuses. These, of course, are not tied to any date and will continue to evolve with the common law. Thus, the Supreme Court of Canada has recognized a common law “defence” of entrapment although, as noted below, the House of Lords has clearly rejected such a defence.

Many defences and excuses of general application have been at least partially codified as follows: s. 15, obedience to de facto law; s. 16, insanity; ss. 17, 18, compulsion by threats; s. 19, ignorance of the law is no excuse; s. 25, use of force in administration or enforcement of law; s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain offences; s. 28, execution of warrant; ss. 30, 31, detention or arrest for breach of peace; s. 32, use of force to suppress riot; ss. 34, 35, 37, self-defence; s. 37, use of force to defend person under accused’s protection; s. 38 to 42, defence of property; s. 43, correction of child or pupil; s. 44, use of force by ship’s master; s. 45, reasonable surgical operation.

As to the so-called Kienapple defence, see notes under ss. 12 and 613, infra. As to double jeopardy, including res judicata and issue estoppel, see notes under s. 613, infra. The pleas of autrefois are dealt with in ss. 607 to 610. As to abuse of process, see notes under s. 579. As to mistake of fact and mistake of law, see notes under s. 19, infra.

SYNOPSIS

This section explains where within Canada the Criminal Code applies and its relationship to the Common Law. Section 8(1) makes the Criminal Code applicable throughout Canada except that, in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, it has no effect if it is inconsistent with the Acts creating those jurisdictions.

Section 8(2) permits the English criminal law which was in force before the major 1953-54 Criminal Code revision came into force to continue, except as changed by the Criminal Code or other federal legislation.

The key aspect of this section is s. 8(3) which retains all common law defences, excuses and justifications, except as altered by or to the extent that they are inconsistent with the Criminal Code or other federal enactments. It is under this provision that defences such as necessity, due diligence, intoxication, mistake of fact and entrapment have remained an uncoded part of our criminal law. Recently, s. 7 of the Charter has also been used to interpret the scope of these defences.

ANNOTATIONS

Necessity defence – The common law defence of necessity is preserved by s. 8(3): R. v. Morgentaler (1975), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 449, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 616.

In R. v. Perka (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 385, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 232, 42 C.R. (3d) 113 (5:0) Dickson J., for the majority, set out the elements of the necessity defence as follows:

- (1) necessity is an excuse rather than a justification and operates by virtue of this subsection;
- (2) the criterion is the moral involuntariness of the wrongful action;
- (3) this involuntariness is measured on the basis of society's expectation of appropriate and normal resistance to pressure;
- (4) negligence or involvement in criminal or immoral activity does not disentitle the actor to the excuse of necessity;
- (5) actions or circumstances which indicate that the wrongful deed was not truly involuntary do disentitle;
- (6) the existence of a reasonable legal alternative similarly disentitles; to be involuntary the act must be inevitable, unavoidable and afford no reasonable opportunity for an alternative course of action that does not involve a breach of the law;
- (7) the defence only applies in circumstances of imminent risk where the action was taken to avoid a direct and immediate peril;
- (8) the defence cannot excuse the infliction of a greater harm so as to allow the actor to avert a lesser evil; and
- (9) where the accused places before the court sufficient evidence to raise the issue, the onus is on the Crown to meet it beyond a reasonable doubt.

The defence of necessity was not made out to a charge of "over 80" contrary to s. 253 where the accused, although believing an attacker was pursuing her, was not in immediate danger and had other options available besides getting into her car and driving away. Her act of driving while intoxicated was not realistically unavoidable: R. v. Berriman (1987), 62 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 239, 45 M.V.R. 165 (Nfld. C.A.).

The common law defence of necessity was not available to accused charged with contempt of court as result of their violation of a court order against interfering with the operation of an abortion services clinic. The defence of necessity is only available to those whose wrongful acts are committed under pressure which no reasonable person could withstand. The accused's genuine belief that abortion is immoral could not change the fact that it could not be said that no reasonable person could withstand the pressure to defy the court order: R. v. Bridges (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 535, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 126 (B.C.S.C.), affd (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 455, 78 D.L.R. (4th) 529 (B.C.C.A.).

Entrapment defence – In R. v. Mack (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 513, 67 C.R. (3d) 1, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 903 (7:0) the court laid down both the elements of the entrapment defence and the procedure to be followed. The important holdings may be summarized as follows:

1. Entrapment arises either when the authorities provide an opportunity to persons to commit an offence without reasonable suspicion or acting mala fides for dubious motives unrelated to the investigation and repression of crime or, having a reasonable suspicion or acting in the course of a bona fide inquiry, they go beyond providing an opportunity and induce the commission of an offence;
2. As regards the latter form of entrapment the court should consider whether an average person in the position of the accused would have been induced to commit the offence;

3. As far as possible an objective assessment is to be made of the conduct of the police and their agents;
4. The pre-disposition of the accused is relevant only in considering whether the authorities were justified in providing the accused an opportunity to commit the offence;
5. In considering whether the police have used means which go further than providing an opportunity the court will consider a number of factors such as the following:
  - (a) the type of crime being investigated and the availability of other investigative techniques;
  - (b) whether an average person with both the strengths and weaknesses in the position of the accused would be induced into the commission of a crime;
  - (c) the persistence and number of attempts made by the police;
  - (d) the type of inducement used by the police including deceit, fraud, trickery or reward;
  - (e) the timing of the police conduct;
  - (f) whether the police conduct involved an exploitation of human characteristics such as friendship;
  - (g) whether the police appear to have exploited a particular vulnerability of a person such as mental handicap or substance addiction;
  - (h) the proportionality between the police involvement as compared to the accused;
  - (i) the existence of any threats implied or expressed made to the accused by the police or their agents; and
  - (j) whether the police conduct is directed at undermining other constitutional values;
6. The entrapment issue is to be tried by the judge after the Crown has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty;
7. In a jury case the jury determines guilt or innocence and then the judge determines the entrapment issue;
8. The burden of proof of entrapment is on the accused on a balance of probabilities and while he need not show that the police conduct shocks the community the defence will only be made out in the clearest of cases;
9. Where the defence is made out the appropriate remedy is a stay of proceedings, not an acquittal.

In R. v. Barnes (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1991] 2 W.W.R. 673, 3 C.R. (4th) 1 (S.C.C.) (8:1) the court considered the defence of entrapment based on the fact that the officer was not engaged in a bona fide inquiry, but rather so-called “random virtue testing”. While the basic rule is that the police may only present the opportunity to commit a particular crime to an individual who arouses a suspicion of involvement in that crime, there is an exception when the police undertake a bona fide investigation directed in an area where it is reasonably suspected that criminal activity is occurring. When such location is defined with sufficient precision, the police may present any person associated with the area with the opportunity to commit the particular offence. Random virtue testing only arises when an officer presents a person with the opportunity to commit an offence without a reasonable suspicion that the person is already engaged in a particular activity or that the physical location with which the person is associated is a place where the particular criminal activity is likely occurring. In this case, the court approved an investigation which included offering to persons anywhere within a six-block pedestrian mall the opportunity to sell drugs to an undercover officer. The mall as a whole was responsible for a substantial number of the drug offences in the city.

The defence of entrapment is available to an accused who had no contact with the undercover officer, if the officer was at the time engaged in impermissible random virtue testing: R. v. Kenyon (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 538 (B.C.C.A.).

Due diligence defence – In R. v. Sault Ste. Marie (City) (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 3 C.R. (3d) 30, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299 (9:0), the Court in considering provincial pollution legislation held that there are three categories of offences created by statute distinguished as follows: (1) full mens rea offences requiring proof by the prosecution of a positive state of mind such as intent, knowledge or recklessness; (2) strict liability offences in which there is no necessity for the prosecution to prove mens rea but which leave it open to the accused to avoid liability by proving that he took all reasonable care; and (3) offences of absolute liability where it is not open to the accused to exculpate himself by showing that he was free of fault. Offences which are criminal in the true sense fall in the first category. “Public welfare offences” are prima facie in the second category unless the statute includes the words such as “wilfully” evidencing an intent that the offence be placed in the first category. Offences in the third category would be those in respect of which the Legislature has made it clear that guilt would follow proof merely of the proscribed act.

Shifting the burden to the defendant, charged with a regulatory offence, to prove on a balance of probabilities that he acted with due diligence is a reasonable limit on the guarantee to the presumption of innocence: R. v. Wholesale Travel Group Inc. (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 84 D.L.R. (4th) 161, 4 O.R. (3d) 799n (S.C.C.).

Intoxication defence – The rules in D.P.P. v. Beard (1920), 14 Cr. App. R. 159 (H.L.) violate ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter because they limit the defence of intoxication to the capacity of an accused to form the specific intent. Before a trial judge charges a jury on the issue of intoxication, the judge must be satisfied that the effect of the intoxication was such that its effect might have impaired the accused’s foresight of consequences sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt. Once this threshold test is met, the judge must make clear to the jury that the issue is whether the Crown has satisfied them beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused had the requisite intent. In most circumstances, a one-step charge which omits any reference to “capacity” or “capability” and focuses the jury on the question of “intent in fact” is appropriate. Consequently, the jury must consider whether the accused possessed the requisite specific intent having regard to the evidence of intoxication, along with all of the other evidence in the case. In certain cases, however, in light of the facts of the case and/or the admission of expert evidence, a two-step charge may be appropriate. In this case, the jury is charged both with regard to the capacity to form the requisite intent and with regard to the need to determine in all of the circumstances whether the requisite intent was in fact formed by the accused. In these circumstances, the jury might be instructed that their overall duty is to determine whether or not the accused possessed the requisite intent for the crime. If, on the basis of the expert evidence, the jury is left with a reasonable doubt as to whether, as a result of the consumption of the alcohol, the accused had the capacity to form the requisite intent then that ends the inquiry and the accused must be acquitted of the offence and consideration must then be given to any included lesser offences. If the jury is not left with a reasonable doubt as a result of the expert evidence as to the capacity to form the intent, then they must consider and take into account all the surrounding circumstances and the evidence pertaining to those circumstances in determining whether or not the accused possessed the requisite intent for the offence. Furthermore, the presumption that a person intends the natural consequences of their act refers only to a common-sense and logical inference that the jury can but is not compelled to make. Where there is some evidence of intoxication, the trial judge must link the instructions on intoxication with the instruction on the common-sense inference so that the jury is specifically instructed that evidence of intoxication can rebut the inference: R. v. Robinson (unreported, March 21, 1996, S.C.C.) [096/085/063-70 pp.]. See also R. v. McMaster (unreported, March 21, 1996, S.C.C.) [096/085/062-26 pp.].

Where the accused not only understood the nature and quality of his acts and knew that they were wrong but had formed the specific intent required for the offence, the fact that, by reason of consumption of drugs, he had entered a psychotic state which had caused a loss of self-control or an irresistible impulse did not constitute a defence of self-induced intoxication: R. v. Courville (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 118 (Ont. C.A.), affd 19 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 847, 46 C.R. (3d) 90 (7:0).

Extreme drunkenness inducing a state akin to insanity or automatism is a defence to a general intent offence such as sexual assault. However, the burden is on the accused to prove the defence on a balance of probabilities and the accused's testimony would have to be supported by expert evidence: R. v. Daviault, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 63, 93 C.C.C. (3d) 21, 33 C.R. (4th) 165.

Section 7 of the Charter does not require that the intoxication defence be available for all offences and, thus, it was open to Parliament to create an offence such as impaired care or control as defined in s. 253 for which intoxication is no defence: R. v. Penno (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 344, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 865, 80 C.R. (3d) 97.

Alibi Defence – Where the accused fails to disclose the alibi defence to the Crown in advance of the trial, the trier of fact may draw an adverse inference when weighing the alibi evidence heard at trial. Improper disclosure can, however, only weaken alibi evidence, but cannot exclude the alibi. The alibi need not be disclosed at the time of arrest or at the first possible opportunity. It is sufficient if it was disclosed at a time and in a manner which would permit a meaningful investigation. Furthermore, there is no requirement that the alibi be disclosed by the accused himself: R. v. Cleghorn, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 175, 100 C.C.C. (3d) 393, 41 C.R. (4th) 282 (3:2).

An alibi which is disbelieved does not have any evidentiary value whereas an alibi which is proven to be false can be evidence of consciousness of guilt. If the evidence adduced by the Crown is capable of supporting the inference that an accused concocted a false alibi, an alibi notice professing an intention to advance that alibi at trial would be relevant in that it would tend to support the inference of consciousness of guilt. Before this inference is available, however, there must be evidence from which a reasonable jury could infer that the alibi was deliberately fabricated and that the accused was a party to that fabrication. Mere rejection of an alibi as untruthful or unreliable does not constitute affirmative evidence of guilt: R. v. Witter (unreported, February 6, 1996, Ont. C.A.) [096/043/004-23 pp.].

CRIMINAL OFFENCES TO BE UNDER LAW OF CANADA.

9. Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any other Act, no person shall be convicted or discharged under section 736

- (a) of an offence at common law,
  - (b) of an offence under an Act of the Parliament of England, or of Great Britain, or of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or
  - (c) of an offence under an Act or ordinance in force in any province, territory or place before that province, territory or place became a province of Canada,
- but nothing in this section affects the power, jurisdiction or authority that a court, judge, justice or provincial court judge had, immediately before April 1, 1955, to impose punishment for contempt of court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 8; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 6.

NOTE: Amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Rights of appeal from finding of contempt of court and from sentence are set out in s. 10. The notes under s. 10 deal with procedural issues relating to contempt of court.

As noted under s. 8, the only common law offence for which a person may now be convicted is the offence of criminal contempt of court. This is not to say that contempt of court is wholly a common law offence. Certain aspects of contempt of court have been codified as offences or the court's power to deal with the misconduct has been codified, thus see: ss. 119, 120, offences relating to bribery of judicial officers; s. 127, disobeying lawful order of court; ss. 131 to 137, perjury and related offences; s. 139, attempt to obstruct justice; s. 484, preserving order in court; s. 545, witness at preliminary inquiry refusing to be sworn or testify; s. 605(2), failing to comply with order respecting testing of exhibits; ss. 648 to 649, offences relating to juries; s. 708, witness failing to attend.

SYNOPSIS

This section prohibits prosecution for common law offences, offences under British law or the law in force in the provinces before they joined Canada. The only exception is the retention of the common law power of judges to punish for contempt of court.

The common law offence of contempt of court can be divided into two broad categories of civil and criminal contempt. The former lies essentially in disobeying the order of a court or a judgment in civil proceedings. However, as the case of Poje v. A.-G. B.C., [1953] 1 S.C.R. 516 illustrates, even disobedience of a civil injunction can amount to criminal contempt if the conduct of the accused in disobeying the order amounts to a public challenge to the court's authority. In general, criminal contempt can be described as conduct likely to obstruct the administration of justice or to bring discredit onto the administration of justice. As a common law crime, contempt of court suffers from lack of clarity of definition of procedure and of the elements of the offence. Criminal contempt can, however, be subdivided into two types, contempt in the face of the court [in facie], for example, disruption of the proceedings in the courtroom, failure of counsel to attend court as required, or refusal of a witness to be sworn or to answer questions, and contempt out of the face of the court [ex facie].

The most troublesome aspect of criminal contempt is contempt out of the face of the court. It involves essentially three different types of conduct: (1) breach of the sub judice rule, e.g., publication of material likely to interfere with the fair trial of the case; (2) obstruction of justice, e.g., interfering with a witness or a juror; and (3) scandalizing the court, i.e., criticism of a court or a judge. While the elements of these three types of contempt are not well-defined, it is suggested that case law supports the following propositions:

Breach of the sub judice rule – Until recently, this has been considered a strict liability offence if not virtually an absolute liability offence, the offence being described as requiring proof only that the words were calculated to interfere with the course of justice in the sense that they had that tendency. It was not necessary to find either that the words were intended to have that effect or that they did in fact interfere with the course of justice. Moreover, liability has been attributed to persons such as the editor or publisher on a vicarious basis, if they were responsible for the publication of the newspaper, for example, even if they had no prior knowledge of the contemptuous remarks. It is not sufficient, however, that there be a mere possibility of interference with the due administration of justice, the conduct must present a real risk to the due administration of justice. [A somewhat lesser standard adopted by the House of Lords in the Times Newspapers case, [1974] A.C. 273 probably does not represent the law in Canada.] It is suggested that, in light of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in particular the fundamental justice guarantee in s. 7 as interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada in Reference re Section 94(2) of the Motor Vehicle Act (B.C.), [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486, it can no longer be confidently stated that liability can be imposed on a vicarious basis or that no intent to interfere with the administration of justice is required. At least the accused should probably be able to defend the case by demonstrating that he was without fault, perhaps because he exercised due diligence or was operating under an honest (and perhaps reasonable) mistake of fact. Finally, it would seem that a contempt can be made out even if there was no real risk of interference in the due administration of justice by the particular publication, if the accused intended to produce such prejudice. Perhaps such conduct is more accurately described as an attempt but the cases do not make any such distinction.

Obstruction of justice – The elements of this offence are similar to those for breach of the sub judice rule, and, in fact, the former may be considered simply a special example of this form of contempt which has been described as anything done that is calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice or the lawful process of the courts. Again “calculated” does not mean intended but merely “fixed, suited, apt”. In B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General) (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 289 (S.C.C.) Chief Justice Dickson adopted the following list of acts which could fall into this category: victimizing jurors, witnesses and other persons; obstructing person officially connected with court or its process; interference with person under the special protective jurisdiction of the court; breach of duty by persons officially connected with the court or its process; forging; altering or abusing the process of the court; divulging the confidences of the jury-room; preventing access by the public to courts of law, service of process in the precinct of the court and disclosing the identity of witnesses. Again, the Charter may have implications for the mens rea of the offence, bearing in mind, however, that it could be argued that some limits on Charter guarantees may be upheld under s. 1 because of the close connection of this form of contempt to the fundamental principle of the rule of law.

Scandalizing the court – This is the one form of contempt which does not bear a clear, direct relationship to the administration of justice. It has been defined as any act done or writing published, calculated to bring a court into contempt or lower its authority. Thus, conduct which could have no possible effect on any particular case may nevertheless come within this definition. The difficulty with this form of contempt has always been to distinguish between contemptuous comment and fair criticism of the courts and the judiciary. The basis for this form of contempt lies in the assumption that public confidence in the administration of justice would be undermined by comments that tend to lower the authority of the court. Perhaps the clearest examples of this form of contempt would be comments attributing improper motives to a court or allegations of corruption, partiality and attempts to pervert the course of justice by a judge. It is equally clear that reasonable argument or expostulation offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good is not contempt. [Re Duncan, [1958] S.C.R. 41]. The impact of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been felt in relation to this form of contempt, a majority of the Ontario Court of Appeal holding in R. v. Kopyto, infra that, as presently framed, contempt by scandalizing the court is not a reasonable limit on the guarantee to freedom of expression. The defect in the common law definition appeared to lie in the fact that there was no requirement of proof of any real danger, present or future, to the fair and effective administration of justice. Interestingly, the dissenting members of the court would be prepared to uphold the constitutionality of this form of contempt because, in their view, it required proof of an intent to bring the administration of justice into disrepute and truth would be a defence. Further, the actus reus of the offence requires proof that, by reason of the statement, there was a serious risk that the administration of justice would be interfered with.

ANNOTATIONS

Grounds for finding contempt of court / Violation of court orders – An unincorporated union is capable of being found in criminal contempt of court for violation of a court order. The fact that criminal contempt is not codified does not result in a violation of ss. 7 or 11(a) or (g) of the Charter. To establish criminal contempt, the Crown must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused defied or disobeyed a court order in a public way (the actus reus), with intent, knowledge or recklessness as to the fact that the public disobedience will tend to depreciate the authority of the court (the mens rea). The necessary mens rea may however be inferred from the circumstances and since an open and public defiance of a court order will tend to depreciate the authority of the court, when it is clear that the accused must have known her act of defiance would be public, it may be inferred that she was at least reckless as to whether the authority of the court would be brought into contempt. While publicity is required for the offence, a civil contempt is not converted to a criminal contempt merely because it attracts publicity, but rather because it constitutes a public act of defiance of the court in circumstances where the accused knew, intended or was reckless as to the fact that the act would publicly bring the court into contempt. While it would seem that a judge entertaining a motion for contempt of an order made by a judge of the court, as opposed to an inferior tribunal, would not have the power to go behind the order. The validity of the order is not an issue on the contempt hearing. Unless the order has been set aside for want of jurisdiction, the judge hearing the motion on criminal contempt must accept it as valid: U.N.A. v. Alberta (Attorney General) (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 225, 13 C.R. (4th) 1, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 901 (4:3).

The accused were properly found in contempt of court for their flagrant disobedience of an injunction. While the accused sought to argue that the injunction was overbroad and infringed their rights under the Charter, the injunction was valid until set aside and the accused had taken no steps to challenge the injunction: Everywoman's Health Centre Society (1988) v. Bridges (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 455, 78 D.L.R. (4th) 529 (B.C.C.A.). Also see: R. v. Toth (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 273 (B.C.C.A.).

The defence of necessity was not available to accused charged with violating a court injunction prohibiting obstruction of logging crews. The necessity defence cannot operate to excuse conduct which has been specifically enjoined. An application to the court, which could be heard on short notice, would have determined whether the circumstances were sufficient to engage the defence of necessity. In addition, the defence of necessity can never operate to avoid a peril that is lawfully authorized by the law. Similarly, s. 27 of the Criminal Code was not available. Section 27 does not contemplate the justification of force or other conduct which the court has already specifically enjoined: MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson (1994), 89 C.C.C. (3d) 217, 113 D.L.R. (4th) 368, 90 B.C.L.R. (2d) 24 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 23 C.R.R. (2d) 192n (Pulker app'n granted).

An allegation of contempt of court is criminal, or at least quasi-criminal, in character and therefore the elements of the offence must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Where the allegation is based on failure to comply with a court order, there must be proof of knowledge of the order alleged to have been breached. Service of a court order on the solicitor for a Minister of the Crown did not fix the Minister with actual knowledge in the absence of evidence from which that knowledge could be inferred as where there were circumstances which reveal a special reason for bringing the order to the Minister's attention. Further, the Minister could not be held liable for contempt of court on the basis of the doctrine of vicarious liability, delegation or the identification theory: Bhatnager v. Canada (Minister of Employment and Immigration) (1990), 71 D.L.R. (4th) 84, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 217, 111 N.R. 185 (9:0).

Interference with access to courts – Any action to prevent, impede or obstruct access to the courts runs counter to the rule of law and constitutes a criminal contempt of court: N.A.P.E. v. Newfoundland (Attorney-General) (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 186, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 204, 53 D.L.R. (4th) 39 (6:0); B.C.G.E.U. v. British Columbia (Attorney General) (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 214, 53 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (6:0).

Scandalizing the court – In determining contempt scandalizing a court or judge it is not the effect that the author intended his article to have but the effect the article itself was calculated to have: R. v. Murphy, [1969] 4 C.C.C. 147, 6 C.R.N.S. 353 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

It is prima facie legitimate to criticize a judge's conduct in a particular case or to criticize any particular decision given by the courts if done without casting any aspersions on the motives of a judge or court, and without abuse: R. v. Dalke (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 477, 21 C.R. (3d) 380 (B.C.S.C.).

It was held in R. v. Kopyto (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 61 C.R. (3d) 209 (C.A.) (3:2), that the offence of contempt of court by scandalizing the court, as presently understood, is unconstitutional by reason of the guarantee of freedom of expression in s. 2(b) of the Charter of Rights. It would seem, however, that if the offence were redefined to require proof that the accused's remarks created a real, significant, and present or imminent danger to the fair and effective administration of justice then the offence might be valid. The dissenting members of the court held that properly understood the offence did not violate s. 2(b) but that the Crown would have to prove an intention to bring the administration of justice into disrepute and that by reason of the statement made there was a serious risk that the administration of justice would be interfered with. As well, truth would be a defence.

It was held in R. v. Edmonton Sun Publishing Ltd. et al. (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 318, 16 Alta. L.R. (2d) 246 (Q.B.) that for the court to find that an editorial cartoon concerning a court case was a contempt of court it must be proved that it tended to obstruct or defeat the administration of justice or that it showed disrespect of the court process or that it tended to bring the court into disrespect.

Publicity – In Re Regina and Carocchia (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 175 (Que. C.A.), the publication of a police press release which was of such a nature as to influence the result of a non-jury criminal case was held to be an interference of the administration of justice and a contempt of court.

A broadcaster was properly found in contempt of court for broadcasting during the accused's trial details of other criminal conduct by the accused, even though in the end the same information was placed before the jury through evidence called during the defence. The issue in every case is whether there has been a real risk of prejudice to the course of justice, not simply to the accused. Thus, substantial interference with the trial process by causing undue delay and expense or by creating an appearance of substantial unfairness at any stage of the proceedings may result in a conviction for contempt, regardless of prejudice to the accused. Finally, it was also not improper for the trial judge to base the amount of the fine on the costs thrown away as a result of contempt: R. v. CHEK TV Ltd. (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 24 (B.C.C.A.).

The public's vital interest in knowing the facts as protected by freedom of expression, including freedom of the press in s. 2(b) of the Charter, will be assessed differently in the context of an accused who is in custody awaiting trial than it will be where a dangerous suspect is at large and public assistance may be required to apprehend the suspect. Publication of the criminal record of an accused who is not at large and who does not constitute a danger to the community is prima facie a contempt of court: Alberta (Attorney-General) v. Interwest Publications Ltd. (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 114, 73 D.L.R. (4th) 83, [1990] 5 W.W.R. 498 (Q.B.).

Although a contempt of court charge brought as a result of violation of the sub judice rule infringes a publisher's freedom of expression as guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter of Rights, the sub judice is a reasonable limit on freedom of expression, being required to ensure the fair trial of the accused. Contempt of court will lie only where there is proof of either a clear intent to influence the fair trial of an accused or where the publication presents a real risk that the article will prejudice the fair hearing of the accused, and the sub judice rule only delays publication until completion of the trial: R. v. Robinson-Blackmore Printing & Publishing Co. (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 366, 73 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 46 (Nfld. S.C.).

Publication of a summary of the evidence given on the preliminary issue of the accused's fitness to stand trial, in violation of the trial judge's order that it not be published was held to constitute contempt of court: R. v. Southam Press (Ontario) Ltd. et al. (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 205 (Ont. C.A.).

Counsel's failure to attend court – In R. v. Hill (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 60, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 621 (B.C.C.A.) affirming 25 C.C.C. (2d) 348, 62 D.L.R. (3d) 692 (Co. Ct.), it was held that conduct, in this case by a lawyer, which is calculated to delay, disrupt and bring the judicial process into contempt will constitute criminal contempt and it need not be further proved that the accused intended to disrupt, hinder or delay the course of justice.

In considering whether or not a lawyer is guilty of contempt the court must consider the apology tendered by the lawyer at the contempt hearing: R. v. Kopyto (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 85, 21 C.R. (3d) 276 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 38 N.R. 540n.

However, the lawyer's apology did not negative his contempt where his conduct in failing to appear at court showed a serious indifference to his obligation to the court and to his client and when he again failed to attend court on the following day as directed by the judge: R. v. Anders (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 138, 136 D.L.R. (3d) 316 (Ont. C.A.).

The actus reus of criminal contempt is conduct which seriously interferes with, or obstructs, the administration of justice or would cause a serious risk of that occurring. While the failure, of a lawyer who has undertaken to appear in court, to attend is capable of constituting contempt, the court should consider the consequences of failing to appear. Conduct that had little or no effect on the administration of justice could not support a conviction for contempt. The mens rea of contempt requires proof of deliberate or intentional conduct, or indifference akin to recklessness: R. v. Glasner (1994), 93 C.C.C. (3d) 226, 19 O.R. (3d) 739, 119 D.L.R. (4th) 113 (C.A.).

Before an absent lawyer may be found in contempt he must first be brought before the court and given the right to make full answer and defence which at a minimum requires that he be given notice that he is facing a charge of contempt of court: R. v. Pinx (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 65, 105 D.L.R. (3d) 143 (Man. C.A.).

While the deliberate failure of counsel who has undertaken to represent an accused to appear when the case is called, or even failure to attend in circumstances showing indifference, may constitute contempt of court, failure to attend due to mere inadvertence even if due to negligence, but falling short of indifference, does not necessarily constitute contempt of court: R. v. Jones (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 192 (Ont. C.A.).

Counsel withdrawing from case – In contempt proceedings against a lawyer a distinction must be drawn between the lawyer who deliberately frustrates the due carrying on of court proceedings by the wilful act of non-attendance, an act which may constitute contempt of court, and the act of a lawyer who impulsively reacts to an adverse ruling by the court by attempting to withdraw, which is at worst an error of judgment: R. v. Swartz (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 477, [1977] 2 W.W.R. 751 (Man. C.A.).

A trial judge has no right in law to order counsel to continue in the defence of an accused after counsel has advised that he has decided that he will no longer represent the accused. While the judge may urge counsel to reconsider and to try to reconcile any differences with his client, should counsel stand firm then he cannot properly be cited for contempt for refusing to comply with an order by the trial judge that he continue to act: Re Leask and Cronin (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 315, [1985] 3 W.W.R. 152 (B.C.S.C.).

Conduct of counsel in court – Language by a lawyer attributing dishonourable or disgraceful conduct to the judge trying a case and suggesting that the judge acted dishonestly, is capable of constituting contempt of court: R. v. Doz (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 434 (Alta. C.A.), rev'd on other grounds 38 C.C.C. (3d) 479, 55 Alta. L.R. (2d) 289 (S.C.C.).

There is a distinction between conduct by a barrister which though open to censure is merely discourteous and conduct which constitutes contempt of Court: R. v. Fox (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 330, 70 D.L.R. (3d) 577 (Ont. C.A.).

Mere discourtesy or use of uncomplimentary remarks to the court is not always to be taken as contempt. On the other hand where there has been a proper question put to counsel by the presiding judge the repeated refusal by counsel to answer the question will normally constitute contempt: R. v. Barker (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 322, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 202 (Alta. C.A.).

A charge of contempt of court, arising out of a lawyer's submissions in the course of a trial, requires proof of a serious, real imminent risk of obstruction of the administration of justice. It must be shown that he had a dishonest intention or acted in bad faith in that he intentionally discredited or attempted to discredit the administration of justice: R. v. Bertrand (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 397, 70 C.R. (3d) 362 (Que. S.C.).

Conduct of other persons in court – Words or actions directed at other persons besides the judge such as jurors, counsel or other officers of the court may also be regarded as contempt where such words or acts interfere or tend to interfere with the administration of justice. Thus, in R. v. Paul (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 6 C.R. (3d) 272 (Ont. C.A.), it was held (2:1) that the deliberately false allegation in open court by an unrepresented accused that the charges laid against him were the work of a “corrupt” Crown Attorney, constituted contempt of court. The decision of the Court of Appeal was affirmed 52 C.C.C. (2d) 331, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 169, 15 C.R. (3d) 219 (5:0) where it was held that the trial judge did not err in dealing with the contempt summarily rather than requiring the Crown Attorney to take the matter to the Attorney-General.

An accused's voluntary act in consuming a large quantity of alcohol shortly before his trial well-knowing the effect this would have on him and which would result in the court being unable to proceed with the trial constitutes contempt of court notwithstanding the accused did not intend to obstruct the course of justice: R. v. Perkins (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 369, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 763 (B.C.C.A.).

It was held by the majority in R. v. Flamand (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 366 (Que. C.A.) that remarks by an accused to the trial judge that he was not fit to try the case because the judge's son was a police officer and that he (the accused) no longer had confidence in the judge constituted contempt of court being deliberately calculated to bring the trial judge into contempt, lower his authority, cast discredit on the administration of justice and impede its normal course. Mayrand J.A. dissenting would have quashed the conviction on the basis that an expressed lack of confidence in a judge, if a genuinely held belief, even if not justified on a rational basis, does not constitute contempt of court. His Lordship also considered the summary manner in which the proceedings were conducted by the trial judge deprived the accused of an opportunity to present a full and complete defence. On further appeal (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 192n (S.C.C.) (7:0), the dissenting judgment of Mayrand J.A. was approved and the conviction quashed.

Abusive language by an accused attributing gross insensitivity to the trial judge could be viewed as calculated to lower his authority and thus capable of constituting contempt of court: R. v. Martin (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 248 (Ont. C.A.).

Conduct outside of court – Notwithstanding the accused's conduct may also have constituted the offence of attempting to obstruct justice contrary to s. 139 [R.S.C. 1985], the Crown may proceed by way of contempt of court: R. v. Vermette (1987), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 519, 57 C.R. (3d) 340, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 577 (4:0).

Refusal of witness to be sworn or answer questions – On an appeal from conviction for contempt of court in the face of the court based on a refusal to answer a question in a criminal case if it is not shown that the question was relevant then the conviction cannot stand. However, at the trial itself it is the judge not the witness who must decide whether or not the question is relevant and a witness who disagrees with the judge's ruling on relevancy nevertheless must abide by it or risk being cited for contempt. On the other hand where the witness objects to the question the trial judge ought to inquire into and determine its relevancy: R. v. Fields (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 53 C.R. (3d) 260, 56 O.R. (2d) 213 (C.A.).

APPEAL / Idem / Part XXI applies.

10. (1) Where a court, judge, justice or provincial court judge summarily convicts a person for a contempt of court committed in the face of the court and imposes punishment in respect thereof, that person may appeal

- (a) from the conviction; or
  - (b) against the punishment imposed.
- (2) Where a court or judge summarily convicts a person for a contempt of court not committed in the face of the court and punishment is imposed in respect thereof, that person may appeal
- (a) from the conviction; or
  - (b) against the punishment imposed.
- (3) An appeal under this section lies to the court of appeal of the province in which the proceedings take place, and, for the purposes of this section, the provisions of Part XXI apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require. R.S., c. C-34, s. 9; 1972, c. 13, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 9 preserves the common law power to punish for contempt and the notes under that section relate to the grounds of contempt of court. The notes under this section relate to procedural issues, including rights of appeal. Procedure on appeal and powers of the Court of Appeal, in appeals from summary contempt proceedings, is governed by Part XXI: procedure on appeal by indictment [notwithstanding the contempt finding was made in the course of a summary conviction proceeding]. This section would not apply to an accused convicted in summary conviction proceedings of a summary conviction offence such as the offence in s. 648 of publishing proceedings in the absence of the jury.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the right to have an appeal from a conviction for contempt of court heard in accordance with the procedure for appeals in cases which have proceeded by indictment, even if the conviction for contempt of court was summary. The appeal is to be heard by the provincial court of appeal, with such modifications to the procedure on appeals from convictions on indictable offences as may be necessary.

The forms of contempt of court are discussed in a comment under s. 9, supra. This comment is meant to draw attention to certain procedural problems. It is first necessary to distinguish between contempt in the face of the court [in facie], for example, disruption of the proceedings in the courtroom, failure of counsel to attend court as required, or refusal of a witness to be sworn or to answer questions; and contempt out of the face of the court [ex facie], such as interference with a witness, or publication of material calculated to interfere with the fair trial of an accused. The distinction is important because, while a superior court can punish both types of contempt, an inferior court can only punish contempts committed in the face of the court. The line between the two types of contempt can be exceedingly fine. Consider the failure of counsel to appear at a criminal trial as required. While the act of non-appearance is committed in the face of the court, the reasons why counsel failed to attend court may be, and usually would be, completely outside the personal knowledge of the presiding judge. Nevertheless, since the decision in McKeown v. The Queen, [1971] S.C.R. 446 there can be little doubt that this conduct constitutes contempt in facie and is punishable by the presiding judge.

A second problem concerns the procedure by which the contempt is initiated. For contempt in facie, it would seem that no particular form of notice is required and even verbal notice to a person disrupting the proceedings would be sufficient, provided the alleged contemnor is sufficiently advised of the act said to constitute contempt. On the other hand, the presiding judge can leave it to some other party such as the Attorney General to initiate proceedings through some more formal process. Where the contempt is out of the face of the court and thus triable only by the superior court, some form of written notice would ordinarily be required to secure the person's attendance. The usual notice is by way of originating notice of motion served upon the alleged contemnor and returnable in the superior court and is referred to as the summary procedure. However, it would also seem that a more formal process is available by preferring a direct indictment in the superior court. This latter form of process has fallen almost entirely into disuse, but the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Vermette, infra recognized that it was still available.

It seems clear that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies to the trial of the contempt charge whether ex facie or in facie and that, unless very unusual circumstances arise, the person must be given a reasonable opportunity to prepare a defence and to consult counsel. Further, it would seem that proof of contempt must be made out on the criminal standard and the accused would have the right to call witnesses, be represented by counsel if he wished and the right not to be compelled to be a witness. Authority is unanimous that the constitutional right to jury trial does not apply. On the other hand, it may be that, where the unusual direct indictment procedure were resorted to, the trial would have to be by jury, which was the manner of trying such contempts before use of the summary process was widely resorted to. A particular concern relates to the constitutional guarantee to trial by an independent and impartial tribunal. Some forms of contempt in facie involve insulting or abusive behaviour towards the presiding judge. Once the judge has restored order, which may include removal of the person from the court and citing the person for contempt, it is probably best that the actual contempt be tried by some other judge in order to preserve the appearance of fairness. It should be noted, however, that, in light of R. v. Doz (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 479 (S.C.C.), one judge of an inferior court has no jurisdiction to try a contempt committed in the face of the court of another inferior court judge. Accordingly, if fairness requires that the inferior court judge not deal with the contempt himself then the proceedings for contempt of court would have to be taken in the superior court.

ANNOTATIONS

Contempt of court: Procedure / Jurisdiction of courts to try contempt of court – At common law, superior courts have an inherent and exclusive jurisdiction to punish for contempt not committed in the face of the court while inferior courts have only a limited inherent jurisdiction to punish for contempt in the face of court. Inferior courts which are not courts of record have no power to punish for contempt unless such power is conferred by statute. Violation of an order of the Quebec Police Commission prohibiting publication of the photograph of a witness is contempt out of the face of the court and therefore punishable only by the superior court: Canadian Broadcasting Corp. et al. v. Cordeau et al. (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 289, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 618 (9:0).

A judge presiding at a preliminary hearing has no power to punish summarily for contempt of court a witness who refuses to answer relevant questions without reasonable excuse. The power of the judge is limited to the procedure under s. 545: R. v. Bublely (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 79, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 179 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Section 484 of this Act, however, gives the judge power to commit for contempt in the face of court in order to preserve order in his court-room: R. v. Barker (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 322, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 202 (Alta. C.A.).

A provincial court judge exercising the jurisdiction to try an indictable offence under Part XIX does have an inherent jurisdiction to punish for contempt committed in the face of the court, such as the wilful refusal of a witness to testify: R. v. Dunning (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 296 (Ont. C.A.); Re Layne and The Queen (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 149, [1984] 6 W.W.R. 108 (B.C.S.C.). Contra: R. v. Heer (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 333, 38 B.C.L.R. 176 (S.C.).

Similarly a provincial court judge presiding at a trial of an accused for a summary conviction offence under Part XXVII constitutes a court of record and has power to punish for contempt of court committed in the face of the court, such as the refusal of a witness to answer relevant questions: R. v. Fields (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 53 C.R. (3d) 260, 56 O.R. (2d) 213 (C.A.).

It was held in Vaillancourt v. The Queen (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 31, 19 C.R. (3d) 178, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 69 (5:0), that a judge presiding in the criminal courts has power to punish summarily as a contempt in the face of the court the refusal of a juvenile witness to testify. It was held that such a contempt is not a delinquency which could only be tried under the former Juvenile Delinquents Act but rather was the exercise of the court's inherent power which is preserved by this section. It would seem that in light of s. 47(3) of the Young Offenders Act this jurisdiction in the ordinary courts is retained but the Youth Court also has jurisdiction to try the contempt. In either case the penalty is determined by the provisions of the Young Offenders Act (see s. 47(4) of that Act).

Initiation of contempt proceedings – Although rarely employed, procedure by indictment for punishment of contempt ex facie is preserved by this section. However, the offence is triable only by the superior court and the provisions of Part IX do not apply to the trial of such offence so as to permit the accused to elect trial by provincial court judge. Finally, it would seem that where an indictment for criminal contempt is employed it would have to be by direct indictment to the superior court: R. v. Vermette (1987), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 519, 57 C.R. (3d) 340, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 577 (4:0).

Even where the court initiates summary procedure for contempt out of the face of the court, in a matter of interference with the administration of justice the Attorney-General has the responsibility to present the evidence and if he chooses not to adduce any evidence on the show cause hearing then the charge should be dismissed: Hamel and Lesage v. The Queen (1978), 9 C.R. (3d) 214 (Que. C.A.).

Criminal contempt proceedings may be brought at the instance of an individual: Re Letourneau-Belanger and Société de Publication Merlin Ltée, [1969] 4 C.C.C. 313, 6 C.R.N.S. 308 (Que. Q.B., App. Side) or any interested party: R. v. Froese and B.C. Television Broadcasting System Ltd. (No. 1) (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 105, [1980] 1 W.W.R. 667 (B.C.S.C.).

The initiation of the summary process by way of an originating notice of motion for a contempt ex facie curiae is appropriate where the accused has broadcast inflammatory and prejudicial material at the opening of a criminal trial. Further, the hearing of the contempt motion may then be properly adjourned until the conclusion of the criminal trial so as not to further prejudice that trial. In the interim should there be any repetition of the contempt the currency of the notice of motion ensures that the accused can be immediately controlled: R. v. Froese and British Columbia Television Broadcasting System Ltd. (No. 3) (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 315, 18 C.R. (3d) 75 sub nom. R. v. Bengert et al.; R. v. Froese and British Columbia Television Broadcasting System Ltd. (No. 3) (B.C.C.A.).

A citation requiring a person to show cause is not objectionable as it is a formal offer giving him an opportunity to explain and perhaps justify an apparent contempt: Re Hill and The Queen (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 458, 27 C.R.N.S. 200 (B.C.S.C.). Appeal dismissed without reasons, 22 C.C.C. (2d) 64n, 31 C.R.N.S. 225n (B.C.C.A.).

In Covroni v. Quebec Police Commission and Brunet et al. (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 56, 80 D.L.R. (3d) 490 (5:4) (S.C.C.), a conviction for contempt of the Commissioners was quashed because of the vagueness of the charge. It was held that where testimony is false in its entirety, a charge of perjury, and consequently of contempt, is specific enough if it simply states that. However, where as in this case the objection is not to the testimony as a whole, the charge must specify which part of the testimony is complained of. Where the complaint is the evasiveness of some of the witnesses' answers it was necessary to specify what was considered evasive.

Procedure on trial of contempt – As developed at common law, the summary procedure for dealing with the contempt of a witness refusing to testify at a criminal trial, does not offend the principles guaranteed by s. 7 or 11. Those principles include the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence with which he is charged, to have counsel, to have a reasonable time to prepare a defence, to call witnesses and not to be compelled to give evidence. He also has the right to be tried by an independent and impartial tribunal and where the contempt alleged consists of insolent or contemptuous behaviour or other disorderly conduct or behaviour which reflects adversely upon the character, integrity or reputation of the initiating judge, the charge should be tried by another judge. However, there may be very exceptional cases where the circumstances are so compelling and the need for action on the part of the presiding judge so urgent to preserve the order and protect the authority of the court that some limitation on such rights, particularly with respect to time, may be justified: R. v. Cohn (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 150, 42 C.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused March 14, 1984.

However, the fact that the witness was the last witness for the Crown was not such a compelling circumstance as required infringement of the accused's rights, particularly an opportunity to consult counsel and prepare the defence to a charge of contempt for refusing to testify. The major inducement to a recalcitrant witness to give evidence is the knowledge that his actions may constitute contempt of court, and if found in contempt he may be sentenced to a substantial term of imprisonment. In those cases where a witness refuses to be sworn or to testify, the trial judge is always in a position to threaten that he will cite the proposed witness for contempt and to warn him that if he is found in contempt he may be sentenced to imprisonment. If, however, after repeated appearances and repeated warnings, the witness still refuses to testify it is most unlikely that a finding of contempt by the trial judge would induce such witness to testify. Once he has been sentenced, there is no longer any effective inducement as the court cannot vary a sentence once it is imposed: R. v. Ayres (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 208, 42 C.R. (3d) 33 (Ont. C.A.).

While instant summary contempt procedures may be justified in some exceptional cases, in most circumstances, natural justice requires the usual steps of putting the witness on notice that he or she must show cause why they should not be found in contempt of court, followed by an adjournment which need be no longer than that required to offer the witness an opportunity to be advised by counsel and, if he or she chooses, to be represented by counsel. In addition, upon a finding of contempt, there should be an opportunity to have representations made as to the appropriate sentence: R. v. K.(B.), [1995] 4 S.C.R. 186, 102 C.C.C. (3d) 18, 43 C.R. (4th) 123 (S.C.C.).

A person cited for civil contempt who is liable to be imprisoned for up to one year cannot be compelled to testify at the contempt proceedings: Vidéotron Ltée v. Industries Microlec Produits Electroniques Inc. (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 1065, 96 D.L.R. (4th) 376.

Proceedings for contempt of court arising out of abusive remarks by the accused to the trial judge after he convicted her, having made adverse findings of credibility, ought not to have been tried by that same judge. In the circumstances, the accused could have a reasonable apprehension of bias and her rights under s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights were infringed: R. v. Martin (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 248 (Ont. C.A.).

Where there are contradicted facts relating to matters essential to a decision as to whether or not a party is in contempt of court, those facts cannot be found by an assessment of the credibility of deponents of affidavits who have not been seen or heard by the trier of fact: R. v. Jetco Manufacturing Ltd. and Alexander (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 171, 57 O.R. (2d) 776 (C.A.).

A trial judge needs nothing more than cognizance of a person's statement or conduct before his court to convict summarily: R. v. Vallieres (No. 2) (1973), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 361, 47 D.L.R. (3d) 363 (Que. C.A.).

An accused cited for contempt of court has the right to make full answer and defence and where he is, by reason of intoxication, not in a fit state to defend himself, then the judge cannot proceed with the hearing: R. v. Jolly (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 389 (B.C.C.A.).

Right to jury trial – A witness cited for contempt of court is “charged with an offence” within the meaning of s. 11 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and therefore is entitled to the rights guaranteed by that section as well as to fundamental justice under s. 7. However, the summary procedure is not an unconstitutional derogation from the right to a jury trial as guaranteed by s. 11(f) since the offender is subject only to a punishment of less than five years’ imprisonment: R. v. Cohn (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 150, 42 C.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Robinson-Blackmore Printing & Publishing Co. Ltd. (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 366, 73 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 46 (Nfld. S.C.). Similarly: MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson (1994), 89 C.C.C. (3d) 217, 113 D.L.R. (4th) 368, 90 B.C.L.R. (2d) 24 (C.A.).

A person before the superior court on a summary motion to have him cited for contempt is not “charged with an offence” within the meaning of s. 11(f) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so as to have the benefit of a jury trial as guaranteed by that provision: A.-G. Que. v. Laurendeau (1982), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 250, 33 C.R. (3d) 40 (Que. S.C.); A.-G. Man. v. Groupe Quebecor Inc. (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 421, 59 C.R. (3d) 1, [1987] 5 W.W.R. 270, 47 Man. R. (2d) 187 (C.A.).

The summary procedure for trying contempt of court is a reasonable limitation on the right to a jury trial as provided for in s. 11(f) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Layne and The Queen, supra.

Appeal – Where the trial judge made an order for costs against defence counsel personally, there was a right of appeal. The jurisdiction to impose such a penalty could only be consequent upon a finding of contempt and therefore, the trial judge was effectively exercising contempt powers: R. v. McCullough (1995), 24 O.R. (3d) 239, 82 O.A.C. 63 (C.A.).

CIVIL REMEDY NOT SUSPENDED.

11. No civil remedy for an act or omission is suspended or affected by reason that the act or omission is a criminal offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 10.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that parties may pursue civil remedies notwithstanding the fact that the same act or omission giving rise to the civil proceeding is also a criminal offence. Courts retain their inherent jurisdiction to protect their process and may, in an exceptional case, stay the civil proceedings until the conclusion of the criminal trial, to protect the accused’s right to a fair trial.

ANNOTATIONS

In British Acceptance Corporation Ltd. v. Belzberg et al. (1962), 36 D.L.R. (2d) 587, 39 C.R. 72 (Alta. S.C.), it was held that there was no general principle in Canada preventing the simultaneous trial of criminal and civil proceedings. A stay may be granted for either of the proceedings if simultaneous action would be vexatious but that is entirely discretionary.

Concurrent criminal and civil proceedings against a person is not in itself an exceptional cause for staying the latter proceedings: Stickney v. Trusz (1973), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 25, 25 C.R.N.S. 257 (Ont. H.C.J.). Affd 17 C.C.C. (2d) 478n, 28 C.R.N.S. 125 (Div. Ct.), affd 17 C.C.C. (2d) 480n, 46 D.L.R. (3d) 82n (C.A.).

OFFENCE PUNISHABLE UNDER MORE THAN ONE ACT.

12. Where an act or omission is an offence under more than one Act of Parliament, whether punishable by indictment or on summary conviction, a person who does the act or makes the omission is, unless a contrary intention appears, subject to proceedings under any of those Acts, but is not liable to be punished more than once for the same offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to an autrefois plea, see ss. 7(6), 607 to 610 of the Code and s. 11(h) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As to the abuse of process generally, see notes following s. 579. As to the common law rule precluding multiple convictions for same delict, the “Kienapple” rule and common law principles of res judicata and issue estoppel, see notes following s. 613.

ANNOTATIONS

This section does not modify the scope of res judicata which precludes multiple convictions for the same delict, although the matter is the basis of two separate offences: Kienapple v. The Queen (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 524, 26 C.R.N.S. 1 (5:4) (S.C.C.) Folld: Dore v. A.-G. Can. (No. 2) (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 359, 27 C.R.N.S. at p. 258 (S.C.C.) (8:1).

Also see notes under s. 613, infra.

CHILD UNDER TWELVE.

13. No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while that person was under the age of twelve years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 12; 1980-81-82-83, c. 110, s. 72.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Note that s. 23.1 provides that an accused may be convicted as a party, or accessory after the fact under ss. 21 to 23, notwithstanding that the person whom the accused aids or abets, counsels or procures or receives, comforts or assists, cannot be convicted of the offence.

Trial of offences committed by young persons aged 12 to 17 years is governed by the Young Offenders Act [unless the case is transferred to the ordinary courts pursuant to s. 16 of the Young Offenders Act].

A person's age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

SYNOPSIS

No child under 12 years of age may be held criminally accountable. The age of 12 represents a relatively recent increase from the common law rule which established age seven as the start of accountability. Below this age, provincial child welfare legislation may apply to children who are involved in criminal activity.

ANNOTATIONS

The reference to age in this section is to chronological age not “mental age”. Thus, this section does not bar the trial of a mentally retarded adult, nor do such proceedings violate s. 15 of the Charter: R. v. Sawchuk (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 255, [1991] 5 W.W.R. 381, 6 W.A.C. 311 (Man. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 67 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 137 N.R. 385n.

CONSENT TO DEATH.

14. No person is entitled to consent to have death inflicted on him, and such consent does not affect the criminal responsibility of any person by whom death may be inflicted on the person by whom consent is given. R.S., c. C-34, s. 14.

CROSS-REFERENCES

For the offences of murder and manslaughter see ss. 222 to 240. The offence of counselling or aiding suicide is set out in s. 241.

SYNOPSIS

This section states that no one has the right to consent to have death inflicted on him. In addition, if a person causes the death of another, the consent of the deceased does not provide the person who caused the death a defence to criminal responsibility.

ANNOTATIONS

Notwithstanding this section, in the case of a genuine suicide pact, the surviving party should have a defence to murder. This defence will only be available when the parties are in such a mental state that they have formed a common and irrevocable intent to commit suicide together simultaneously and by the same act where the risk of death is identical and equal for both. The survivor may, however, be liable to be convicted of the offence contrary to s. 241: R. v. Gagnon (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 143, 24 C.R. (4th) 369, [1993] R.J.Q. 1716 (C.A.).

OBEDIENCE TO DE FACTO LAW.

15. No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission in obedience to the laws for the time being made and enforced by persons in de facto possession of the sovereign power in and over the place where the act or omission occurs. R.S., c. C-34, s. 15.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This provision does not apply to trials of war crimes and crimes against humanity: s. 7(3.74). Note also the provisions of s. 269.1(3) which limit the availability of the defence of obedience to superior orders, etc., to the offence of torture. This provision is of quite limited application and provisions similar to it were originally enacted in England to protect persons serving the King de facto who might turn out to be on the wrong side of a civil war, and to make it clear that it was not treason to the successful claimant to the throne to have faithfully served the then reigning monarch.

In present times, a more relevant defence may be the emerging defence of officially induced error noted under s. 19, infra.

SYNOPSIS

This provision states that obedience to the laws, for the time being, made and enforced by those who are de facto in possession of the sovereign power in and over the place where the acts or omissions occur will prevent a conviction – unless a specific exception is made in the provision creating the offence.

ANNOTATIONS

This section does not afford a defence to a movie theatre, that, in compliance with provincial legislation, received approval for public showing of a film later alleged by the Crown to be obscene: R. v. Daylight Theatre Company Ltd. (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 524, 41 D.L.R. (3d) 236 (Sask. C.A.). Folld: R. v. McFall et al. (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 181 (B.C.C.A.), although evidence of the provincial censor as to why he approved the film is relevant to the issue of whether in fact the film was obscene. Similarly, on a charge of distributing obscene publications, this section has no application notwithstanding the offending publications were first cleared through customs: R. v. 294555 Ontario Ltd. (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 352 (Ont. C.A.), 61 D.L.R. (4th) 85, 69 O.R. (2d) 557.

The discretion to remove the defence provided by this section in the case of war crimes and crimes against humanity by s. 7(3.74) does not infringe ss. 7 and 15 of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.C.R. (4th) 265.

DEFENCE OF MENTAL DISORDER / Presumption / Burden of Proof.

16. (1) No person is criminally responsible for an act committed or an omission made while suffering from a mental disorder that rendered the person incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of the act or omission or of knowing that it was wrong.

(2) Every person is presumed not to suffer from a mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility by virtue of subsection (1), until the contrary is proved on the balance of probabilities.

(3) The burden of proof that an accused was suffering from a mental disorder so as to be exempt from criminal responsibility is on the party that raises the issue. R.S. c. C-34, s. 16; 1991, c. 43, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section deals with the defence of mental disorder. Where that defence is made out, the trier of fact is required to deliver a verdict of not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder: s. 672.34. Mental disorder is defined in s. 2.

SYNOPSIS

The newly enacted provisions are effectively identical to the previous s. 16 except for terminology which replaces the concept of insanity with the phraseology “mental disorder”. The new terminology, however, still codifies the common law test of insanity, now termed mental disorder. Subsection (1) sets out the long-standing principle of criminal law that no person who committed an offence while suffering a mental disorder may be convicted. Subsection (1) also restates, with one significant modification, the common law rule developed in nineteenth century England in the McNaughten case. This is a legal and not a medical test although expert psychiatric and psychological evidence is almost invariably used to assist in making the determination. Subsection (2) sets out the presumption of sanity until the contrary is proven on the balance of probabilities and subsection (3) requires the party raising the issue of mental disorder to bear the burden of proof.

The first arm of the test is that the accused is proved to be suffering from a mental disorder which replaces the concepts of “natural imbecility” and “disease of the mind” contained in the prior definition of insanity. These principles, however, are incorporated by virtue of the generic term “mental disorder”. To be found to be suffering from a mental disorder, the accused must meet one of two tests: the mental disorder must have rendered them incapable (1) of appreciating the nature and quality of the act or omission or (2) of knowing that an act or omission is wrong.

Subsection (3) of the previous legislation which stated that a person “who has specific delusions, but is in other respects sane, shall not be acquitted on the ground of insanity unless the delusions caused that person to believe in the existence of a state of things that, if it existed, would have justified or excused the act or omission of that person” is now subsumed under the definition of “mental disorder” contained in subsection (1). Consequently, a person who suffers from a delusion to the point where it renders them incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of the act or omission or of knowing that it was wrong will be characterized as suffering from a “mental disorder”.

Subsections (2) and (3) of the new provisions speak to the presumption of sanity and the burden of proof on the balance of probability which must be borne by the party raising the issue.

ANNOTATIONS

Note: Most of the cases below were decided under the predecessor legislation. The two significant changes to the legislation are to replace the term "insane" with the term "not criminally responsible" and to replace the term "state of natural imbecility or has disease of the mind" with the term "mental disorder". However, "mental disorder" is defined in s. 2 as meaning a disease of the mind and so it is believed that much of the case-law decided under the predecessor legislation is applicable to the new provision.

Meaning of "disease of the mind" – The term "disease of the mind" is a legal concept and it is therefore a question of law for the trial Judge what mental conditions are included within the term as is the question whether there is any evidence that the accused suffered from an abnormal mental condition comprehended by that term. Any malfunctioning of the mind, or mental disturbance having its source primarily in some subjective condition or weakness internal to the accused (whether fully understood or not), may be a disease of the mind if it prevents the accused from knowing what he is doing, but transient disturbances of consciousness due to certain specific external factors do not fall within the concept. In particular, the ordinary stresses and disappointments of life, though they may bring about malfunctioning of the mind such as a dissociative state, do not constitute an external cause constituting an explanation for a malfunctioning of the mind which takes it out of the category of a disease of the mind and could not form the basis of a defence of non-insane automatism: R. v. Rabey (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 461, 79 D.L.R. (3d) 414 (Ont. C.A.), affd 54 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 513, 15 C.R. (3d) 225 (4:3).

The term "disease of the mind" embraces any illness, disorder or abnormal condition which impairs the human mind and its functioning, excluding, however, self-induced states caused by alcohol or drugs, as well as transitory mental states such as hysteria or concussion. Thus personality disorders may constitute disease of the mind. The word "appreciates" imports a requirement beyond mere knowledge of the physical quality of the act and requires a capacity to apprehend the nature of the act and its consequences: Cooper v. The Queen (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 129, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1149, 13 C.R. (3d) 97 and 18 C.R. (3d) 138 (5:2) where the decisions of the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Rabey, supra, and R. v. Simpson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 337, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 507 were referred to with approval.

A mental disorder may still constitute a disease of the mind even if it is not prone to recur. "Disease of the mind" includes any medically recognized mental disorder or mental illness that could render a person incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of his act, or of knowing that it is wrong, save for transient mental disturbances caused by external factors such as violence or drugs: R. v. Oakley (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 351 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the accused is in a state of automatism to which a disease of the mind is a contributing factor then his defence is insanity, not non-insane automatism, even if there were other factors such as consumption of alcohol and a physical illness which were contributing factors: R. v. Revell (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 267 (Ont. C.A.), affd 61 C.C.C. (2d) 575, 21 C.R. (2d) 162, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 576 (9:0).

The term "automatism" as comprehended by the defence of non-insane automatism means an unconscious, involuntary act where the mind does not go with what is being done. It does not include the case of an accused who by reason of delusions did not have the capacity to form a rational judgment or who under the dominance of delusions which distorted his perception of reality considered that he had no choice other than to what he did: R. v. Oakley, supra.

In R. v. Parks (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 287, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 871, 15 C.R. (4th) 289 (8:0) the court held that, on the evidence in this case, the trial judge properly held that the accused's sleepwalking or somnambulism was not a disease of the mind and, therefore, only the defence on non-insane automatism should be left to the jury. Whether or not a particular mental condition is a disease of the mind is a legal term not a medical term of art since it contains a substantial legal or policy component. This policy component relates in part to whether the condition makes the accused a continuing danger and whether the condition is a result of some internal cause. The evidence in this case was to the effect that there was no likelihood of recurrent violent somnambulism making a finding of insanity less likely. As well, the internal cause theory was not readily applicable. Other policy considerations such as the possibility that the condition is easily feigned or that recognition of somnambulism as non-insane automatism will open the floodgates to a cascade of sleepwalking defence claims were not persuasive. In another case, the medical evidence might show that the accused's condition did amount to a disease of the mind.

The syndrome known as delirium tremens, brought about by prolonged and chronic, albeit voluntary, consumption of alcohol, is a "disease of the mind" within the meaning of this section of the Criminal Code. While "disease of the mind" does not include the ordinary effects of drunkenness, there is a distinction between drunkenness and a disease of the mind such as delirium tremens. The latter is not self-induced in the way of drunkenness, but is the supervening result of abuse of alcohol over an extended period of time: R. v. Malcolm (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 172, 71 C.R. (3d) 238, [1989] 6 W.W.R. 23 (Man. C.A.).

Meaning of "appreciating" and "knowing" – In using the two words "appreciating" and "knowing", Parliament clearly intended that different tests be used. The verb "know" has a positive connotation requiring a base awareness while "appreciate" involves a further step of analysis of knowledge or experience: R. v. Barnier (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 193, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1124, 13 C.R. (3d) 129 (7:0), affg 37 C.C.C. (2d) 508, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 137 (B.C.C.A.). And see: R. v. Baltzer (1979), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 118, 10 N.S.R. (2d) 561 (S.C. App. Div.) and R. v. Simpson, infra.

Appreciation of the nature and quality of the act refers to an incapacity by reason of disease of the mind to appreciate the physical consequences of the act. Thus, an accused could not rely on this branch of the insanity defence where he was aware that he was killing the victim and knew that killing was a crime, although he believed that the victim was "Satan" and that in killing the deceased he was acting on divine orders. On the other hand, an accused, who by reason of disease of the mind was acting under such a delusion, would be entitled to a finding of insanity on the basis that he did not know the act was wrong in view of the expanded definition given the term "wrong" in R. v. Chaulk, infra: R. v. Landry (1991), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 117, 2 C.R. (4th) 268, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 99 (7:0).

Although personality disorders or psychopathic personalities are capable of constituting a disease of the mind the defence of insanity is not made out where the accused has the necessary understanding of the nature, character and consequences of the act, but merely lacks appropriate feelings for the victim or lacks feelings of remorse or guilt for what he has done, even though such lack of feeling stems from disease of the mind: R. v. Simpson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 337, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 507 (Ont. C.A.).

This part of the judgment in R. v. Simpson, supra, was approved in Kjeldsen v. The Queen (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 161, 24 C.R. (3d) 289 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

A delusion which renders the accused incapable of appreciating that the penal sanctions attaching to the commission of the crime are applicable to him does not render him incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of the act within the meaning of this section so as to give rise to the insanity defence. While the concept of appreciating the nature and quality of an act requires an understanding of the consequences of the act, this refers to the physical consequences of the act: R. v. Abbey (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 394, 29 C.R. (3d) 193, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 24 (9:0).

In R. v. Wolfson, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 304, 46 C.R. 8, (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), it was held that evidence of an irresistible impulse is not, by itself, enough to support a finding of insanity under this section.

Meaning of "wrong" – The term "wrong" in subsec. (2) means "morally wrong" and not simply "legally wrong". The court must determine whether the accused, because of a disease of the mind, was rendered incapable of knowing that the act committed was something that he ought not to have done. Thus, the inquiry cannot terminate with the discovery that the accused knew that the act was contrary to the formal law. A person may know that the act was contrary to law and yet, by reason of a disease of the mind, be incapable of knowing that the act is morally wrong in the circumstances according to the moral standards of society: R. v. Chaulk (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 2 C.R. (4th) 1, [1991] 2 W.W.R. 385 (S.C.C.).

The inquiry under this section focuses not on a general capacity to know right from wrong, but rather on the ability to know that a particular act was wrong in the circumstances. The accused must not only possess the intellectual ability to know right from wrong in an abstract sense but must possess the ability to apply that knowledge in a rational way to the alleged criminal act. The crux of the inquiry is whether the accused lacks the capacity to rationally decide whether the act is right or wrong and hence to make a rational choice of whether to do it or not. The accused would not be criminally responsible where, by reason of delusions, he perceives an act which is wrong as right or justifiable, and the disordered condition of his mind deprives the accused of the ability to rationally evaluate what he is doing. It is not necessary to show that, if the delusions were true, a specific defence such as self-defence would also apply: R. v. Oommen, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 507, 91 C.C.C. (3d) 8, 30 C.R. (4th) 195.

Mental illness short of insanity – Our Criminal Code does not recognize the defence of diminished responsibility and even though the accused may have been ill at the time of the offence he is technically sane if he was able to distinguish between right and wrong: Chartrand v. The Queen (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 64 D.L.R. (3d) 145 (S.C.C.) (8:0).

Nevertheless where the accused is charged with an offence which requires proof of a specific intent, evidence that the accused was suffering from mental illness or mental disorder, though falling short of proof of insanity, may negative the requisite specific intent, as in the case of murder reduce the charge to manslaughter: R. v. Baltzer, supra. And to the same effect: R. v. Hilton (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 206 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Meloche (1975), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 184 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Lechasseur (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 319 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Browning (1976), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 200 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Leblanc (1991), 4 C.R. (4th) 98, [1991] R.J.Q. 686 (C.A.); R. v. Wright (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 334, 11 C.R. (3d) 257 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused October 22, 1979.

Where evidence is adduced in support of a defence of insanity to a charge of first degree murder, the jury is to be directed to first consider that defence. If that defence fails, then the jury should consider all the evidence in the case, including relevant evidence which was adduced in support of the insanity defence to determine whether the accused had the relevant intent for murder and, if so, whether the killing was planned and deliberate: R. v. Allard (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 397, 78 C.R. (3d) 228, [1990] R.J.Q. 1847 (C.A.).

Procedure – Where the accused seeks to introduce evidence to support a defence of automatism, whether insane or non-insane automatism, a voir dire should not be resorted to where the evidence is relevant and not subject to rejection on any recognized legal ground. The evidence should be led before the jury and at the end of the case it will be for the trial Judge to instruct the jury whether there is any evidence which will support the particular defence: R. v. Sproule (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 92, 30 C.R.N.S. 56 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused may raise the defence of insanity at any time during the trial and in fact may raise the defence after the trier of fact has found the accused guilty but prior to conviction. If, during the course of the trial, prior to the finding of guilt, evidence is led which does not satisfy the trier of fact of insanity under this section, such evidence may nevertheless be considered on the issue of whether the accused had the requisite mens rea: R. v. Swain (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 5 C.R. (4th) 253, 3 C.R.R. (2d) 1 (S.C.C.) (6:1).

Section 650(3) which gives the accused the right “after the close of the case for the prosecution” to make full answer and defence must apply to evidence given by way of rebuttal as well as to that given during the Crown’s case in chief. Accordingly, it was held in R. v. Ewert (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 280 (B.C.C.A.), that the rules regarding the permissible scope of surrebuttal must be applied liberally in favour of the accused, where the accused relied on the defence of insanity and evidence to rebut that defence was first given by the Crown in rebuttal.

Where the trial judge is of the view that there is no evidence to support the defence of insanity, he should so inform counsel prior to their making their jury addresses: R. v. Charest (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 312, 76 C.R. (3d) 63, 28 Q.A.W. 258 (C.A.).

Even where the Crown has notice that the accused intends to rely on the insanity defence as provided in this section, the Crown need not adduce evidence in chief to challenge that defence. The Crown was therefore properly permitted to adduce its evidence with respect to sanity in rebuttal. The accused suffered no prejudice as he was given the opportunity for surrebuttal: R. v. Chaulk, supra.

Expert evidence – The placing of the crucial question of the accused’s state of mind to the expert witness, while ordinarily framed as a hypothetical question may, if the facts are uncontradicted be put in direct form. This discretion of the trial judge was confirmed in Bleta v. The Queen, [1965] 1 C.C.C. 1, 44 C.R. 193 (S.C.C.) (5:0), per Ritchie J., at p. 6 C.C.C., p. 198 C.R.: “Provided that the questions are so phrased as to make clear what the evidence is on which an expert is being asked to found his conclusion, the failure of counsel to put such questions in hypothetical form does not of itself make the answers inadmissible. It is within the competence of the trial Judge in any case to insist upon the foundation for the expert opinion being laid by way of hypothetical question if he feels this to be the best way in which he can be assured of the matter being fully understood by the jury, but this does not, in my opinion, mean that the Judge is necessarily precluded in the exercise of his discretion in the conduct of the trial from permitting the expert’s answer to go before the jury if the nature and foundation of his opinion has been clearly indicated by other means.”

While an expert opinion based on second-hand evidence is admissible, if relevant, the facts asserted in this second-hand evidence are not admissible for their truth. Thus, while medical experts are entitled to take into consideration all possible information in forming their opinions, “this in no way removes from the party tendering such evidence the obligation of establishing, through properly admissible evidence, the factual basis on which such opinions are based.” R. v. Abbey, supra.

Provided there is some admissible evidence to establish the foundation for the expert opinion, a trial judge cannot subsequently instruct the jury to completely ignore the testimony. Where the factual basis of an expert opinion is a mixture of admissible and second-hand (hearsay) evidence the duty of the trial judge is to caution the jury that the weight attributable to the expert testimony is directly related to the amount and quality of admissible evidence on which the opinion depends: R. v. Lavallee (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 852, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 1 (7:0). See also R. v. Skrzydlewski (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 467, 87 O.A.C. 174 (C.A.).

On the other hand, not all “second-hand” evidence is hearsay and thus, statements of a preposterous nature by an accused may be relevant to the issue of insanity and may be original evidence on that issue. For example, utterances by the accused manifesting a delusion or hallucination are not used to prove any fact asserted in them, but as circumstantial evidence to support an inference that the accused suffers from delusions or hallucinations. While such statements may be feigned, whether they indicate an actual mental state must be determined by the court, usually with the assistance of experts: R. v. Kirkby, supra.

An expert may be cross-examined to determine what the expert considered relevant, whether there are matters relevant that were not considered and whether the expert might have arrived at his conclusion as a result of considerations irrelevant to his particular expertise. Since an expert cannot take into account facts that are not subject to his professional expert assessment, he cannot be cross-examined and asked to take such facts into account. Further, it is not open to the cross-examiner or examiner to put as a fact or even a hypothetical fact, that which is not and will not become part of the case as admissible evidence: R. v. Howard (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 38, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1337, 69 C.R. (3d) 193 (3:1).

Where counsel requires the services of an expert in order to assist him in preparing the defence, communications between the accused and the expert are covered by solicitor-client privilege. There is no requirement that counsel be present during the examination. Where defence counsel, however, subsequently calls the expert, he may be required to disclose his communications with the accused. This is because the accused, by calling as a witness in his defence a psychiatrist, whose opinion was based at least in part on what the accused has confided in him, thereby waived privilege: R. v. Perron (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 108, 75 C.R. (3d) 382, [1990] R.J.Q. 752 (C.A.).

Where statements by the accused are adduced through cross-examination of defence experts or through examination of experts retained by the Crown solely for their bearing on the expert opinion and not as evidence of their truth on which the jury could act independently, then no issue of voluntariness arises: R. v. Stevenson (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 464 (Ont. C.A.).

Confession of "insane" accused – While the correct test for admissibility of the confession of an insane accused may be framed per R. v. Ward (1979), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 498, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 30, 7 C.R. (3d) 153, as to whether it represents the "operating mind" of the accused, this is not the only word formula for testing the admissibility of an insane accused's statements to the police. Thus in R. v. Nagotcha (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 353 (S.C.C.) (9:0), the trial Judge's ruling admitting the statements was upheld where he found that the accused, who at the time of the making of the statements was a paranoid schizophrenic and unfit to stand trial, was not "so devoid of rationality and understanding, or so replete with psychotic delusions that his uttered words could not be fairly be said to be his statements at all". Also see: R. v. Whittle (1994), 92 C.C.C. (3d) 11, 32 C.R. (4th) 1, 116 D.L.R. (4th) 416 (S.C.C.) noted under s. 10 of the Charter, infra.

Subsec. (3) – It was held in R. v. Chaulk, supra, that the former s. 16(4) which also placed the burden on the accused to prove the defence on a balance of probabilities while infringing the presumption of innocence guarantee in s. 11(d) of the Charter was a reasonable limit and therefore valid.

Adverse influence from failure to submit to examination – Where the accused relies on the defence of insanity, although he is not required to submit to psychiatric examination by a psychiatrist retained by the Crown, evidence of such refusal is admissible and an inference adverse to the accused may be drawn from such refusal: R. v. Sweeney (No. 2) (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 245, 76 D.L.R. (3d) 211 (Ont. C.A.).

Further, the drawing of the adverse inference does not infringe the accused's right to fundamental justice under s. 7 of the Charter: R. v. Worth (1995), 98 C.C.C. (3d) 133, 40 C.R. (4th) 123, 23 O.R. (3d) 211 (C.A.).

The defence decision to permit access to the accused by a Crown psychiatrist is imbued with a use limitation restricted by the character of the disclosure impelled by the principle that an accused, who raises an issue of diminished intent or mental disorder and refuses to see a Crown psychiatrist, may suffer an adverse inference. The Crown may not lead evidence from its psychiatrist in-chief to prove the identity of the accused by virtue of statements made by the accused during the interview: R. v. Brunczlik (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 131 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

Where the accused, who relied on a defence of lack of specific intent, relied upon the evidence of psychiatrists retained by the defence, it was open to the Crown to adduce evidence that the accused refused to discuss details of the offence with a psychiatrist who examined the accused on behalf of the Crown. This evidence was admissible to explain why the Crown's expert's evidence may not have been as complete as that of the defence experts. The trial judge ought however to have instructed the jury that, in not discussing the circumstances of the offence, the accused was exercising his right to remain silent and that no inference of guilt could be drawn against him on this account: R. v. Stevenson, supra.

Right of Crown to adduce evidence of insanity – The Crown may lead evidence of insanity only in two circumstances: (1) where the accused's own defence, in the opinion of the trial judge, has somehow put the accused's mental capacity for criminal intent in issue, in which case the trial judge will be entitled to charge on the insanity defence; and (2) after the trier of fact had concluded that the accused was otherwise guilty of the offence charged. Where the Crown is required to adduce its evidence only after the accused has been found guilty, then the jury should be instructed that the Crown does so only because this is what the law requires, not because the Crown has chosen to conduct its case in this manner: R. v. Swain, supra.

COMPULSION BY THREATS.

17. A person who commits an offence under compulsion by threats of immediate death or bodily harm from a person who is present when the offence is committed is excused for committing the offence if the person believes that the threats will be carried out and if the person is not a party to a conspiracy or association whereby the person is subject to compulsion, but this section does not apply where the offence that is committed is high treason or treason, murder, piracy, attempted murder, sexual assault, sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm, aggravated sexual assault, forcible abduction, hostage taking, robbery, assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm, aggravated assault, unlawfully causing bodily harm, arson or an offence under sections 280 to 283 (abduction and detention of young persons). R.S., c. C-34, s. 17; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 29; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 4; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 40(2).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offences excepted from the defence created by this section are defined in the following sections: ss. 46, 47, high treason or treason; ss. 229, 230, murder; s. 74, piracy; s. 239, attempted murder; ss. 271 to 273, sexual assault; s. 279(2), forcible abduction; s. 279.1, hostage taking; s. 343, robbery; s. 267(a), assault with weapon; s. 267(b), assault causing bodily harm; s. 268, aggravated assault; s. 269, unlawfully causing bodily harm; s. 433, arson.

SYNOPSIS

This section exhaustively defines the scope of the defence of duress as it affects those who personally commit an offence. For duress to act as an excuse, the following requirements must be satisfied: (a) the threat must be of immediate death or bodily harm; (b) the person making the threat must be present when the offence is committed; (c) the threatened accused must believe that the threats will be carried out; and (d) the threatened accused must not be a party to a conspiracy or association whereby he is subject to compulsion. For reasons of public policy many serious offences involving personal violence (e.g., murder, sexual assault) or threats to public safety (e.g., arson, high treason) are exempted from the operation of this section and therefore duress will afford no defence to a principal charged with the listed offences. Cases have held that a party may rely on the defence of duress, notwithstanding that they were a party to one of the exempted offences listed in s. 17.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of statutory defence – There was no evidence to support a defence of duress to a charge of perjury where the accused could have informed the police of the threats he received prior to testifying and thus obtained police protection. A threat of death, from which the accused could have easily escaped and that he could have rendered unenforceable when he gave his evidence, does not give rise to the defence under this section: R. v. Hebert (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 59, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 233, 22 Q.A.C. 101, affg 3 Q.A.C. 251, C.C.C. loc. cit. (C.A.).

The defence of duress to a charge of perjury was rejected where although the persons who threatened the accused were present in Court at the time the false testimony was given the accused had the opportunity to seek official protection: R. v. Falkenberg (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 562 (Ont. Co. Ct.), revd on other grounds 16 C.C.C. (2d) 525, 25 C.R.N.S. 374 (C.A.). Cf. R. v. Hudson and Taylor (1971), 56 Cr. App. R. 1 (C.A.).

The offence of “forcible abduction” is not the equivalent of kidnapping. The latter offence is defined by s. 279 and therefore this section does offer a defence to a person charged with kidnapping. However, a threat that the accused’s own children would be kidnapped and taken to another country is not a threat of death or grievous bodily harm so as to give the accused a defence under this section: R. v. Robins (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 550 (Que. C.A.).

Availability of common law defence – The common law defence of duress is available to a party to an offence such as murder or robbery. While that defence, if made out, excuses the commission of the offence, the existence of threats does not negate the mens rea of the party: R. v. Hibbert, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 973, 99 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 40 C.R. (4th) 141; R. v. Paquette, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 189, 30 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 70 D.L.R. (3d) 129.

The common law defence of duress is similar to the defence of necessity and, like necessity, can only be invoked where there is no legal way out of the situation of duress the accused faces. Accordingly, the defence is unavailable if a safe avenue of escape was available to the accused. The question of whether or not a safe avenue of escape existed is to be determined according to an objective standard. When considering the perceptions of a reasonable person, however, the personal circumstances of the accused are relevant and important and should be taken into account: R. v. Hibbert, supra.

The common law defence of duress is available to an accused who is merely a party to the offence of robbery pursuant to s. 21(1)(b) of the Criminal Code. However, more than one person may commit an offence and two persons may be guilty as joint perpetrators although one person performs one part of the crime while the other perpetrator performs the other. In either of those circumstances both accused have actually committed the offence and in the case of robbery the defence of duress would be unavailable. However, an intention to act in concert with the other person is an integral part of the doctrine that when one person commits one element of the offence and another person commits another element of the offence both are co-perpetrators of the offence. As to the elements of the common law defence, while threat of death or serious physical injury is necessary that threat may be express or implied, provided that where an implied threat is relied upon to constitute duress there must be evidence from the acts, conduct or words of the person alleged to have made the threat which could reasonably be construed as a threat of the required kind. R. v. Mena (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 304, 57 C.R. (3d) 172 (Ont. C.A.).

The proviso in this section that the defence is unavailable where the accused was party to a conspiracy whereby he was subject to compulsion also exists at common law and therefore participation in such a conspiracy would similarly prevent an accused from relying on the common law duress defence: R. v. Logan (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 354, 67 O.R. (2d) 87 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 58 C.C.C. (3d) 391, 73 D.L.R. (4th) 40 (S.C.C.).

Constitutional considerations – The requirements imposed upon an accused who actually commits one of the listed offences to successfully make out a defence of compulsion by threats under this section are so restrictive, especially the requirements that the accused must be acting under compulsion by threats of “immediate” death or bodily harm and by a person who is “present when the offence is committed”, that there is a real risk of conviction of a person who is morally blameless. The section therefore violates the fundamental justice guarantee in s. 7 of the Charter and is of no force and effect. In the result the accused may rely upon the common law defence of duress: R. v. Langlois (1993) 80 C.C.C. (3d) 28, 19 C.R. (4th) 87, [1993] R.J.Q. 675 (C.A.).

COMPULSION OF SPOUSE.

18. No presumption arises that a married person who commits an offence does so under compulsion by reason only that the offence is committed in the presence of the spouse of that married person. R.S., c. C-34, s. 18; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The defence of compulsion by threats is found in s. 17.

SYNOPSIS

At common law there was an outdated presumption that a woman who committed an offence in the presence of her husband was presumed to have been coerced by him. This section abolishes this presumption.

ANNOTATIONS

This section has abolished the antiquated common law defence of marital coercion: R. v. Robins (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 550 (Que. C.A.).

IGNORANCE OF THE LAW.

19. Ignorance of the law by a person who commits an offence is not an excuse for committing that offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Notwithstanding the apparent breadth of this section, certain offences by their definition allow for a colour of right defence which would include at least mistake as to the civil law, for example: s. 322, theft; s. 429, mischief and arson; s. 72, forcible entry.

SYNOPSIS

This provision codifies the common law rule that ignorance of the law is no excuse for the commission of a criminal offence. This section does not affect the common law defence of mistake of fact which is preserved by s. 8. In addition, there may be a defence of officially induced error if an accused relies upon incorrect legal advice from governmental officials but the scope of this defence remains uncertain.

ANNOTATIONS

Ignorance of the law – By virtue of this section, ignorance, whether of the existence of the law or of its meaning, scope or application, is no defence. Thus an accused’s ignorance that a certain drug had been added to Sch. H to the Food and Drugs Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-27 by Regulation which was published in the Canada Gazette is no defence to a charge of trafficking in that drug contrary to s. 48(1) of that Act: R. v. Molis (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 558, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 351 (7:0). The court did however point out that the rigours of s. 19 have been relaxed where commission of the offence is dependent upon a Regulation, by s. 11(2) of the Statutory Instruments Act, 1970-71-72 (Can.), c. 38 which in effect provides that where the Regulation has not been published in the Canada Gazette no person shall be convicted of an offence consisting of a contravention of the Regulation unless, inter alia, reasonable steps have been taken to bring the purport of the Regulation to the notice of those persons likely to be affected by it.

Where, on the trial for a provincial offence, the only possible defence an accused can put forward is his ignorance of the fact that his licence had been suspended by the provisions of the provincial statute, which constitutes a mistake of law and is therefore not available as a defence, the accused is effectively denied the defence of due diligence. In those circumstances, the offence must be characterized as absolute liability: R. v. Pontes, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 44, 100 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 41 C.R. (4th) 201.

Breach of probation – On a charge of breach of probation contrary to s. 740, where the alleged breach is commission of a criminal offence, an honest belief by the accused that he was not committing the underlying criminal offence is a defence notwithstanding this section. An accused cannot have wilfully breached his probation order through the commission of a criminal offence unless he knew that what he did constituted a criminal offence: R. v. Docherty (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 72 C.R. (3d) 1, 101 N.R. 161 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Officially induced error – By virtue of this section an accused's honest belief based on reasonable inquiries of customs authorities that certain gambling devices were legal in Canada is no defence to a charge contrary to s. 202(1)(b) of the Criminal Code: R. v. Potter (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 538 (P.E.I.S.C.).

However, in R. v. MacDougall (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 31 C.R. (3d) 1, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 605 (7:0) the Court in dealing with a provincial offence referred to this section as “no more than a codification of the common law rule” and applicable to the provincial prosecution. Ritchie, J., for the Court then continued: “It is not difficult to envisage a situation in which an offence could be committed under mistake of law arising because of, and therefore induced by, ‘officially induced error’ and if there was evidence in the present case to support such a situation existing it might well be an appropriate vehicle for applying the reasoning adopted by Mr. Justice Macdonald”. Macdonald, J.A. had held at 60 C.C.C. (2d) 137, 46 N.S.R. (2d) 47, 10 M.V.R. 236 (C.A.) that officially induced error was a defence to the charge, in this case driving while suspended contrary to the Motor Vehicle Act, R.S.N.S. 1967, c. 191.

In R. v. Cancoil Thermal Corp. and Parkinson (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 295, 52 C.R. (3d) 188 (Ont. C.A.), the court considered officially induced error as a defence to a provincial offence. It was held that the defence is available as a defence to a “regulatory” offence where the accused reasonably relied upon the erroneous legal opinion or advice of an official who is responsible for the administration or enforcement of the particular law.

Mistake of fact – Unless the statute otherwise provides, as in s. 150.1, a mistake of fact is made out if the belief is honestly, i.e., genuinely held. The reasonableness or unreasonableness of the belief is merely evidence from which the trier of fact may determine whether the mistake was genuine: R. v. Pappajohn (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 481 (S.C.C.); R. v. Rees (1950), 115 C.C.C. 1 (S.C.C.).

Closely related to the defence of mistake of fact is the concept of wilful blindness. The doctrine of wilful blindness is “justified by the accused’s fault in deliberately failing to inquire when he knows there is reason for inquiry” and the defence of mistake will not be available if the accused’s mistake or ignorance falls within this doctrine: R. v. Sansregret (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 223, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 570, 45 C.R. (3d) 193.

Where, on the facts as he believed them to be, the accused was in fact committing a more serious offence than the offence with which he is charged then he is properly convicted of the offence, the actus reus, of which he committed: R. v. Ladue, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 264 (Y.T.C.A.).

A mistaken belief as to the type of narcotic being imported would not be a defence, but a mere belief by the accused that he was importing something illegal would not be sufficient mens rea: R. v. Blondin (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 118 (B.C.C.A.).

On the other hand, the accused’s mistake as to the nature of the drug in his possession is no defence provided that the drug is proscribed either by the Food and Drugs Act or the Narcotic Control Act: R. v. Couture (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 74 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Futa (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 568 (B.C.C.A.).

It has been held that a provision of the Code [former s. 146, now repealed], which removed the defence of mistake of fact, was to that extent inconsistent with s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and that part of the provision was struck out: R. v. Nguyen (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 6 W.W.R. 289 (S.C.C.) (5:2) [noted under the Charter, s. 7].

CERTAIN ACTS ON HOLIDAYS VALID.

20. A warrant or summons that is authorized by this Act or an appearance notice, promise to appear, undertaking or recognizance issued, given or entered into in accordance with Part XVI, XXI or XXVII may be issued, executed, given or entered into, as the case may be, on a holiday. R.S., c. C-34, s. 20; c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Definition of “holiday”, see s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Where the time limited for doing of a thing expires or falls on a holiday, the thing may be done on the day next following that is not a holiday . . . s. 26 of the Interpretation Act. The jury’s verdict may be taken on Sunday or on a holiday, see s. 654.

SYNOPSIS

Warrants, summons and other forms of process created by the Criminal Code (e.g., a promise to appear) may be validly issued, given or entered into on holidays. This section reverses a common law rule that prohibited the issuance and execution of process on holidays.

Parties to Offences

PARTIES TO OFFENCE / Common intention.

21. (1) Every one is a party to an offence who

- (a) actually commits it;
- (b) does or omits to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit it;
or
- (c) abets any person in committing it.

(2) Where two or more persons form an intention in common to carry out an unlawful purpose and to assist each other therein and any one of them, in carrying out the common purpose, commits an offence, each of them who knew or ought to have known that the commission of the offence would be a probable consequence of carrying out the common purpose is a party to that offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 21.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section defines the liability of a person for the offence actually committed by the principal. Pursuant to s. 22, an accused is also rendered liable for offences committed by a person whom he counselled to commit an offence. A series of related provisions concern other forms of liability as follows: ss. 23, 463, accessory after the fact; ss. 24, 463, attempt; s. 465, conspiracy; s. 464, counselling offence not committed; s. 23.1, as to liability of party notwithstanding person who actually commits offence cannot be convicted.

Certain provisions deal specifically with the liability of a secondary party. For example: s. 46, treason; s. 50, failing to report treason or high treason; s. 54, assisting Canada Forces deserters; s. 56, assisting RCMP deserters; s. 129(b), failing to assist peace officer; s. 146, assisting escape;

s. 147, permitting rescue of prisoner; s. 148, assisting prisoner of war; s. 160(2), compelling person to commit bestiality; s. 167, assisting in immoral performance; ss. 170, 171, procuring or permitting sexual activity of minors; s. 201, gaming house offences; s. 210, bawdy house offences; s. 212, procuring; s. 240, accessory after the fact to murder; s. 241, counselling or aiding suicide; s. 272, party to sexual assault.

SYNOPSIS

Section 21 sets out the liability of principals and parties to an offence.

Section 21(1)(a) holds an accused liable for the role as principal (or perpetrator) if the accused personally committed that offence.

Section 21(1)(b) makes an accused liable as a party for acts or omissions which are done for the purpose of aiding a principal to commit an offence. It is not sufficient that the acts had the effect of aiding in the commission of the offence – the purpose must be proven.

Section 21(1)(c) makes an accused liable as a party to the offence if that accused abetted the principal. Abetting simply means encouraging. Merely being present is not enough, unless presence is accompanied by such additional factors as the prior knowledge that the principal was going to commit the offence.

Section 21(2) extends the liability of the principal and parties beyond the wrongful act originally intended. It encompasses other offences which are committed while carrying out the original intention if the additional offence is a probable consequence of carrying out the original unlawful purpose. The key to establishing liability for the party is proving that the accused foresaw that the resulting offence was a probable consequence of carrying out the unlawful purpose agreed to. The phrase, referring to the liability of a party, “or ought to have known” has been the subject of attack under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. See the notes below under heading “Application of Charter of Rights”.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) / Liability of party generally – Mere presence at the scene of an offence is not sufficient to ground liability under this subsection. There must be more: encouragement of the principal; an act which facilitates the commission of the offence; or an act which tends to prevent or hinder interference with accomplishment of the criminal act. Passive acquiescence is not sufficient. Presence at the scene of an offence can be evidence of aiding and abetting only if accompanied by other factors such as prior knowledge of the principal's intention to commit the offence or attendance for the purpose of encouragement: Dunlop and Sylvester v. The Queen (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 93, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 881, 8 C.R. (3d) 349 (4:3). And see the earlier appellate Court decisions in R. v. Salajko, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 352, 9 C.R.N.S. 145 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Clow (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 8 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 96 (P.E.I.S.C.) and R. v. Black and six others, [1970] 4 C.C.C. 251, 10 C.R.N.S. 17 sub nom. R. v. Black et al. (B.C.C.A.).

Where there is evidence that the offence was committed by one or more persons then it is appropriate to direct the jury as to the application of this section even on the trial of a single accused and although the identity of the other person is unknown as is the precise part played by each person. However, where there is no evidence to support the proposition that more than one person was involved then it is misdirection to charge the jury on this section: R. v. Sparrow (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 443, 12 C.R. (3d) 158 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Isaac (1984), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 74 (7:0); Thatcher v. The Queen (1987), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 57 C.R. (3d) 97, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 652 (7:0).

The words “actually commits it” in subsec. (1)(a) include the case of an accused who commits an offence by means of an innocent agent: R. v. Berryman (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 375, 78 C.R. (3d) 376, 48 B.C.L.R. (2d) 105 (C.A.).

To render a person liable as a party to attempted murder under this subsection, it is not sufficient that it be shown merely that the accused knew the principal offender intended to commit some act of violence. While the party need not necessarily have knowledge of the details of the specific crime committed by the principal, he must have some knowledge of the essential nature of the offence committed by the principal. Thus, on a charge of attempted murder, the accused must know of the principal's intention to kill: R. v. Adams (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 100, 33 O.A.C. 148 (C.A.).

The accused's liability as a party to a killing cannot be determined simply by application of a principle that the accused was party to some single ongoing transaction. In the case of an accused who aids or abets in the killing of another, the requisite intent that the aider or abettor must have in order to warrant a conviction for murder must be the same as that required of the person who actually does the killing. The person aiding or abetting the crime must intend that death ensue or intend that he or the perpetrator cause bodily harm of a kind likely to result in death and be reckless whether death ensues or not. If the intent of the aiding party is insufficient to support a conviction for murder, then the party may still be convicted of manslaughter if the unlawful act which was aided or abetted is one he knows is likely to cause some harm short of death: R. v. Kirkness (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 1 C.R. (4th) 91, 116 N.R. 81 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

A person may be convicted of manslaughter who aids and abets another in the offence of murder, where a reasonable person in all the circumstances would have appreciated that bodily harm was the foreseeable consequence of the dangerous act which was being undertaken; R. v. Jackson, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 573, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 26 C.R. (4th) 178.

The term "for the purpose of" is essentially synonymous with "intention" and does not require proof that the accused also desired the commission of the offence: R. v. Hibbert, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 973, 99 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 40 C.R. (4th) 141.

The charge "or omitted to do anything which assisted the rape" is incorrect, it should be "or omitted to do anything for the purpose of aiding such person to commit the rape": R. v. Cosgrove (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 169 (Ont. C.A.).

Self-induced intoxication is a defence to a charge of a general intent offence where the accused's liability depends on his being a party under para. (b) or (c): R. v. Fraser (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 292 (B.C.C.A.).

Abetting – "Abets" means to encourage and while it is common to speak of "aiding and abetting", the two concepts are not the same and either activity constitutes a sufficient basis of liability: R. v. Meston (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 497, 34 C.R.N.S. 323 (Ont. C.A.).

Although subsec. (1)(c) does not provide that the words or actions must be for the purpose of abetting the person nevertheless the Crown must prove that the accused intended that the words or acts would encourage the principal: R. v. Curran (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 151, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 255 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), motion for leave to appeal to S.C.C. dismissed 20 N.R. 180n.

An accused who is present at the scene of the offence and who carries out no act to aid or encourage the commission of the offence may, nevertheless, be convicted as a party, if his purpose in failing to act was to aid in the commission of the offence and the accused was under a duty to act. Thus, a police officer who was the officer in charge of the lock-up could be convicted as a party to an assault committed by another officer on a prisoner. The accused was under a statutory and common law duty to protect the prisoner and his failure to act to prevent the assault may be found to have encouraged the commission of the offence: R. v. Nixon (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1990] 6 W.W.R. 253, 78 C.R. (3d) 349 (B.C.C.A.).

Involvement of party undetermined – This section precludes a requirement of jury unanimity as to the particular nature of the accused's participation in the offence, whether he personally committed the offence or aided or abetted someone else to commit the offence: Thatcher v. The Queen (1987), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 57 C.R. (3d) 97, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 652.

Where, on a charge of murder, evidence shows that the accused acted in concert pursuant to a common motive, there is no requirement that the jury be instructed that if it could not decide which of the accused had administered the fatal beating to the deceased then all must be acquitted. In such circumstances, it is open to the jury to convict all accused as aiders or abettors although the extent of individual participation in the violence is unclear: R. v. Wood (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 201, 33 O.A.C. 260 (C.A.).

Conspiracy – A person may become a party to the offence of conspiracy (as opposed to a participant in the conspiracy) by virtue of this section if for example the accused having learned of the conspiracy at any time prior to the attainment of its object encouraged the conspirators to pursue its object: R. v. McNamara et al. (No. 1) (1981), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), at pp. 452-4.

Relationship to corporate liability – The fact that the acts of an individual accused were at law those of his corporation, which was also charged, for the purpose of imposing liability on the corporation, does not prevent the conviction of the individual accused either as a principal or as a party under this subsection: R. v. Fell (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 456, 131 D.L.R. (3d) 105 (Ont. C.A.).

Subsec. (2) / Application of Charter of Rights – If the offence with which the accused is charged is one of the few for which s. 7 of the Charter requires a minimum degree of mens rea, then Parliament is precluded from providing for the conviction of a party to that offence on the basis of a degree of mens rea below the constitutionally required minimum. Thus, since it has been determined that as a constitutional requirement no one can be convicted of murder unless the Crown proves that the person had subjective foresight of the death of the victim, then a party cannot be convicted on the basis of any lesser mens rea. Similarly, the constitutionally required minimum for attempted murder is subjective foresight of the consequences and so the party to a charge of attempted murder cannot be convicted on any lesser mens rea. To the extent that subsec. (2) would allow for the conviction of a party to the offence of attempted murder or murder on the basis of objective foresight, it is of no force and effect. Accordingly, the words “or ought to have known” in subsec. (2) must be declared inoperative in such a case: R. v. Logan (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 391, 73 D.L.R. (4th) 40, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 731; R. v. Rodney (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 408, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 687, 79 C.R. (3d) 187.

Since there is no constitutional requirement of foresight of death for the offence of manslaughter, liability for that offence may be based on objective liability and the words “or ought to have known” are operative: R. v. Jackson (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 9 C.R. (4th) 57, 51 O.A.C. 92 (Ont. C.A.), affd [1993] 4 S.C.R. 573, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 26 C.R. (4th) 178.

Application of subsection generally – This subsection has no application where the unlawful purpose is the same as the offence charged. This subsection covers the case where, in the absence of aiding and abetting, a person may become a party to an offence committed by another which he knew or ought to have known was a probable consequence of carrying out the unlawful purpose: R. v. Simpson and Ochs (1988), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 62 C.R. (3d) 137, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 3, [1988] 2 W.W.R. 385 (5:0).

This subsection may be resorted to on a possession charge. The liability of the accused is not confined to s. 4(3): R. v. Zanini, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 1, [1967] S.C.R. 715, 2 C.R.N.S. 219 (5:0) where it was also held that an accused may be convicted as a party to the offence committed by his companions notwithstanding the charge against them had been withdrawn.

In a “gang rape” situation it was held that the trial Judge erred in leaving this subsection to the jury where there was no evidence that the accused, although present at the scene, were part of a plan to lure the victim there as part of the motorcycle gang’s initiation rites: Dunlop and Sylvester v. The Queen (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 93, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 881, 8 C.R. (3d) 349 (4:3).

The expression “intention in common” means only that the party and principal must have in mind the same unlawful purpose and does not require proof of a mutuality of motives and desires between them: R. v. Hibbert, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 973, 99 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 40 C.R. (4th) 141.

Liability of party for offence committed by principal – In R. v. Jackson, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 573, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 26 C.R. (4th) 178 the court held that the wording of this subsection did not preclude the conviction of the party of manslaughter although the principal offender was convicted of murder. If the accused party did not foresee the probability of murder by the principal offender, but a reasonable person in all the circumstances would have foreseen at least a risk of harm to another as a result of carrying out the common intention, the party could be found guilty of manslaughter. Liability of manslaughter under this subsection does not depend upon proof that a reasonable person would have foreseen the risk of death. [Note: The holding that the party could be convicted of a different offence than the principal appears to have been based, in part, on the theory that the words “the offence” and “that offence” in subsec. (2) refer not only to the actual offence committed by the principal offender but encompass all included offences. The court had no occasion to consider the reverse situation where it is sought to render the party liable for a more serious offence than the principal. On this latter issue, see the earlier decision in R. v. Hebert (1986), 51 C.R. (3d) 264, 68 N.B.R. (2d) 379 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 76 N.B.R. (2d) 360n, 72 N.R. 79n holding that where the principal was convicted of manslaughter the party could not be convicted of murder under this subsection.]

Abandonment – For the defence of abandonment there must be evidence of timely and reasonable unequivocal notice by the accused to his co-accused of his intention to abandon the common criminal purposes before the crime was committed: R. v. Miller and Cockriell (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 177, 70 D.L.R. (3d) 324 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

The accused was charged with another with murder. The evidence indicated that the co-accused sexually assaulted the victim after he and the accused broke into her house, and then the co-accused strangled and suffocated the victim. In the course of the strangulation the accused told the co-accused to stop as he would kill her. This statement to the co-accused constituted timely notice that the co-accused was from that point on acting on his own and that the accused was not a party to the strangulation and suffocation. Thus even if the accused could be considered a party to the earlier sexual assault by the time of the attempted strangulation he had clearly resiled from any agreement or arrangement with the co-accused and was not party to the suffocation of the victim: R. v. Kirkness (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 1 C.R. (4th) 91 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

Evidence – In Vetrovec v. The Queen; Gaja v. The Queen (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d), 27 C.R. 304, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 811 (9:0) (affirming R. v. Vetrovec (1980), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 537 (B.C.C.A.)) the Supreme Court of Canada had occasion to re-examine the question of the mandatory accomplice warning. The Court held that it is no longer a rule of law that a trial Judge must direct the jury that it is dangerous to act on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. An accomplice is to be treated like any other witness testifying at a criminal trial and the Judge's conduct if he chooses to give his opinion, is governed by the general rules. Thus a Judge may properly consider that he should instruct the jury that in the circumstances the jury should, as a matter of prudence, look for evidence which confirms the story of such a witness. A clear and sharp warning to attract the attention of the juror to the risks of adopting, without more, the evidence of the witness, may be appropriate. The Judge may, as well, properly illustrate from the evidence the kind of evidence which might be drawn upon by the juror in confirmation of the witness' testimony or some important part thereof. This common sense approach applies to other kinds of witnesses such as a disreputable witness of demonstrated moral lack or other situations where corroboration was required at common law. It does not of course apply where corroboration is required by statute as in s. 133.

The trial judge has a discretion to determine whether the evidence of any witness is for some reason untrustworthy to such an extent that a warning to the jury is necessary. However, if a warning is given regarding a particular witness it is not the case that the trial judge must always go on to point out in detail evidence which is capable of corroborating that witness's testimony. While an instruction of that nature may be given in tandem with the clear sharp warning, it is not a requirement in all cases. The extent to which the trial judge should refer to potentially corroborative evidence depends upon the circumstances of the case, although it is not required, nor would it be appropriate, that the potentially corroborative evidence be reviewed exhaustively: R. v. Bevan, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 599, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 310, 21 C.R. (4th) 277.

The so-called co-conspirators exception to the hearsay rule that acts or declarations done in furtherance of a common criminal design are admissible against all the parties thereto applies in all situations where one person is talking or acting on behalf of another and not just when the charge is one of conspiracy: R. v. Koufis, [1941] S.C.R. 481, 76 C.C.C. 161.

PERSON COUNSELLING OFFENCE / Idem / Definition of "counsel".

22. (1) Where a person counsels another person to be a party to an offence and that other person is afterwards a party to that offence, the person who counselled is a party to that offence, notwithstanding that the offence was committed in a way different from that which was counselled.

(2) Every one who counsels another person to be a party to an offence is a party to every offence that the other commits in consequence of the counselling that the person who counselled knew or ought to have known was likely to be committed in consequence of the counselling.

(3) For the purposes of this Act, "counsel" includes procure, solicit or incite. R.S., c. C-34, s. 22; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 7(1).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 464, where the offence counselled is not committed; s. 23.1, as to liability of accused notwithstanding, person counselled cannot be convicted of the offence; s. 53(b), inciting mutiny; s. 56(a), counselling R.C.M.P. member to desert or go absent without leave; s. 62(1)(c), counselling disloyalty, mutiny, etc., of member of military forces.

SYNOPSIS

This section, like s. 21, defines when a person is party to an offence as a result of counselling commission of an offence.

Subsection (3) provides a non-exhaustive definition of counsel stating that it includes procure, solicit or incite.

Subsection (1) requires proof that the person who was counselled by the accused actually was a party to the offence counselled. If that is established, the accused is a party to that offence, even if it is committed in a different way than that suggested by the accused.

Subsection (2) applies when the person counselled commits an additional offence as a consequence of committing the offence originally counselled by the accused. It must be shown that the accused (counsellor) knew or ought to have known that the additional offence was the consequence of counselling the original offence. If the liability of the counselled accused for the additional offence is based on proof of a subjective mental element, it is doubtful that the phrase "or ought to have known" can be relied upon as a basis of liability, as it would impose liability for an objective intent upon the counsellor, which would likely be a violation of the accused's rights under ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter.

ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT / Husband or wife, when not accessory.

23. (1) An accessory after the fact to an offence is one who, knowing that a person has been a party to the offence, receives, comforts or assists that person for the purpose of enabling that person to escape.

(2) No married person whose spouse has been a party to an offence is an accessory after the fact to that offence by receiving, comforting or assisting the spouse for the purpose of enabling the spouse to escape. R.S., c. C-34, s. 23; 1974-75-76, c. 66, s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The punishment and classification of the offence of accessory after the fact is found in s. 463, except for accessory after the fact to murder, see s. 240. The effect of s. 463 is that the accessory's liability depends on the nature of the offence to which he or she is an accessory. For example, an accessory after the fact to the indictable offence of robbery which has a maximum punishment of life imprisonment is by virtue of s. 463(a) guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for 14 years. The mode of trial will be determined by the nature of the offence. For example, an accessory after the fact to robbery will have an election under s. 536(2). Certain offences are, however, within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge pursuant to s. 553(b). For example, accessory after the fact to theft of goods of a value not exceeding one thousand dollars where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of indictment is pursuant to s. 553(b) within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge. Note as well that, by virtue of s. 469(b), the offences of accessory after the fact to high treason, treason or murder may be tried only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2).

Section 23.1, liability of accessory after the fact although person assisted cannot be convicted.

Section 592, indictment of accessory after the fact, whether or not the principal has been indicted, convicted or is amenable to justice.

Section 54, specific offence for assisting, harbouring, etc., deserter or absentee without leave from Canadian Forces and s. 56(b), deserter or absentee without leave of member of R.C.M.P.

SYNOPSIS

It is an offence under this section to be an accessory after the commission of a crime.

The actus reus of the offence is described as receiving, comforting or assisting another after that person has committed an offence. The mental element requires that the accused knew that the person assisted has been a party to an offence and that the acts were done for the purpose of assisting that person to escape. Proof that the acts had the effect of assisting the party to the prior offence to escape is not sufficient.

No one can be convicted as an accessory after the fact if the principal has been acquitted but even if the principal has not been convicted (i.e., has not been found not guilty, but has not been successfully prosecuted either), the accused may be convicted as an accessory after the fact if the prosecution can prove the guilt of the principal.

Section 23(2) exempts a married person who would otherwise be liable as an accessory after the fact to their spouse's offence.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence – Mere failure to disclose the fact that an offence has been committed in his presence does not make the accused an accessory after the fact: R. v. Dumont (1921), 37 C.C.C. 166, 64 D.L.R. 128 (Ont. C.A.); nor does the mere failure to aid in the apprehension of the principal: Young v. The Queen (1950), 98 C.C.C. 195, 10 C.R. 142 (Que. C.A.).

Proof of offence – Evidence by the principal that he pleaded guilty to the offence and was sentenced is admissible against the accessory to prove the principal crime: R. v. Vinette, infra.

The guilty verdict against the principal offender, who did not testify at the accessory's trial and who was appealing his conviction, was not admissible at the accessory's trial: R. v. Hamel (1993), 20 C.R. (4th) 68, [1993] R.J.Q. 999, 55 Q.A.C. 146 (C.A.).

Trial of accessory prior to conviction of principal – An accessory after the fact may not be tried or tender a valid plea of guilty until the principal is convicted, so that if the latter is acquitted the accessory must of necessity be discharged: R. v. Vinette (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1975] 2 S.C.R. 222 (5:0).

In R. v. Anderson (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 255, 26 A.R. 172 (C.A.) the Court held that the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Vinette, supra, was not laying down a rule that an accessory after the fact can never be convicted unless the principal has been convicted but only that if the principal was acquitted, the accessory must be acquitted and that a plea of guilty by an accessory is improper if the principal has not been convicted. Accordingly, an accessory after the fact can be convicted, notwithstanding there is no evidence the principal was convicted, if the Crown proves that the principal committed the offence. Further, in tendering such proof, any evidence that is admissible against the principal is admissible against the accessory.

A similar conclusion was reached in R. v. McAvoy (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 95, 21 C.R. (3d) 305 (Ont. C.A.) where the Court noted that in R. v. Vinette, supra, there had been no mention of the provisions of s. 592.

Similarly in R. v. Camponi (1993), 82 C.C.C. (3d) 506, 22 C.R. (4th) 348, 48 W.A.C. 71 (B.C.C.A.). It was held that, especially in light of s. 23.1, the accessory could be convicted although the charge against the principal offender has been stayed.

WHERE ONE PARTY CANNOT BE CONVICTED.

23.1 For greater certainty, sections 21 to 23 apply in respect of an accused notwithstanding the fact that the person whom the accused aids or abets, counsels or procures or receives, comforts or assists cannot be convicted of the offence. R.S.C. 1985, c. 24 (2nd Supp.), s. 45

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 592, indictment of accessory after the fact, whether or not the principal has been indicted, convicted or is amenable to justice.

SYNOPSIS

This section has been recently added to the Criminal Code to clarify that an accused may be convicted under ss. 21 to 23 even if the principal whom the accused aids, abets, counsels or in relation to whose offence the accused is an accessory after the fact cannot be convicted. Examples of circumstances under which the other accused may not be convicted would be if the person is under 12 years or is not guilty by reason of insanity.

ATTEMPTS / Question of law.

24. (1) Every one who, having an intent to commit an offence, does or omits to do anything for the purpose of carrying out his intention is guilty of an attempt to commit the offence whether or not it was possible under the circumstances to commit the offence.

(2) The question whether an act or omission by a person who has an intent to commit an offence is or is not mere preparation to commit the offence, and too remote to constitute an attempt to commit the offence, is a question of law. R.S. c. C-34, s. 24.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The punishment and classification of the offence of attempt is found in s. 463, except for certain offences such as attempted murder, see s. 239. Certain other substantive offences resemble attempts such as treason and high treason, s. 46, 47; mutiny, s. 53; attempt to influence municipal official, s. 123; bribery of judicial officers, members of Parliament or the legislature, s. 119; bribery of other officers, s. 120; obstruct justice, s. 139. These provisions set out the classification and punishment for the offence. The effect of s. 463 for other attempt offences is that the accused's liability depends on the nature of the offence which he attempted to commit. For example, robbery has a maximum punishment of life imprisonment and, thus, by virtue of s. 463(a), a person convicted of attempted robbery is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for 14 years. The mode of trial will be determined by the nature of the offence. For example, an accused charged with attempted robbery will have an election under s. 536(2). Certain offences are, however, within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge pursuant to s. 553(b). For example, attempted theft of goods of a value not exceeding one thousand dollars where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of indictment is pursuant to s. 553(b) within the absolute jurisdiction of a provincial court judge. Note as well that, by virtue of s. 469(d), an attempt to commit the offences in ss. 47, 49, 51, 53, 61, 74, and 75 may be tried only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2). Thus, attempted murder is not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction and the accused has his election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). The offence described by s. 119 which includes attempt to obtain a bribe (subsec. (1)(a)(iii)) where the accused is the holder of a judicial office, can only be tried by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction by virtue of s. 469(c).

Sections 660 and 661 make provision for conviction of an accused for attempt where the full offence is charged, and conviction of the accused for the attempt charged although the full offence is proved.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates liability for attempting to commit an offence regardless of whether it was factually possible to commit.

Subsection (1) sets out that it must be proven that the accused intended to commit an offence and did or attempted to do anything for the purpose of committing that offence. The mens rea for the offence of attempt will vary with the mental element required to commit the full offence attempted.

A vexing aspect of this section is determining whether the acts of the accused have progressed beyond mere preparation to commit the offence to an attempt to commit it. It is not necessary to show that the accused's acts were unlawful. Subsection (2) states that whether the acts done by an accused proven to have the requisite mens rea, constitutes an attempt or mere preparation is a question of law and is therefore to be determined by a judge. However, it is no defence, if the acts were done with intention, that the offence could not be committed only because the would-be victim of the offence (for example in a case of fraud or public mischief) was not deceived by the acts.

ANNOTATIONS

Distinction between preparation and attempt – In R. v. Cline (1956), 115 C.C.C. 18, 24 C.R. 58 (Ont. C.A.), the Court substituted a conviction of an attempt to commit the offence charged. The Court said that there can be no general test to distinguish attempt from preparation, but laid down the following propositions:

1. There must be both mens rea and an actus reus to constitute a criminal attempt, but the criminality of misconduct lay mainly in the intention of the accused.
2. Evidence of similar acts done by the accused before the offence with which he is charged, and also afterwards, if not too remote in time, was admissible to establish a pattern of conduct from which the Court might properly find mens rea.
3. Such evidence might be advanced in the case for the prosecution without waiting for the defence to raise a specific issue.
4. It was not essential that the actus reus be a crime or a tort or even a moral wrong or social mischief.
5. The actus reus must be more than mere preparation to commit a crime.
6. But when the preparation was fully complete and ended, the next step done by the accused for the purpose and with the intention of committing a specific crime constituted an actus reus sufficient in law to establish a criminal attempt to commit that crime.

Where the accused's intention is otherwise proved, acts which on the face are equivocal may none the less be sufficiently proximate to constitute an attempt. However, where there is no such extrinsic evidence as to the accused's intent acts which on the face are equivocal may be insufficient to show the acts were done with intent to commit the crime charged: R. v. Sorrell and Bondett (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 9 (Ont. C.A.).

No satisfactory general criterion can be formulated for drawing a line between preparation and attempt. The application of the distinction to the facts of a particular case must be left to common-sense judgment. The distinction is essentially a qualitative one, involving the relationship between the nature and quality of the act in question and the nature of the complete offence, although consideration must necessarily be given, in making that qualitative distinction, to the relative proximity of the act in question to what would have been the completed offence, in terms of time, location and acts under the control of the accused remaining to be accomplished. While relative proximity may give an act which might otherwise appear to be mere preparation the quality of an attempt, an act which on its face is an act of commission, does not lose its quality as the actus reus of attempt because further acts were required or because a significant period of time may have to elapse before the completion of the offence: Deutsch v. The Queen (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 52 C.R. (3d) 305, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 2 (5:0).

"Impossible" attempt – To sustain an attempt theft charge the Crown is not required to prove what the accused intended to steal or that it would have been possible to complete the theft: R. v. Gagnon, (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 339 (Que. C.A.).

It is no bar to a conviction for an attempt that the acts went beyond mere preparation and were fully carried out although in circumstances which did not amount to the full offence, as on a charge of fraud where proof of the full offence failed because the "victim" was not in fact deceived by the accused's act: Detering v. The Queen (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 31 C.R. (3d) 354, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 583 (7:0).

Protection of Persons Administering and Enforcing the Law

PROTECTION OF PERSONS ACTING UNDER AUTHORITY / Idem / When not protected / When protected / Power in case of escape from penitentiary.

25. (1) Every one who is required or authorized by law to do anything in the administration or enforcement of the law

- (a) as a private person,
- (b) as a peace officer or public officer,
- (c) in aid of a peace officer or public officer, or
- (d) by virtue of his office, is, if he acts on reasonable grounds, justified in doing what he is required or authorized to do and in using as much force as is necessary for that purpose.

(2) Where a person is required or authorized by law to execute a process or to carry out a sentence, that person or any person who assists him is, if that person acts in good faith, justified in executing the process or in carrying out the sentence notwithstanding that the process or sentence is defective or that it was issued or imposed without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction.

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), a person is not justified for the purposes of subsection (1) in using force that is intended or is likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm unless the person believes on reasonable grounds that it is necessary for the self-preservation of the person or the preservation of any one under that person's protection from death or grievous bodily harm.

(4) A peace officer, and every person lawfully assisting the peace officer, is justified in using force that is intended or is likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm to a person to be arrested, if

- (a) the peace officer is proceeding lawfully to arrest, with or without warrant, the person to be arrested;
- (b) the offence for which the person is to be arrested is one for which that person may be arrested without warrant;
- (c) the person to be arrested takes flight to avoid arrest;
- (d) the peace officer or other person using the force believes on reasonable grounds that the force is necessary for the purpose of protecting the peace officer, the person lawfully assisting the peace officer or any other person from imminent or future death or grievous bodily harm; and
- (e) the flight cannot be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

(5) A peace officer is justified in using force that is intended or is likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm against an inmate who is escaping from a penitentiary within the meaning of subsection 2(1) of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, if

- (a) the peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that any of the inmates of the penitentiary poses a threat of death or grievous bodily harm to the peace officer or any other person; and
  - (b) the escape cannot be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.
- R.S., c. C-34, s. 25; 1994, c. 12, s. 1.

Definition of “peace officer” and “public officer”, s. 2.

As to power of arrest of private citizen, see s. 494, and peace officer, s. 495.

The following provisions also define circumstances where a person is required or authorized to use force: s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain offences; s. 30, use of force to prevent breach of peace; s. 31, arrest by peace officer of person in breach of peace; s. 32, 33, use of force to suppress riot; ss. 34, 35, 37, self-defence; s. 37, defence of persons under protection; ss. 38 to 42, defence of property; s. 43, use of force by way of correction; s. 44, use of force by master of ship.

Also see the following: s. 26, liability of person for excessive force; s. 28, protection of persons executing and assisting in execution of warrant; s. 29, also note requirement that person have possession of the warrant or other process; s. 45, protection from liability for surgical operations.

Section 31 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, gives persons, authorized to exercise a power to do or enforce the doing of any act or thing, ancillary powers necessary to do the act or thing. Section 31 has, however, been strictly construed where the statutory power would encroach on the common law rights of the property owner. Thus, a former provision of the Criminal Code, which authorized police officers to seize firearms in certain circumstances, did not imply the right to enter and search private property: Colet v. The Queen (1981), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 105 (S.C.C.). However, compare R. v. Lyons (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 417, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 633, where reference was made to s. 31 as confirmation that the authority to intercept private communications included the power to enter private premises to install the electronic device where such entry was necessary to implement the authorization granted under Part VI. Section 24 of the Interpretation Act provides for the exercise of powers by a successor in office.

SYNOPSIS

This section establishes protection from liability for certain persons acting under authority.

Subsection (1) provides justification for the actions of any of the persons listed in paras. (a) to (d), if the additional requirements of the subsection are met. The person must be either required or authorized by law to do anything in relation to the administration or enforcement of the law. The requirement or authorization may be found in either statute or common law. In addition, it must be shown that the specified person acted on reasonable grounds and used only as much force as was necessary to achieve that purpose. If the actions of the person exceed the scope of activities authorized or required by law or the force used was more than that which was necessary to achieve that protected purpose, this subsection will not apply to exclude liability. However, to understand the scope of the provision as it applies to peace officers, it must be read together with subsecs. (3) and (4).

Subsection (2) protects a person acting in good faith who was executing process or carrying out a sentence, if authorized or required to do so. This protection will apply, even if the sentence or the process is determined to have been defective or without effect for any of the reasons noted in the subsection. The protection also extends to those who assist the authorized person in carrying out these functions.

Subsection (3) both provides an exception to the scope of protection conferred by the section and is itself subject to an exception in subsec. (4) and (5). It limits the type of harm which may be inflicted under the protection of the section, by excluding the use of force intended to or likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm unless the person believes, on reasonable grounds, that such force must be used to protect himself or a person under his protection from death or grievous bodily harm. The application of the subsection is to take account of the circumstances in which the force is used and it is not required that a person in such a situation weigh the force used with precision. The phrase "grievous bodily harm" has been held to mean serious hurt or pain.

Subsection (4) permits a peace officer and persons lawfully assisting the officer to use force, that is intended or likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm, to prevent flight from a lawful arrest provided that the conditions in the subsection are met. Those conditions include that the arrest is lawful, the offence is one for which the person can be arrested without a warrant, the flight cannot be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner and the peace officer or person assisting believes on reasonable grounds that the force is necessary for the purpose of protecting the peace officer, the person assisting the officer or any other person from "imminent or future death or grievous bodily harm".

Subsection (5) is a special provision permitting use of force that is intended or likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm to prevent an escape from a penitentiary. However, the officer must believe on reasonable grounds that any of the inmates poses a threat of death or grievous bodily harm to the officer or any other person and the escape cannot be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

ANNOTATIONS

Use of force in enforcement or administration of law – An analysis of the justification of a peace officer's apprehension of a citizen who he has been informed was going to commit a crime is found in Kennedy v. Tomlinson et al. (1959), 126 C.C.C. 175, 20 D.L.R. (2d) 273 (Ont. C.A.).

In Eccles v. Bourque et al. (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 27 C.R.N.S. 325 (S.C.C.), four members of the Court (the other five members specifically declining to express any view) held that this section does not authorize a forcible trespass on private property to effect a lawful arrest under s. 495 of the Criminal Code, since that subsection authorizes a peace officer to make an arrest, not to commit a trespass. The full Court held, however, that such a forcible trespass is lawful at common law provided that there are reasonable and probable grounds for the belief that the person sought is within the premises and that proper announcement is made prior to entry.

This section does not permit a police officer to use as much force as necessary to generally carry out the lawful execution of his duty. Thus, while an officer has a duty to investigate crimes and question citizens, this section does not give him the right to detain the person or to use force for that purpose short of arrest: R. v. O'Donnell; R. v. Cluett

The words “grievous bodily harm” in subsec. (3) mean serious hurt or pain. Moreover, in determining the availability of the defence under this section the jury must be directed to have regard to the circumstances as they existed at the time the force was used, keeping in mind that the officer could not be expected to measure the force used with exactitude: R. v. Bottrell (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 211, 22 C.R. (3d) 371 (B.C.C.A.).

In the absence of a specific statutory exemption, a police officer, pursuing a person suspected of committing a criminal offence, is not insulated from liability for the offence of failing to stop at a stop sign contrary to the Highway Traffic Act (Ont.). Assuming that this section could apply, the issue is not whether the officer was required or authorized by law to apprehend the suspect but, rather, whether he was required or authorized by law to drive through the stop sign without stopping. There is no common law authority in a constable which would give him immunity wider than that provided by this section: R. v. Brennan (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 366, 75 C.R. (3d) 38, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 161 (Ont. C.A.).

Subsec. (2)—The defence under this subsection is distinct from the defence of obedience to or in conformity with the law in force at the time and in the place of commission of the offence and was therefore available to a person charged with war crimes or crimes against humanity, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 7(3.74). Unless the law was manifestly illegal, the police officer must obey and implement that law and, if it turns out that the officer has followed an illegal order, he may plead the defence under this subsection just as a military officer may properly put forth the defence of obedience to superior orders under certain limited conditions. However, an officer acting pursuant to a manifestly unlawful order or law would not be able to defend his actions on the grounds they were justified under this subsection: R. v. Finta, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 701, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 28 C.R. (4th) 265 (S.C.C.).

Use of force where person takes flight / Subsec. (4) – Note: the cases noted below were decided under the predecessor to this section which allowed the use of as much force as necessary to prevent the escape, unless the escape could not be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

In deciding in a particular case whether a police officer had used more force than is authorized by subsec. (4), general statements as to the duty to take care to avoid injury to others made in civil negligence cases cannot be accepted as applicable without reservation. The performance of the duty imposed upon police officers to arrest may, at times and of necessity, involve risk or injury to other members of the community. Such risk, in the absence of a negligent or unreasonable exercise of such duty, is imposed by the statute and any resulting damage is, damnum sine injuria: Priestman v. Colangelo and Smythson (1959), 124 C.C.C. 1, [1959] S.C.R. 615 (3:2).

A peace officer who had lawful authority to arrest a person in one province under s. 495 and is in fresh pursuit of that person retains for the purposes of subsec. (4) his status of a peace officer even where the pursuit takes him into an adjoining province: Roberge v. The Queen (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 304, 33 C.R. (3d) 289, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 312 (7:0).

EXCESSIVE FORCE.

26. Every one who is authorized by law to use force is criminally responsible for any excess thereof according to the nature and quality of the act that constitutes the excess. R.S., c. C-34, s. 26.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A number of provisions authorize the use of force in carrying out duties under the law, to prevent commission of offences or in defence of oneself or others, such as the following: s. 25, use of force by person required or authorized by law to do anything in the administration or enforcement of the law [e.g., to effect an arrest under s. 494 or 495]; s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain offences; s. 30, use of force to prevent breach of peace; s. 31, arrest by peace officer of person in breach of peace; ss. 32, 33, use of force to suppress riot; ss. 34, 35, 37, self-defence; s. 37, defence of persons under protection; ss. 38 to 42, defence of property; s. 43, use of force by way of correction; s. 44, use of force by master of ship.

SYNOPSIS

This section imposes criminal liability for the use of force in excess of that authorized by law. Thus, it has been held that if one exceeds the force permitted by s. 27 or the force permitted as self-defence under s. 34, the excess force which results in death will be murder and not considered reduced to manslaughter.

ANNOTATIONS

It now seems clear as a result of a series of cases in the Supreme Court of Canada: R. v. Gee (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 516, 29 C.R. (3d) 347, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 286; R. v. Faid (1983), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 513, 33 C.R. (3d) 1, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 265; Brisson v. The Queen (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 29 C.R. (3d) 289, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 227 and Reilly v. The Queen (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 42 C.R. (3d) 154 (S.C.C.) (6:0), that there does not exist in Canada a qualified defence of excessive force in self-defence or in preventing the commission of an offence which would have the effect of reducing murder to manslaughter. If the accused has used excessive force so that the defence provided by s. 34 or s. 27 is not available, then absent any other defence, the accused is liable to be convicted of murder. The evidence led in self-defence may however support a defence of provocation or negative the specific intent for murder in which case the proper verdict would be manslaughter.

In R. v. Bayard (1988), 29 B.C.L.R. (2d) 366, 92 N.R. 376 (C.A.) the majority of the court ordered a new trial on a Crown appeal from the accused's acquittal on murder and conviction for manslaughter on the basis, inter alia, that the trial judge had misdirected the jury as to the effect of excessive force in self defence. Lambert J.A., dissenting, was of the view that the impugned instructions related solely to s. 34(1) which could not apply if the accused had the intent for murder. If, however, he did not have the intent to kill and used no more force than necessary, then, pursuant to that subsection, the accused would be acquitted. If, however, he did use more force than was necessary then, in fact, the verdict should be manslaughter. On appeal by the accused to the Supreme Court of Canada, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 425, 70 C.R. (3d) 95, [1989] 5 W.W.R. 121, 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 1, 92 N.R. 376, the appeal was allowed and the accused's conviction for manslaughter restored substantially for the dissenting reasons of Lambert J.A.

USE OF FORCE TO PREVENT COMMISSION OF OFFENCE.

27. Every one is justified in using as much force as is reasonably necessary

(a) to prevent the commission of an offence

(i) for which, if it were committed, the person who committed it might be arrested without warrant, and

(ii) that would be likely to cause immediate and serious injury to the person or property of anyone; or

(b) to prevent anything being done that, on reasonable grounds, he believes would, if it were done, be an offence mentioned in paragraph (a). R.S., c. C-34, s. 27.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In most cases, the determination of whether or not the person, "might be arrested without warrant", will be determined by reference to ss. 494 and 495 which authorizes warrantless arrest by anyone and by a peace officer, respectively. The most important power is that provided by s. 494(1)(a) which authorizes the arrest of a person found committing an indictable offence. Virtually all offences which would be likely to cause immediate and serious injury to person or property will constitute indictable offences, bearing in mind that even Crown-option offences are deemed to be indictable offences by s. 34(1)(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

In many circumstances, the use of force will be authorized not only by this section but the self-defence and defence of property provisions set out in ss. 34 to 42.

Section 26 renders the person liable for any excessive use of force.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides authorization for the use of force to prevent the commission of specified types of offences or to prevent anything that might lead to the commission of such offences.

Section 27(a) permits the use of such force by any one as is reasonably necessary to prevent the commission of certain types of offences under the circumstances outlined in section 27(a)(i) and (ii). This paragraph may be applied to any person, as contrasted with provisions such as s. 28 which can be relied upon only by a person authorized to execute process. In addition, it should be noted that the amount of force used will be judged by an objective standard as denoted by the term “reasonably necessary”. Section 27(a)(i) limits the type of offence to those for which a person may be arrested without warrant. The criteria in s. 27(a)(ii) must also be met, namely that the offence, if committed, would be likely to cause immediate and serious injury to either a person or property. Again, it should be noted that the likelihood of the result is to be judged on an objective basis and the harm feared must be immediate and serious.

Section 27(b) permits an element of the accused’s subjective beliefs to be incorporated but only if those beliefs are reasonable on an objective basis.

ARREST OF WRONG PERSON / Person assisting.

28. (1) Where a person who is authorized to execute a warrant to arrest believes, in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds, that the person who he arrests is the person named in the warrant, he is protected from criminal responsibility in respect thereof to the same extent as if that person were the person named in the warrant.

(2) Where a person is authorized to execute a warrant to arrest,

(a) every one who, being called on to assist him, believes that the person in whose arrest he is called on to assist is the person named in the warrant, and

(b) every keeper of a prison who is required to receive and detain a person who he believes has been arrested under the warrant, is protected from criminal responsibility in respect thereof to the same extent as if that person were the person named in the warrant. R.S., c. C-34, s. 28.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This provision, in and of itself, does not authorize the use of force but merely deals with the case of mistake in execution of the warrant. The use of force to arrest is dealt with primarily under s. 25 and see notes under that section. Section 29 requires the person executing a warrant to have it with him where feasible and prescribes other duties. In addition, s. 10 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms requires a police officer to inform the arrestee of the reason for the arrest and of his right to counsel. See notes under s. 10 of the Charter of Rights, infra. As to where an arrest warrant may be exercised, see ss. 514, 703 and 528. An accused who was illegally arrested and in the course of the arrest killed the person attempting to effect the arrest, may, in some circumstances, have a defence of provocation under s. 232(4) or self-defence under s. 34. The offence of resisting or obstructing a peace officer, public officer, or person in the lawful execution of process is found in s. 129. The offences of assault with intent to resist arrest and assault of an officer in the execution of duty are in s. 270. The offence of misconduct by officers executing process is found in s. 128.

SYNOPSIS

Section 28 creates a limited exemption from criminal liability for persons who are authorized to execute arrest warrants and mistakenly arrest the wrong person or keep such wrongfully arrested person in custody.

It must be shown that the mistake of identity was made in good faith and on reasonable grounds.

Section 28(2) provides protection for those who assist the person making the mistaken arrest or detain such wrongfully arrested person on the same basis as if the person arrested was the person sought. As with s. 28(1), the person making the arrest must have been authorized to execute an arrest warrant. Section 28(2)(a) deals with the person who assists in the arrest after being called upon to do so. The assistant must believe that the person whom he is asked to help arrest is the person sought. This is a much lower standard of belief than that applied in s. 28(1); it need not be based on reasonable and probable grounds. Section 28(2)(b) protects the keeper of a prison, if the keeper has a subjective belief that the person he is asked to detain has been arrested under a warrant.

DUTY OF PERSON ARRESTING / Notice / Failure to comply.

29. (1) It is the duty of every one who executes a process or warrant to have it with him, where it is feasible to do so, and to produce it when requested to do so.

(2) It is the duty of every one who arrests a person, whether with or without a warrant, to give notice to that person, where it is feasible to do so, of

- (a) the process or warrant under which he makes the arrest; or
- (b) the reason for the arrest.

(3) Failure to comply with subsection (1) or (2) does not of itself deprive a person who executes a process or warrant, or a person who makes an arrest, or those who assist them, of protection from criminal responsibility. R.S., c. C-34, s. 29.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Subsec. (1) – This provision, in and of itself, does not authorize the use of force. The use of force to arrest is dealt with primarily under s. 25 and see notes under that section. Section 28 deals with the case of mistake in execution of an arrest warrant. As to where an arrest warrant may be exercised, see ss. 514, 703 and 528. As to execution of a search warrant, see s. 487, search warrant; s. 487.1, tele-warrants; s. 488, time of execution; s. 488.1, execution of warrant at lawyer's office; s. 489, seizure of other items; s. 462.32, proceeds of crime. As to search warrants for weapons etc., see s. 103. An accused who was illegally arrested and, in the course of the arrest, killed the person attempting to effect the arrest may, in some circumstances, have a defence of provocation under s. 232(4) or self-defence under s. 34. The offence of misconduct by officers executing process is found in s. 128.

Subsec. (2) – In addition to the duties prescribed by this subsection, s. 10 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms requires a police officer to inform the arrestee of the reason for the arrest and of his right to counsel. See notes under s. 10 of the Charter of Rights, infra. The power of arrest is also circumscribed by other provisions of the Charter, see especially notes under s. 9 of the Charter of Rights. Arrest without warrant is authorized by a number of sections: s. 31, breach of the peace; s. 33, arrest of rioters; s. 101, arrest for weapons offences; s. 199(2), arrest of inmates of disorderly house; s. 494, arrest by any person for certain criminal offences; s. 495, arrest by peace officer for criminal offences; s. 524(2), arrest by peace officer of accused on interim release. The offence of resisting or obstructing a peace officer, public officer, or person in the lawful execution of process is found in s. 129. The offences of assault with intent to resist arrest and assault of an officer in the execution of duty are in s. 270.

SYNOPSIS

This section outlines the duties imposed upon those who execute process or make an arrest, and states the effect of non-compliance with the section.

Section 29(1) states that it is the duty of a person executing a process or warrant to have a copy of such document with him. In addition, such document must be shown if a request is made to see it. Both requirements apply only if it is feasible to comply with them.

Section 29(2) sets out the duty of a person making an arrest with or without warrant. The requirements are that the person being arrested is to be told of the process or warrant permitting the arrest or the reason for the arrest. As with s. 29(1), the duties apply only when feasible. These duties are supplemented by the requirements in s. 10 of the Charter.

Section 29(3) spells out that non-compliance with either of the foregoing subsections does not by itself deprive the person making the arrest, executing process, or those who assist such persons, of the protection from criminal responsibility conferred elsewhere under the Criminal Code (see, for example, s. 28).

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – An officer executing a search warrant is required to have the warrant with her. Where, however, the officer forgot to bring the warrant through inadvertence and the accused consented to the search commencing while the warrant was being brought to his home, then it was not shown that the search was unlawful: R. v. B.(J.E.) (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 224 (N.S.C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – The provisions of this subsection are to be read disjunctively, so that when an arrest is being made without possession of a warrant, but pursuant thereto, the duty of the arresting officer is fully discharged by telling the arrested person that the reason for his arrest is the existence of an outstanding warrant. The arresting officer is under no duty to obtain the warrant or ascertain its contents to tell the accused: Gamracy v. The Queen (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 209, [1974] S.C.R. 640 (3:2) where Ritchie, J., writing the major decision also held that the leading British case in this area, Christie et al. v. Leachinsky, [1947] 1 All E.R. 567 (H.L.) was of no assistance in interpreting s. 29.

PREVENTING BREACH OF PEACE.

30. Every one who witnesses a breach of the peace is justified in interfering to prevent the continuance or renewal thereof and may detain any person who commits or is about to join in or to renew the breach of the peace, for the purpose of giving him into the custody of a peace officer, if he uses no more force than is reasonably necessary to prevent the continuance or renewal of the breach of the peace or than is reasonably proportioned to the danger to be apprehended from the continuance or renewal of the breach of the peace. R.S., c. C-34, s. 30.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 31 authorizes a peace officer to receive into custody a person detained under this section. This section does not itself create an offence, however, a provincial court judge would appear to still have a common law power to bind a person over to keep the peace. See notes under s. 810, infra. There are also other provisions of the Criminal Code which may apply to conduct amounting to breach of the peace. See s. 49, breach of the peace in presence of Her Majesty; s. 175, causing a disturbance. A breach of the peace may escalate into an unlawful assembly or a riot, in which case see ss. 32, 33 and 63 to 69.

ARREST FOR BREACH OF PEACE / Giving person in charge.

31. (1) Every peace officer who witnesses a breach of the peace and every one who lawfully assists the peace officer is justified in arresting any person whom he finds committing the breach of the peace or who, on reasonable grounds, he believes is about to join in or renew the breach of the peace.

(2) Every peace officer is justified in receiving into custody any person who is given into his charge as having been a party to a breach of the peace by one who has, or who on reasonable grounds the peace officer believes has, witnessed the breach of the peace. R.S., c. C-34, s. 31.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Peace officer" is defined in s. 2. Section 30 authorizes a citizen to detain a person for breach of the peace. Neither this section nor s. 30 create an offence, however, a provincial court judge would appear to still have a common law power to bind a person over to keep the peace. See notes under s. 810, infra. There are also other provisions of the Criminal Code which may apply to conduct amounting to breach of the peace. See s. 49, breach of the peace in presence of Her Majesty; s. 175, causing a disturbance. A breach of the peace may escalate into an unlawful assembly or a riot, in which case see ss. 32, 33 and 63 to 69. As to use of force in effecting an arrest, see s. 25 and notes thereunder. As to duty of peace officer when effecting an arrest, see s. 29. The offence of resisting or obstructing a peace officer is found in s. 129. The offences of assault with intent to resist arrest and assault of an officer in the execution of duty are in s. 270.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – In Blanchard v. Galbraith (1966), 10 Crim. L.Q. 122 (Man. Q.B.), the plaintiff claimed damages for false imprisonment when in a belligerent and defiant manner he accepted gaol on being given the alternative of returning to his hotel room by an R.C.M.P. constable who was endeavouring to disperse a group of loiterers outside a location that was a known town trouble spot. Hall, J., dismissed the action with costs for the defendant R.C.M.P. officers, holding that it was the plain duty of peace officers to act in anticipation of, and thereby prevent breaches of the peace, and the plaintiff's refusal by inviting arrest amounted to obstruction in the discharge of the arresting officer's duty.

Although there is no offence in Canada of breach of the peace, this section does give the police officer a power to arrest anyone for breach of the peace and resisting such an arrest may be the basis for a charge under s. 129. This section is a form of preventive remedy either through arrest for not more than 24 hours or a peace bond at common law: R. v. Lefebvre (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 241 (B.C. Co. Ct.), affirmed 15 C.C.C. (3d) 503 (B.C.C.A.).

Although this subsection is confined to breaches of the peace that have actually taken place, there is a common law power for a peace officer to arrest without a warrant where the officer honestly and reasonably believes that such a breach will be committed in the immediate future: Hayes v. Thompson et al. (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 254, 44 C.R. (3d) 316, [1985] 3 W.W.R. 366 (B.C.C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – The word "justified" in subsec. (2) gives lawful sanction to the actions of an officer who receives into his custody any person who is given into his charge as having been a party to a breach of the peace by a person who he reasonably believes has witnessed a breach of the peace. The officer is then in the execution of his duty and an accused may be convicted of the offence under s. 129(a) if he resists this officer notwithstanding his acquittal on the charge for which he was originally arrested: R. v. Biron (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 513, [1976] S.C.R. 56 (5:3).

Suppression of Riots

USE OF FORCE TO SUPPRESS RIOT / Person bound by military law / Obeying order of peace officer / Apprehension of serious mischief / Question of law.

32. (1) Every peace officer is justified in using or in ordering the use of as much force as the peace officer believes, in good faith and on reasonable grounds,

(a) is necessary to suppress a riot; and

- (b) is not excessive, having regard to the danger to be apprehended from the continuance of the riot.
- (2) Every one who is bound by military law to obey the command of his superior officer is justified in obeying any command given by his superior officer for the suppression of a riot unless the order is manifestly unlawful.
- (3) Every one is justified in obeying an order of a peace officer to use force to suppress a riot if
- (a) he acts in good faith; and
  - (b) the order is not manifestly unlawful.
- (4) Every one who, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, believes that serious mischief will result from a riot before it is possible to secure the attendance of a peace officer is justified in using as much force as he believes in good faith and on reasonable grounds,
- (a) is necessary to suppress the riot; and
  - (b) is not excessive, having regard to the danger to be apprehended from the continuance of the riot.
- (5) For the purposes of this section, the question whether an order is manifestly unlawful or not is a question of law. R.S., c. C-34, s. 32.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Peace officer” and “military law” are defined by s. 2. Section 33 sets out the duties of peace officers and others, where rioters do not disperse after a proclamation has been read under s. 67 or an offence committed under s. 68. The offence of resisting or obstructing a peace officer is found in s. 129. The offences of assault with intent to resist arrest and assault of an officer in the execution of duty are in s. 270. Section 26 makes a person liable for excessive force. Also see s. 25 as to use of force generally in acting to enforce the law.

SYNOPSIS

This section and s. 33 have the combined effect of protecting specified categories of persons who seek to suppress a riot.

Section 32(1) applies only to peace officers. It justifies the use of force, or ordering others to use it to suppress a riot. The officer will be protected if he had both good faith and reasonable grounds for believing that the other requirements of the subsection were met. They are that the force used was necessary to suppress a riot and that it was not excessive considering the danger perceived if the riot continued.

Section 32(2) applies to those who are bound by military law to obey the orders of a superior officer. It justifies obeying an order by such superior to suppress a riot. However, the protection is removed if the order was manifestly unlawful.

Section 32(3) justifies the actions of anyone obeying the orders of a peace officer to suppress a riot, if the other conditions of the section are met. It must be shown that the person obeying the order acts in good faith. In addition, the subsection limits protection to those circumstances in which the order of the peace officer is not manifestly unlawful.

Section 32(5) states that the determination of whether an order was manifestly unlawful is a question of law.

Section 32(4) permits a person to act to suppress a riot under certain stringent conditions. It must be shown that the person believes in good faith and on reasonable grounds that a peace officer cannot be brought to the scene in time to prevent serious mischief from a riot. The remaining requirements of this subsection are the same as those imposed upon peace officers under s. 32(1).

ANNOTATIONS

It was held in Hebert v. Martin (1930), 54 C.C.C. 257, [1931] S.C.R. 145, [1931] 2

D.L.R. 484 that the taking of life can only be justified by the necessity to disperse a riotous crowd which is dangerous unless dispersed and a police officer was not liable civilly for the death of a person when he had good reason to fear danger to his own life.

In Martin's 1955 Criminal Code, the 1911 opinion of the Attorney General of England is quoted as to the use of force by the military when called upon to aid civil authorities. In particular, it was the opinion of the law officer that the military may not use lethal weapons to prevent or suppress minor disorders or offences of a less serious character, and in no case should they do so if less extreme measures will suffice. Should it be necessary for the military to use extreme measures, they should, whenever possible, give sufficient warning of their intention.

DUTY OF OFFICERS IF RIOTERS DO NOT DISPERSE / Protection of officers /
Section not restrictive.

33. (1) Where the proclamation referred to in section 67 has been made or an offence against paragraph 68(a) or (b) has been committed, it is the duty of a peace officer and of a person who is lawfully required by him to assist, to disperse or to arrest persons who do not comply with the proclamation.

(2) No civil or criminal proceedings lie against a peace officer or a person who is lawfully required by a peace officer to assist him in respect of any death or injury that by reason of resistance is caused as a result of the performance by the peace officer or that person of a duty that is imposed by subsection (1).

(3) Nothing in this section limits or affects any powers, duties or functions that are conferred or imposed by this Act with respect to the suppression of riots. R.S., c. C-34, s. 33.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Peace officer" is defined in s. 2. This section is complementary to ss. 67 to 69 which deal with providing for the reading of a proclamation to disperse a riotous assembly. The unlawful assembly offences and riot offences are found in ss. 63 to 66. Section 32 authorizes the use of force to suppress a riot. The offence of resisting or obstructing a peace officer is found in s. 129. The offences of assault with intent to resist arrest and assault of an officer in the execution of duty are in s. 270. Section 26 makes a person liable for excessive force. Also see s. 25 as to use of force generally in acting to enforce the law.

SYNOPSIS

Section 33 states the duties of peace officers and those lawfully required to assist them if a crowd fails to disperse following the reading of the proclamation under s. 67 of the Criminal Code (the "riot act") or if an offence under s. 68 is committed (which relates to the prevention of or interference with the reading of the "riot act" or the failure to disperse after it is read). In addition, subsec. (3) explicitly provides that this section does not limit any powers conferred elsewhere in the Criminal Code in relation to the suppression of riots.

Section 33(1) imposes a duty upon peace officers or those lawfully required to assist them to disperse or arrest those who fail to disperse after the proclamation is read or an offence under s. 68 is committed.

Section 33(2) protects persons carrying out the duties imposed by subsec. (1) from civil or criminal liability if death or injury results from the resistance to the carrying out of those duties.

Self-induced Intoxication

WHEN DEFENCE NOT AVAILABLE / Criminal fault by reason of intoxication / Application.

33.1. (1) It is not a defence to an offence referred to in subsection (3) that the accused, by reason of self-induced intoxication, lacked the general intent or the voluntariness required to commit the offence, where the accused departed markedly from the standard of care as described in subsection (2).

(2) For the purposes of this section, a person departs markedly from the standard of reasonable care generally recognized in Canadian society and is thereby criminally at fault where the person, while in a state of self-induced intoxication that renders the person unaware of, or incapable of consciously controlling, their behaviour, voluntarily or involuntarily interferes or threatens to interfere with the bodily integrity of another person.

(3) This section applies in respect of an offence under this Act or any other Act of Parliament that includes as an element an assault or any other interference or threat of interference by a person with the bodily integrity of another person. 1995, c. 32, s. 1.

Defence of Person

SELF-DEFENCE AGAINST UNPROVOKED ASSAULT / Extent of justification.

34. (1) Every one who is unlawfully assaulted without having provoked the assault is justified in repelling force by force if the force he uses is not intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm and is no more than is necessary to enable him to defend himself.

(2) Every one who is unlawfully assaulted and who causes death or grievous bodily harm in repelling the assault is justified if

- (a) he causes it under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm from the violence with which the assault was originally made or with which the assailant pursues his purposes; and
- (b) he believes, on reasonable grounds, that he cannot otherwise preserve himself from death or grievous bodily harm. R.S., c. C-34, s. 34.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Provocation, for the purpose of this section, is defined in s. 36. Also see ss. 38(2) and 41(2) concerning provocation by trespassers. Assault is defined in s. 265. Grievous bodily harm is not defined, but a definition of “bodily harm” is contained in s. 2 and “grievous bodily harm” was defined for the purposes of s. 25(3) as serious hurt or pain: R. v. Bottrell (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 211 (B.C.C.A.).

The use of force in self-defence is dealt with in a number of provisions of the Criminal Code and these provisions will often overlap. See generally the following: s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain serious offences; s. 35, self-defence in case of aggression; s. 37, use of force in self-defence and defence of persons under one’s protection; ss. 38 to 42, concerning defence of property. In homicide cases the accused may also seek to defend the case on the basis of provocation, in which case see s. 232. As to excessive force in self-defence, see s. 26.

ANNOTATIONS

Use of force where no intent to cause death or grievous bodily harm – If the force is justified under subsec. (1) in that all of the conditions have been met then the defence is made out, even if death or grievous bodily harm results. The person cannot weigh to a nicety the exact measure of the defensive action nor be expected to stop and reflect upon the risk of deadly consequences which might result from taking justifiable defensive action: R. v. Kandola (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 45 W.A.C. 226 (B.C.C.A.).

Where physical resistance is offered to an illegal search by peace officers this defence will lie: R. v. Larlham, [1971] 4 W.W.R. 304 (B.C.C.A.).

To avail himself of this defence the accused is not necessarily required to retreat and certainly when he is in his own home is not required to retreat and give up his home to his adversary: R. v. Deegan (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 417, [1979] 6 W.W.R. 97 (Alta. C.A.).

A person need not be reduced to a state of frenzy in resisting the attack before self defence is available to him as a defence to a charge of assault: R. v. Antley, [1964] 2 C.C.C. 142, 42 C.R. 384, [1964] 1 O.R. 545 (C.A.).

To constitute provocation so as to deprive the accused of the defence under subsec. (1), the conduct of the accused must have been intended by the accused to provoke an assault: R. v. Nelson (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 13 C.R. (4th) 359, 8 O.R. (3d) 364 (C.A.).

Relationship between subsecs. (1) and (2) – Subsections (1) and (2) are not mutually exclusive and accordingly where the issue is whether or not the accused intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm the trial Judge should instruct the jury as to the provisions of subsec. (1) and then tell the jury that if they are then satisfied that the accused intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm they must then consider the provisions of subsec. (2). Both subsections import a subjective element and the doctrine of mistake of fact is applicable to both. Furthermore, the jury must consider under either subsection that a defending person cannot be expected to weigh to a nicety the exact measure of necessary defensive action: R. v. Baxter (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 96, 33 C.R.N.S. 22 (Ont. C.A.). Similarly, R. v. Martin (1985), 47 C.R. (3d) 342 (Que. C.A.).

Where there is no evidence that the accused is under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm subsec. (2) should not be left to the jury but subsec. (1) may still apply if the accused did not intend death or grievous bodily harm and used no more force than was necessary, notwithstanding the victim died as a result of the accused's assault on him: R. v. Setrum (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 109 (Sask. C.A.).

Unlike subsec. (1), there is no requirement under subsec. (2) that the assault upon the accused which led to the defensive action be unprovoked. Thus subsec. (2) is available to the initial aggressor: R. v. McIntosh, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 686, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 36 C.R. (4th) 171 (5:4).

The issue is not whether the accused was in fact unlawfully assaulted but rather whether she reasonably believed in the circumstances that she was being unlawfully assaulted. Further, there is no requirement that the danger be imminent. The imminence of apprehended danger is only one factor which the jury should weigh in determining whether the accused had a reasonable apprehension of danger and a reasonable belief that she could not extricate herself otherwise than by killing the attacker: R. v. Pétel, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 3, 87 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 26 C.R. (4th) 145. Also see R. v. Nelson, supra.

Use of force under subsec. (2) – The issue as to whether or not the force used by the accused was disproportionate to the original force used by the deceased is only a matter of evidence for the jury to consider in determining whether the accused had a reasonable apprehension of death and whether the accused had reasonable and probable grounds to believe that she could not otherwise preserve herself from death or grievous bodily harm: R. v. Bogue (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 403, 70 D.L.R. (3d) 603 (Ont. C.A.).

While this subsection contemplates that the defence may be available where the accused acted under a mistaken perception, nevertheless his apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm must be reasonable and his belief that he could not otherwise preserve himself must be based on reasonable and probable grounds. His mistake must therefore be one which an ordinary man using ordinary care could have made in the same circumstances. It is, therefore, unnecessary to relate evidence of intoxication to the defence under this section, since intoxication cannot induce a mistake which must be founded upon reasonable and probable grounds: Reilly v. The Queen (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 42 C.R. (3d) 154 (S.C.C.) (6:0).

The issue under this subsection is what the accused reasonably apprehended and believed, and, in addressing this question, evidence relating to the accused's intellectual impairment is relevant. Where the accused has an intellectual impairment, not within his control, which relates to his ability to perceive and react to events – an impairment that clearly takes him out of the broad and normal adult intellectual capacity – then this deficit should be taken into account: R. v. Nelson, supra.

It is misleading to direct the jury in terms that the accused is entitled to the benefit of this subsection “as long as the force he used was no more than necessary in the circumstances”. These portions of the charge to the jury may have been construed as an invitation to first consider whether the conduct of the accused fell within the protection of this subsection and, secondly, to consider whether an additional, unstated prohibition against excessive force disqualified the accused from the benefit of that defence. To invite the jury to make such an inquiry would contravene the well-known principle that a person defending himself against an upraised knife cannot be expected to weigh with nicety the exact measure of force he may use to preserve himself. If the requirements of s. 34(2) are satisfied, then no further inquiry or consideration of the nature of the force used by the accused is necessary or permissible. A process which invites the jury to consider the question of excessive force, separate from and in addition to the ingredients of this subsection, presents a special danger for an accused because some jurors, even though satisfied that the circumstances met the requirements of those sections, may have believed that some weapons, particularly guns, are so dangerous that their use is always excessive: R. v. Siu (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 197, 12 C.R. (4th) 356 (B.C.C.A.).

Evidence to support self-defence – Expert psychiatric evidence as to the “battered wife syndrome” was admissible where the accused relied upon the defence under subsec. (2). Such evidence, relating to the ability of the accused to perceive danger from the deceased, went to the issue of whether she reasonably apprehended death or grievous bodily harm, on the occasion in question, from a threat by the deceased to kill the accused at some later time. While subsec. (2) does not actually stipulate that the accused apprehend imminent danger before acting in self-defence, there is an assumption that it is inherently unreasonable to apprehend death or grievous bodily harm unless and until the physical assault is actually in progress at which point the victim can reasonably gauge the requisite amount of force needed to repel the attack and act accordingly. Expert testimony can cast doubt on these assumptions as they applied in the context of the battered wife's efforts to repel an assault. Such evidence can explain the heightened sensitivity of a battered woman to her partner's acts. The issue is not what an outsider would have reasonably perceived but what the accused reasonably perceived given her situation and experience. The expert evidence would also be of assistance to the jury on the issue of whether the accused believed on reasonable grounds that it was not otherwise possible to preserve herself from death or grievous bodily harm. The question the jury must ask itself is whether, given the history, circumstances and perception of the accused, her belief that she could not preserve herself from being killed by the deceased later that night except by killing the spouse first was reasonable. This evidence would explain, for example, why the accused could not flee: R. v. Lavallee (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 852, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 1, 76 C.R. (3d) 329, 108 N.R. 321 (7:0).

On the trial of a charge of murder where the accused relies on self-defence, evidence of the deceased's character or disposition for violence is admissible to show the probability of the deceased having been the aggressor and to support the accused's evidence that he was attacked by the deceased. This disposition may be evidenced by proof of specific acts of violence unknown to the accused at the time of the incident, by evidence of reputation and by psychiatric evidence, if the question falls within the proper sphere of expert evidence. However, to be admissible the specific acts of violence unknown to the accused must have sufficient probative value that they will legitimately and reasonably assist the jury and there must exist some other appreciable evidence of the deceased's aggression on the occasion in question. This latter evidence may emanate from the accused himself: R. v. Scopelliti (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 34 O.R. (2d) 524 (C.A.).

In assessing the admissibility of prior acts of violence by the deceased, its prejudicial impact in arousing feelings of hostility towards the deceased must be weighed against its probative value within the context of affording a fair trial to the accused. On the other hand, where the evidence was of acts of violence against the accused and her relatives, it was no objection to admission that some of these acts had taken place some time in the past. Even prior acts of destruction of property can be admitted in proper circumstances where, as here, in light of the deceased's history of violence, it would not be unreasonable for the accused to fear that anger directed for the moment towards property would be expanded to assaults upon the person. Further, in light of defence counsel's statement that the evidence was essential for the defence of self-defence to which the accused would be testifying, it may be elicited by counsel through cross-examination of Crown witnesses: R. v. Ryan (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 490, 76 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 26 (Nfld. C.A.).

The evidence of the prior acts of violence unknown to the accused must have sufficient probative value for the purpose for which it is tendered to justify its admission. Evidence which is logically relevant may still be excluded because of the costs or risks associated with its admission: R. v. Yaeck (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 545 (Ont. C.A.).

SELF-DEFENCE IN CASE OF AGGRESSION.

35. Every one who has without justification assaulted another but did not commence the assault with intent to cause death or grievous bodily harm, or has without justification provoked an assault on himself by another, may justify the use of force subsequent to the assault if

- (a) he uses the force
  - (i) under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm from the violence of the person whom he has assaulted or provoked, and
  - (ii) in the belief, on reasonable grounds, that it is necessary in order to preserve himself from death or grievous bodily harm;
- (b) he did not, at any time before the necessity of preserving himself from death or grievous bodily harm arose, endeavour to cause death or grievous bodily harm; and
- (c) he declined further conflict and quitted or retreated from it as far as it was feasible to do so before the necessity of preserving himself from death or grievous bodily harm arose. R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34, s. 35.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Provocation for the purpose of this section is defined in s. 36. Also see ss. 38(2) and 41(2) concerning provocation by trespassers. Assault is defined in s. 265. Grievous bodily harm is not defined, but a definition of "bodily harm" is contained in s. 2 and "grievous bodily harm" was defined for the purposes of s. 25(3) as serious hurt or pain: R. v. Bottrell (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 211 (B.C.C.A.).

The use of force in self-defence is dealt with in a number of provisions of the Criminal Code and these provisions will often overlap. See generally the following: s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain serious offences; s. 34, self-defence in case of unprovoked assault; s. 37, use of force in self-defence and defence of persons under one's protection; ss. 38 to 42, concerning defence of property. In homicide cases, the accused may also seek to defend the case on the basis of provocation, in which case see s. 232. As to excessive force in self-defence, see s. 26.

SYNOPSIS

Section 35 outlines the application of self-defence to cases in which the person seeking to rely on self-defence initiated or provoked the assault.

All parts of this section commence with one of two premises: the accused performed the initial assault without justification though without the intention of causing death or grievous bodily harm or that the accused provoked an assault on himself, without being provoked to do so.

There are three strict criteria which must be met for the actions in self-defence following the defender's initial aggression to be justified. Firstly, similar criteria as that found in s. 34(2) apply, namely that the force is used under the person's reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm from the person whom the defender originally assaulted or provoked and the defender must believe on reasonable grounds that the force is necessary to prevent his own death or grievous bodily harm being inflicted upon him.

Secondly, the defender did not, at any time before the need arose to protect himself from death or grievous bodily harm, try to cause grievous bodily harm or death.

Thirdly, there is an obligation upon the defender to decline further conflict and leave or retreat as far as is feasible before the need to defend from death or grievous bodily harm arises.

In cases in which it is unclear whether the accused was the aggressor, both this section and s. 34 should be left to the jury.

ANNOTATIONS

A new trial was ordered, inter alia, on the basis that the trial Judge should have charged the jury as to the application of this section in case the jury was of the view that the accused had provoked an assault (either actual or believed) by the victim: R. v. Bolyantu (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 174 (Ont. C.A.).

The "further conflict" in para. (c) merely refers to the conflict generated by the initial assault or provocation offered by the accused. It is at that point, not earlier, that the requirement of declining further conflict and retreating, if feasible, arises: R. v. Merson (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 251 (B.C.C.A.).

PROVOCATION.

36. Provocation includes, for the purposes of sections 34 and 35, provocation by blows, words or gestures. R.S., c. C-34, s. 36.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to provocation defence in murder cases, see s. 232.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a statement of what is included in the term provocation as it is used in ss. 34 and 35. It includes blows, words or gestures.

PREVENTING ASSAULT / Extent of justification.

37. (1) Every one is justified in using force to defend himself or any one under his protection from assault, if he uses no more force than is necessary to prevent the assault or the repetition of it.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to justify the wilful infliction of any hurt or mischief that is excessive, having regard to the nature of the assault that the force used was intended to prevent. R.S., c. C-34, s. 37.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Assault is defined in s. 265. There is no definition of the term, "anyone under his protection", but it would likely include persons in the accused's immediate family and others with whom he had a close relationship and certainly include persons to whom is owed a legal duty to provide necessities under s. 215. As to whether the section would include other persons who had sought the accused's protection remains to be seen, but the use of force could often be justified in such cases under s. 27. The policy behind limiting the use of force to persons under the accused's protection appears to lie in an attempt to minimize mistakes as to the use of force in the circumstances.

The use of force in self-defence is dealt with in a number of provisions of the Criminal Code and these provisions will often overlap. See generally the following: s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain serious offences; s. 34, self-defence in case of unprovoked assault; s. 35, use of force in case of aggression; ss. 38 to 42, concerning defence of property. In homicide cases, the accused may also seek to defend the case on the basis of provocation, in which case see s. 232. In addition to subsec. (2) concerning excessive force, see s. 36.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the extent of the justification which is available when a person uses force to prevent an assault or its repetition. It imports an element of proportionality into the justification.

Section 37(1) justifies the use of force by a person in his own defence or in the defence of a person under his protection. The force used must be no more than is necessary to prevent the assault or its repetition. Unlike that referred to in s. 34(2), the justification is not limited in its application to an assault of any particular severity.

Section 37(2) states that the section will not justify the wilful infliction of a hurt or mischief which is excessive in relation to the nature of the assault which the defender was trying to prevent.

ANNOTATIONS

This section was held to have application in the trial of a charge of murder: Lowther v. The Queen (1957), 26 C.R. 150 (Que. C.A.) and per Hyde, J., at p. 163 must be read as an extension of s. 34.

This section introduces the concept of "proportionate force" and if it is to be left to the jury along with s. 34(2) it is incumbent on the trial Judge to distinguish its wording from that of s. 34(2) to avoid "watering down" the defence afforded by s. 34(2): R. v. Mulder (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Defence of Property

DEFENCE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY / Assault by trespasser.

38. (1) Every one who is in peaceable possession of personal property, and every one lawfully assisting him, is justified

(a) in preventing a trespasser from taking it, or

(b) in taking it from a trespasser who has taken it, if he does not strike or cause bodily harm to the trespasser.

(2) Where a person who is in peaceable possession of personal property lays hands on it, a trespasser who persists in attempting to keep it or take it from him or from any one lawfully assisting him shall be deemed to commit an assault without justification or provocation. R.S., c. C-34, s. 38.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 39(1) provides for a defence where the person is in peaceable possession of personal property under a claim of right. Section 39(2) limits the use of force by a person who, although in possession, does not claim possession under a claim of right against a person lawfully entitled to possession. Sections 40 to 42 deal with use of force in defence of real property. Use of force may also be justified under s. 27 to prevent commission of a serious offence involving property. Also note ss. 34 to 37 concerning use of force in defence of the person. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26. The term “bodily harm” is defined for the purposes of the assault provisions in s. 2 and may be of assistance for the purpose of this section. Neither the terms “personal property” nor “trespasser” are defined and resort must be had to the civil and provincial law. As to the scope of subsec. (2) see notes under s. 41(2).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out when force may be used in defence of personal property.

Subsection (1) sets out the limit on the use of force; it cannot include striking or causing bodily harm to the trespasser. The justification applies to the person in peaceable possession of personal property and extends to anyone assisting him. The permitted actions are preventing the trespasser from taking the property, or in taking property back from a trespasser. The standard to be applied is a subjective one and if the accused believes that the person is a trespasser and does not exceed the limits in the subsection, the actions will be justified. The force used must not be excessive, but the section has been interpreted to permit the pointing of a gun by a physically weak person to prevent the taking of the property.

Subsection (2) deems the actions of the trespasser to be an assault without justification or provocation under the circumstances outlined in the subsection. This deeming provision will have the effect of permitting a person to rely on s. 34 rather than s. 35, if an assault is committed upon the trespasser.

ANNOTATIONS

This section can apply where the Court finds the accused had reasonable grounds to believe the person was a trespasser: R. v. Weare (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 494, 56 N.S.R. (2d) 411 (S.C. App. Div.).

The test under this section is a subjective one, whether the accused used more force than he, on reasonable grounds, believed was necessary. While the firing at a person to prevent him from taking movable property may not be justified under this section, the mere pointing of the firearm to scare the person off may, depending on the circumstances, be justified. Therefore, this section could constitute a defence to a charge of pointing a firearm contrary to s. 86: R. v. Weare, supra.

39. (1) Every one who is in peaceable possession of personal property under a claim of right, and every one acting under his authority, is protected from criminal responsibility for defending that possession, even against a person entitled by law to possession of it, if he uses no more force than is necessary.

(2) Every one who is in peaceable possession of personal property, but does not claim it as of right or does not act under the authority of a person who claims it as of right, is not justified or protected from criminal responsibility for defending his possession against a person who is entitled by law to possession of it. R.S., c. C-34, s. 39.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 38 provides for a defence where the person is in peaceable possession of personal property. The term “claim of right” is not defined, but likely embraces an honest, although mistaken, belief in entitlement to the property, although the mistake is based on a mistake of law or fact. [See discussion of claim of right in relation to theft in R. v. Howson, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 348 (Ont. C.A.).] Sections 40 to 42 deal with use of force in defence of real property. Use of force may also be justified under s. 27 to prevent commission of a serious offence involving property. Also note ss. 34 to 37 concerning use of force in defence of the person. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a defence to a person who uses force to defend personal property from removal by another person lawfully entitled to it.

The protection in s. 39(1) is limited to cases in which the defender is in peaceable possession of personal property and does have a claim of right to it. It extends the protection from the possessor of the right to those who act under the authority of such person. There will be no criminal responsibility if no more force than is necessary is used to defend that possession, even as against a person who is entitled by law to have it.

Subsection (2) may be seen as the converse of subsec. (1) and acts to deny similar relief from criminal responsibility to a person defending personal property if that person (or someone acting under the authority of such person) does not have a claim of right to it, and acts to defend the property from a person lawfully entitled to it.

ANNOTATIONS

A private licensed bailiff may re-acquire possession of movable property for his principal peacefully, but he cannot oppose resistance by another person entitled by law to its possession: R. v. Doucette et al. (1960), 129 C.C.C. 102, 33 C.R. 174 (Ont. C.A.).

This section was applicable and entitled the accused to resist the attempt by the victim to obtain the suitcases of a third person, which the accused was legally holding under the provisions of the Hotel Keepers Act, R.S.M. 1940, c. 98, provided or so long as he did not use more force than was necessary: Nykolyn v. The King (1949), 94 C.C.C. 145, 8 C.R. 7, [1949] S.C.R. 392 (5:0).

DEFENCE OF DWELLING.

40. Every one who is in peaceable possession of a dwelling-house, and every one lawfully assisting him or acting under his authority, is justified in using as much force as is necessary to prevent any person from forcibly breaking into or forcibly entering the dwelling-house without lawful authority. R.S., c. C-34, s. 40.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Dwelling house" is defined in s. 2. Forcible entry is defined in s. 72. Section 350 contains an extended definition of break and enter for the purposes of ss. 348 and 349. It is unclear whether that definition could apply in circumstances covered by this section. Defence of real property is also dealt with under ss. 41 to 42. Defence of personal property is dealt with in ss. 38 and 39. Defence of the person is dealt with in ss. 34 to 37. Use of force may also be justified under s. 27 to prevent commission of a serious offence involving property. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26.

SYNOPSIS

Section 40 provides a justification for an assault committed by a person in lawful possession of a dwelling house while preventing or attempting to prevent a break-in of that house.

The section justifies the use of as much force as is necessary to prevent any person from forcibly breaking in or entering a dwelling house if the other conditions of the section are met. The force must be necessary for that purpose, i.e., to prevent the break-in and not for any additional reason. The person seeking entry into the house must be without lawful authority. The defender using the force must be in peaceable possession of the home and the section extends to anyone acting under his authority.

ANNOTATIONS

On a prosecution for obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty arising out of an attempt by the accused to prevent the warrantless entry of the officer into the accused's home the onus of establishing justification is a severe one. Where the Crown failed to establish either a statutory or common law right of entry, the accused was entitled to resist the entry by force and invoke this section as a defence to the charge: R. v. Kephart (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1989] 1 W.W.R. 529, 91 A.R. 321 (C.A.).

DEFENCE OF HOUSE OR REAL PROPERTY / Assault by trespasser.

41. (1) Every one who is in peaceable possession of a dwelling-house or real property, and every one lawfully assisting him or acting under his authority, is justified in using force to prevent any person from trespassing on the dwelling-house or real property, or to remove a trespasser therefrom, if he uses no more force than is necessary.

(2) A trespasser who resists an attempt by a person who is in peaceable possession of a dwelling-house or real property, or a person lawfully assisting him or acting under his authority to prevent his entry or to remove him, shall be deemed to commit an assault without justification or provocation. R.S., c. C-34, s. 41.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Dwelling house” is defined in s. 2. The term “trespasser” is not defined and resort must be had to the civil and provincial law. Defence of real property is also dealt with under ss. 40 and 42. Defence of personal property is dealt with in ss. 38 and 39. Defence of the person is dealt with in ss. 34 to 37. Use of force may also be justified under s. 27 to prevent commission of a serious offence involving property. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26.

SYNOPSIS

Section 41 establishes the amount of defensive force that is justifiable in dealing with trespassers on real property or in a dwelling house.

Section 41(1) contains a number of conditions: (1) the person using the force be in peaceable possession of the dwelling house or real property; (2) the force exercised be no more than is necessary (which would seem to invite a subjective test); and (3) the force may only be used to prevent any person from trespassing on the dwelling house or real property or to remove any person from the property. There does not need to be a dwelling house located on the real property for the section to apply, and it applies equally to anyone lawfully assisting the possessor of the house or property.

Section 41(2) deems the trespasser to be committing an assault without justification or provocation if the trespasser resists attempts at preventing the trespass or removing the trespasser under the circumstances described in the subsection. This will permit the person removing the trespasser to rely upon s. 34 rather than s. 35 if an assault is committed.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – This subsection will not justify shooting at a mere trespasser: R. v. Baxter (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 96, 33 C.R.N.S. 22 (Ont. C.A.); nor the infliction of a serious injury with a knife: R. v. Figueira (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 409 (Ont. C.A.).

The defence of property which would justify killing can only arise where the person in possession of the property was able to bring himself within s. 34: R. v. Clark (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 264, [1983] 4 W.W.R. 313 (Alta. C.A.).

This subsection is not limited to the real property upon which a dwelling-house is situated and may apply to commercial premises such as a store: R. v. Scopelliti (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 481, 34 O.R. (2d) 524 (C.A.).

The defence under this subsection has four elements. The accused must be in possession of land, his possession must be peaceable, the victim of the assault must be a trespasser, and the force used to eject the trespasser must be reasonable in the circumstances. For the accused to be in possession of the land, he must have control although not necessarily exclusive control over the property in question. Peaceable possession is not synonymous with peaceful possession and means a possession not seriously challenged by others. The key to peaceable possession is whether the possession is such, and the challenge to it is such, that the situation is unlikely to lead to violence. As to the requirement that the victim must be a trespasser, if that person has a right to be on the land, even if the accused also has a right to be on the land, the defence is not available. It is unclear whether the accused has the right to treat the victim as a trespasser if the victim has a right to go on the land for one purpose but goes in fact for another unlawful purpose, before that unlawful purpose has been manifested. As regards to the first two elements, the defence of mistake is available. The defence of mistake is also available to the factual content of the third element as to whether the victim is a trespasser. Thus, an accused might honestly but mistakenly believe that he has a measure of control over the lands, or that his supposed control is unchallenged, or he might believe in a set of facts, which, if true, makes the victim a trespasser: R. v. Born with a Tooth (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 169, 4 Alta. L.R. (3d) 289 (C.A.).

The fact that the complainant was originally an invitee did not mean that he necessarily remained one until he left the premises if he began to make use of the premises in a manner prohibited by the owner. If the owner had reasonable grounds to believe that the complainant was a trespasser, then the judge must consider whether the use of force by the owner was justified by this section: R. v. Keating (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 570, 117 N.S.R. (2d) 39 (C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – Passive resistance by a trespasser to his removal is not an assault; there must be proof of an overt act of resistance for a conviction: R. v. Kellington (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 564, [1972] 5 W.W.R. 396 (B.C.C.A.).

Similarly, in R. v. Baxter, supra, Martin J.A., was of the view that the effect of this subsection “is not to convert mere passive resistance into an assault but merely to provide that if force is used by the wrongdoer in resisting an attempt to prevent his entry or to remove him, such force is unlawful, and hence an assault”. See also R. v. Scopelliti, supra, and R. v. Richardson (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 309, 60 N.S.R. (2d) 354 (App. Div.).

This subsection only applies if the attempt to eject the trespasser was lawful and therefore cannot be invoked if the accused used unnecessary force which provoked the trespasser: R. v. Alkadri (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 467 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

Since in the absence of some statutory authority, a tenant of an apartment building is not in peaceable possession of the common hallways, resistance by a trespasser to a tenant's attempt to remove him is not an assault within this subsection: R. v. Spencer (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 303, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 250 (B.C.S.C.).

ASSERTION OF RIGHT TO HOUSE OR REAL PROPERTY / Assault in case of lawful entry / Trespasser provoking assault.

42. (1) Every one is justified in peaceably entering a dwelling-house or real property by day to take possession of it if he, or a person under whose authority he acts, is lawfully entitled to possession of it.

(2) Where a person

(a) not having peaceable possession of a dwelling-house or real property under a claim of right, or
 (b) not acting under the authority of a person who has peaceable possession of a dwelling-house or real property under a claim of right, assaults a person who is lawfully entitled to possession of it and who is entering it peaceably by day to take possession of it, for the purpose of preventing him from entering, the assault shall be deemed to be without justification or provocation.

(3) Where a person

(a) having peaceable possession of a dwelling-house or real property under a claim of right, or
 (b) acting under the authority of a person who has peaceable possession of a dwelling-house or real property under a claim of right, assaults any person who is lawfully entitled to possession of it and who is entering it peaceably by day to take possession of it, for the purpose of preventing him from entering, the assault shall be deemed to be provoked by the person who is entering. R.S., c. C-34, s. 42.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “day” and “dwelling-house” are defined in s. 2. The term “claim of right” is not defined but likely embraces an honest, although mistaken, belief of entitlement to the property although the mistake is based on a mistake of law or fact. [See discussion of claim of right in relation to theft in R. v. Howson, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 348 (Ont. C.A.).] Defence of real property is also dealt with under ss. 40 and 41. Defence of personal property is dealt with in ss. 38 and 39. Defence of the person is dealt with in ss. 34 to 37. Use of force may also be justified under s. 27 to prevent commission of a serious offence involving property. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides justification for those who enter real property peaceably to take lawful possession of it, and spells out what actions will constitute assault upon persons who have lawful entitlement to the property.

Section 42(1) justifies entering a dwelling house or real property to take possession of it if the person is lawfully entitled to possession of it or is acting under the authority of someone who is so lawfully entitled. The entry is only permitted by day and must be done peaceably. This subsection should be read together with subsec. (3) to see the effect of an assault upon such a person.

Section 42(2) sets out the legal effect of assaulting a person described in subsec. (1) who is entering to take possession of the dwelling or property. The person who is affected by this deeming provision is a person who is not in peaceable possession of the aforementioned property under a claim of right or who is not acting under the authority of a person with such a claim. Under such circumstances, an assault upon the person described in subsec. (1), for the purpose of preventing that person from taking possession of the property, will be deemed to be an unprovoked and unjustified assault. This means that the person committing the assault will be limited to using s. 35 rather than s. 34 to support a defence of self-defence.

Section 42(3) provides a corollary to subsec. (2) by deeming an assault upon a person described in subsec. (1) by a person in peaceable possession of a dwelling house or real property acting either under his own claim of right or the authority of one who has such a claim to have been provoked by the person entering to take possession of the property. The purpose for the assault is limited to preventing the other person from entering the property to take possession. This subsection may be relied upon, even if the person assaulted entered by day and was lawfully entitled to do so.

Protection of Persons in Authority

CORRECTION OF CHILD BY FORCE.

43. Every schoolteacher, parent or person standing in the place of a parent is justified in using force by way of correction toward a pupil or child, as the case may be, who is under his care, if the force does not exceed what is reasonable under the circumstances. R.S., c. C-34, s. 43.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “schoolteacher”, “child”, “pupil” and “parent” are not defined, but case-law has provided meaning to those terms. See especially Ogg-Moss v. The Queen, and Nixon v. The Queen, infra. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26.

SYNOPSIS

This section justifies the use of force by certain persons to correct a child or pupil.

The persons who may rely upon this section are schoolteachers, parents or those standing in the place of a parent. The child or pupil must be under the care of the person using the force, and the force must be applied for the purpose of correcting the child. Thus, if the child is too young to learn from the correction or is incapable due to mental disability, the use of force will not be justified by s. 43. The force applied cannot exceed what is reasonable in the circumstances. This would appear to be an objective standard, although the reference to "in the circumstances" permits some element of subjectivity to be considered.

ANNOTATIONS

Even if the school-boy had not committed a breach of discipline, if there were reasonable and probable grounds for the teacher to believe that he had done so, his action of punishing the boy at the next reasonable opportunity after the weekend was excusable under this section: R. v. Habershtock (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 433 (Sask. C.A.).

A mentally retarded adult at a residential centre is neither a "child" nor a "pupil" within the meaning of this section. A "pupil" is limited to a child taking instruction. Further, a mental retardation counsellor at such a centre is not a person standing in the place of a parent, having only temporary care of the adult, not being responsible for the adult's pecuniary needs and by express direction not the delegate of the Minister for the purpose of using force for correction. As well, such counsellor having functions related to personal care of the patient rather than teaching was not a "schoolteacher": Ogg-Moss v. The Queen (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 116, 41 C.R. (3d) 297, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 173 (5:0); Nixon v. The Queen (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 257, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 197, 12 D.L.R. (4th) 762 (5:0).

This section authorizes the use of force only where it is by way of correction, that is, for the benefit of the education of the child. In so far as a mentally retarded child is incapable of appreciating correction, this section does not, as a matter of law, justify the use of force by a person standing in the place of a parent or by a schoolteacher. Where the victim of an assault to the knowledge of the accused was by reason of his mental retardation incapable of remembering the "correction" within minutes of its application, then this section was no defence: Ogg-Moss v. The Queen (1984), 14 C.C.C. (3d) 116, 41 C.R. (3d) 297, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 173 (5:0).

In determining whether the force used has exceeded what is reasonable under the circumstances, the court must consider both from an objective and subjective standpoint such matters as the nature of the offence calling for correction, the age and character of the child and the likely effect of the punishment on the particular child, the degree of gravity of the punishment, the circumstances under which it was inflicted and the injuries, if any, suffered: R. v. Dupperon (1984), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 453, 43 C.R. (3d) 70, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 369 (Sask. C.A.).

In R. v. Halcrow (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 320, 40 W.A.C. 197 (B.C.C.A.), affd [1995] 1 S.C.R. 440, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 94, 90 W.A.C. 72, Southin J.A. in her opinion [dissenting in part] considered that the word "reasonable" in this section means "moderate" or "not excessive" and what is or is not excessive should depend solely upon the age and physical condition of the child. Factors such as the gravity of the offence, the character of the child, and the likely effect on the character of the child are relevant only to the issue of the accused's purpose, whether the force was applied by way of correction.

In determining whether the force used was reasonable under the circumstances the Court must consider the customs of the contemporary Canadian community, not the customs of the accused's former country where corporal punishment may have greater acceptance: R. v. Baptiste and Baptiste (1980), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 438 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

MASTER OF SHIP MAINTAINING DISCIPLINE.

44. The master or officer in command of a vessel on a voyage is justified in using as much force as he believes, on reasonable grounds, is necessary for the purpose of maintaining good order and discipline on the vessel. R.S., c. C-34, s. 44.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Vessel” is defined for the purposes of Part VIII in s. 214. It is unclear whether that definition would apply to this section, however, see s. 15 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. As to liability for excessive force, see s. 26.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS.

45. Every one is protected from criminal responsibility for performing a surgical operation on any person for the benefit of that person if

- (a) the operation is performed with reasonable care and skill; and
- (b) it is reasonable to perform the operation, having regard to the state of health of the person at the time the operation is performed and to all the circumstances of the case. R.S., c. C-34, s. 45.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to duty to use reasonable knowledge, skill and care in administering surgical care, see s. 216. This section is complementary to the criminal negligence provisions in ss. 219 to 221.

ANNOTATIONS

The conduct of a physician in stopping the respiratory support treatment of his patient, at the freely given and informed request of the patient so that nature may take its course, is not unreasonable within the meaning of this section and would not attract criminal liability: Nancy B. v. Hôtel-Dieu de Québec (1992), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 450, 86 D.L.R. (4th) 385, [1992] R.J.Q. 361 (S.C.).

By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. This offence may be the basis for constructive murder under s. 230 and the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

It is also an offence to fail to report the fact that a person is about to commit treason or high treason, s. 50(1)(b). Reference should also be made to the Official Secrets Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. O-5.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offences of treason and high treason. It also prohibits certain activities by persons outside of Canada.

The elements of high treason are set out in s. 46(1). It includes specified violent actions against the Queen, levying war (or preparing to do so) against Canada or assisting an enemy at war with Canada or whose armed forces are engaged in hostilities with our armed forces.

The offence of treason is created by s. 46(2). Section 46(2)(a) states that treason is committed if a person uses force to overthrow the government of Canada or of a province. Section 46(2)(d) provides that if a person forms the intention to commit the acts described in s. 46(1)(a) and shows that intention by doing an overt act, this is also the full offence of treason. It is also treason to conspire to do the acts described in s. 46(1)(a) or to conspire to commit high treason.

An alternative basis for liability is found in s. 46(2)(b), stemming from making available any of a specified class of documents to a foreign agent or state which the accused knows or ought to know could be used for a purpose prejudicial to the safety or defence of Canada. This paragraph specifies that the accused must have no lawful authority for communicating or making available such material. A conspiracy to do so or the intention to do so if accompanied by an overt act constitutes treason under s. 46(2)(e).

Section 46(4) provides that conspiring is an overt act of treason in circumstances in which it is treason to conspire with another person.

Section 46(3) imposes liability for either high treason or treason, as the case may be, upon Canadians or those who owe allegiance to Her Majesty in right of Canada for doing the things inside or outside of Canada described in s. 46(1) or (2).

PUNISHMENT FOR HIGH TREASON / Punishment for treason / Corroboration / Minimum punishment.

47. (1) Every one who commits high treason is guilty of an indictable offence and shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

(2) Every one who commits treason is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (a) to be sentenced to imprisonment for life if he is guilty of an offence under paragraph 46(2)(a), (c) or (d);
- (b) to be sentenced to imprisonment for life if he is guilty of an offence under paragraph 46(2)(b) or (e) committed while a state of war exists between Canada and another country; or
- (c) to be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years if he is guilty of an offence under paragraph 46(2)(b) or (e) committed while no state of war exists between Canada and another country.

(3) No person shall be convicted of high treason or treason on the evidence of only one witness, unless the evidence of that witness is corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused.

(4) For the purposes of Part XXIII, the sentence of imprisonment for life prescribed by subsection (1) is a minimum punishment. R.S., c. C-34, s. 47; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 2.

(1)(a). Unavailability of defence of compulsion by threats, see s. 17. Trial of these offences is by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with these offences. This offence may be the basis for constructive murder under s. 230 and the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. B.(G.) (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 3, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 577, 77 C.R. (3d) 327 (5:0), the court considered the effect of now repealed s. 586, which provided that no person shall be convicted on the unsworn evidence of a child “unless the evidence of the child is corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused”. The wording is thus almost identical to subsec. (3) of this section. It was there held that the requirement that the corroborating evidence implicate the accused requires only that the evidence confirm in some material particular the story of the witness giving the evidence which required corroboration. The confirming evidence need not also itself implicate the accused.

LIMITATION / Information for treasonable words.

48. (1) No proceedings for an offence of treason as defined by paragraph 46(2)(a) shall be commenced more than three years after the time when the offence is alleged to have been committed.

(2) No proceedings shall be commenced under section 47 in respect of an overt act of treason expressed or declared by open and considered speech unless

- (a) an information setting out the overt act and the words by which it was expressed or declared is laid under oath before a justice within six days after the time when the words are alleged to have been spoken; and
- (b) a warrant for the arrest of the accused is issued within ten days after the time when the information is laid. R.S., c. C-34, s. 48; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 29.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "year" is defined in s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, and, by reason of that definition, calculation of the three year period would be pursuant to s. 28 of the same Act as a number of months. Calculation of the periods of time set out in subsec. (2) is pursuant to the rules in s. 27 of the Interpretation Act. In particular, subsec. (5) which provides that where anything is to be done "within" a time after a specified day, the time does not include that day. Also see s. 26 for when time limited expires on a holiday (defined in s. 35 of the same Act). For other provisions relating to treason, see notes under ss. 46 and 47.

SYNOPSIS

This section imposes certain time limits within which prosecutions for particular types of treason may be commenced.

Section 48(1) states that a three-year time-limit applies from the date of the offence if the allegation is based upon the use of force to overthrow the government of Canada or of a province (s. 46(2)(a)).

Section 48(2) requires that in order for a prosecution on an allegation of treason based on words spoken in open speech to proceed, the information must be placed before a justice within six days of the words being said and a warrant for the arrest of the accused issued within 10 days thereafter. The information alleging the offence must specify the words which are said to constitute treason.

Prohibited Acts

ACTS INTENDED TO ALARM HER MAJESTY OR BREAK PUBLIC PEACE.

49. Every one who wilfully, in the presence of Her Majesty,

- (a) does an act with intent to alarm Her Majesty or to break the public peace, or
  - (b) does an act that is intended or is likely to cause bodily harm to Her Majesty,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 49.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Limitation on admission of evidence of overt acts, see s. 55. Section 581(4) requires that every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment and, by s. 601(9), the indictment may not be amended so as to add to the overt acts. This offence is triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) pursuant to ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence.

Related offences: s. 46(1)(a), high treason includes killing, attempting to kill or causing certain forms of bodily harm to, or imprisoning or restraining Her Majesty. Conviction for these offences will, in certain circumstances, require imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(1).

ASSISTING ALIEN ENEMY TO LEAVE CANADA, OR OMITTING TO PREVENT TREASON / Punishment.

- 50. (1) Every one commits an offence who
- (a) incites or wilfully assists a subject of
    - (i) a state that is at war with Canada, or
    - (ii) a state against whose forces Canadian Forces are engaged in hostilities, whether or not a state of war exists between Canada and the state whose forces they are, to leave Canada without the consent of the Crown, unless the accused establishes that assistance to the state referred to in subparagraph (i) or the forces of the state referred to in subparagraph (ii), as the case may be, was not intended thereby; or

  - (b) knowing that a person is about to commit high treason or treason does not, with all reasonable dispatch, inform a justice of the peace or other peace officer thereof or make other reasonable efforts to prevent that person from committing high treason or treason.
- (2) Every one who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 50; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 29.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “Canadian forces”, “justice” and “peace officer” are defined in s. 2. Treason and high treason are defined in s. 46. Limitation on admission of evidence of overt acts, see s. 55. The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release of the accused pending trial is governed by s. 515. Section 581(4) requires that every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment and, by s. 601(9), the indictment may not be amended so as to add to the overt acts. Section 7(11) provides for admission of a certificate of the Secretary of State for External Affairs stating that, at a certain time, any state was engaged in an armed conflict against Canada. The term “wilfully” does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: Regina v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the indictable offences of assisting an enemy alien to leave Canada or omitting to prevent treason. Both offences are punishable by a maximum sentence of 14 years imprisonment.

The offence created by s. 50(1)(a) is committed by either inciting or wilfully assisting a person who is a subject of a country with whom Canada is at war or with whom our armed forces are engaged in hostilities (regardless of whether war has been declared) to leave Canada. It must be shown that the accused did not have the consent of the Crown for the impugned actions or incitement. The accused may rely upon the defence that there was no intention to assist the foreign government or forces but the onus is upon the accused to establish that no such intention existed.

Section 50(1)(b) creates one of the few offences in the Criminal Code in which liability is established by an omission to report to the authorities the knowledge that another is about to commit an offence. The offence is based on the omission of the accused to advise a justice of the peace or peace officer that another person is about to commit treason or high treason or to make other reasonable efforts to prevent the commission of either offence.

INTIMIDATING PARLIAMENT OR LEGISLATURE.

51. Every one who does an act of violence in order to intimidate Parliament or the legislature of a province is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 51.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Limitation on admission of evidence of overt acts, see s. 55. Section 581(4) requires that every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment and, by s. 601(9), the indictment may not be amended so as to add to the overt acts. This offence is triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) pursuant to ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

(4) No person does a prohibited act within the meaning of this section by reason only that he attends at or near or approaches a dwelling-house or place for the purpose only of obtaining or communicating information. R.S., c. C-34, s. 52.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Dwelling-house" is defined in s. 2.

Limitation on admission of evidence of overt acts, see s. 55. Section 581(4) requires that every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment. Note, however, that unlike, for example, on the trial of an offence under s. 53, s. 601(9), which provides that the indictment may not be amended so as to add to the overt acts, does not apply to the trial of this offence. The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release of the accused pending trial is governed by s. 515. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the indictable offence of sabotage and provides exceptions from liability for certain acts or omissions.

The offence is set out in s. 52(1) and consists of doing one of the prohibited acts specified in subsec. (2) for a purpose prejudicial to the safety, security or defence of the nation, or to the armed forces of another nation which are lawfully within Canada. The maximum sentence for this offence is 10 years.

Subsections (3) and (4) set out the exceptions to the application of this section. Subsection (3) details a number of reasons why an accused may have stopped work (relating primarily to labour disputes and safety concerns) and provides that these actions alone do not constitute a prohibited act (see subsec. (2)). Subsection (4) exempts those who go near a place or house for the purpose only of obtaining or communicating information.

INCITING TO MUTINY.

53. Every one who

(a) attempts, for a traitorous or mutinous purpose, to seduce a member of the Canadian Forces from his duty and allegiance to Her Majesty, or

(b) attempts to incite or to induce a member of the Canadian Forces to commit a traitorous or mutinous act, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 53.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Canadian Forces” is defined in s. 2. Attempt is defined in s. 24.

Limitation on admission of evidence of overt acts, see s. 55. Section 581(4) requires that every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment and, by s. 601(9), the indictment may not be amended so as to add to the overt acts. This offence is triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) pursuant to ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. Other provisions also deal with offences concerning the military, see, for example, s. 54, assisting deserter; s. 62, offences in relation to military forces; ss. 419, 420, offences in relation to military uniforms and certificates and military stores.

Reference should also be made to the National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5.

ASSISTING DESERTER.

54. Every one who aids, assists, harbours or conceals a person who he knows is a deserter or absentee without leave from the Canadian Forces is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction, but no proceedings shall be instituted under this section without the consent of the Attorney General of Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 54.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Canadian Forces” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. As to consent of Attorney General, see s. 583(h). Trial of this offence is by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 787. The limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer or the officer in charge, pursuant to ss. 496, 497 and 498. Other provisions also deal with offences concerning the military, see for example: s. 53, inciting to mutiny; s. 62, offences in relation to military forces; ss. 419, 420, offences in relation to military uniforms and certificates and military stores and s. 120, bribery of public officer [note officers of the Canadian Forces are within the definition of public officer in s. 2]; s. 122, breach of trust by official; s. 129(a), obstructing public officer; s. 129(b), refusing to aid public officer; s. 399, false return by public officer.

EVIDENCE OF OVERT ACTS.

55. In proceedings for an offence against any provision in section 47 or sections 49 to 53, no evidence is admissible of an overt act unless that overt act is set out in the indictment or unless the evidence is otherwise relevant as tending to prove an overt act that is set out therein. R.S., c. C-34, s. 55.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 581(4) also requires that every overt act that is to be relied on shall be stated in the indictment and except in the case of the offence of sabotage under s. 52, by s. 601(9), the indictment may not be amended so as to add to the overt acts.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out a rule of criminal procedure which imposes particular requirements upon the wording of an indictment in prosecutions under ss. 47 and 49 to 53. The indictment (which includes an information pursuant to s. 2) must specify the overt act alleged in order for such evidence to be received against the accused. This section mirrors the contents of s. 581(3), in that the substance of the overt act alleged in prosecutions under the aforementioned sections must be specified in the indictment. However, if the evidence is otherwise relevant as tending to prove an overt act alleged in the indictment it may be admitted.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The general offence of forgery is set out in ss. 366 and 367 and of uttering in s. 368. For the offences prescribed by subsec. (1) and (3) the accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). For the offence prescribed by subsec. (2), where the prosecution proceeds by way of summary conviction, then the trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Where the prosecution proceeds by way of indictment, then the accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). In any event, release pending trial is governed by s. 515, except that, for the offence in subsec. (2), the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer or the officer in charge pursuant to ss. 496, 497 and 498 and, in the case of the offence in subsec. (3), by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. The reference in subsec. (7) to requirements as to presence of the accused is to s. 650. The term “territorial division” is defined in s. 2. The offences in this section may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

The related offence of fraudulent use of a certificate of citizenship and similar documents is found in s. 58. Reference may also be made to the personation offence in s. 403.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates offences relating to the creation of forged passports and their subsequent use or possession.

Section 57(5) provides a definition of passport for the purpose of this section. Section 57(4)(b) provides that the definitions of "false document" in ss. 321 and 366 apply to this section with whatever modifications are required. Section 57(6) extends the normal concept of jurisdiction to facilitate prosecution in any territorial division of Canada for an offence under this section which was committed outside the country. Section 57(7) provides that provisions which normally govern when the accused must be present at trial (and when there are exceptions to that rule) apply to any prosecution brought using the special jurisdictional provisions in s. 57(6). The section states that it does not matter where the passport was forged (s. 57(4)(a)).

Section 57(1) creates an indictable offence punishable by a maximum of 14 years if the accused forges the passport personally or for specified acts relating to either using, dealing with it or acts on it personally or causes another to do so when the accused knows that it is forged. The subsection applies regardless of whether these acts occur in Canada.

Section 57(2) creates an offence which turns on the accused making false or misleading statements in connection with passports. It must be shown that these statements were made for the purpose of either obtaining a passport initially or getting one altered or added to in some material way. This offence states that the accused may be in or out of Canada when the statements are made. This offence may be tried by summary conviction proceeding or by way of indictment. If prosecuted by indictment the maximum sentence is two years.

Section 57(3) makes it an offence to possess a passport resulting from the commission of the offence described in subsec. (2). This is an indictable offence punishable by a maximum sentence of five years. The accused may rely upon a lawful excuse but must prove such excuse. As with all burdens placed upon the accused, this provision is likely to attract scrutiny under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

ANNOTATIONS

An accused may be convicted of the offence under subsec. (1)(a) where she caused another person to actually make the false passport, although the other person was unaware that the statements provided by the accused were false. While the accused could not be convicted of aiding or abetting the other person, who committed no offence, she could be convicted as a principal by application of the common law doctrine of innocent agent, a doctrine preserved in s. 21(1)(a): R. v. Berryman (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 375, 78 C.R. (3d) 376 (B.C.C.A.).

An accused could be convicted of the offences under both subsec. (1)(a) and subsec. (2), although both charges arose out of the same circumstances. The elements of the two offences are quite different and, in this case, there were other acts beside the providing of the false statements which were instrumental in the forging of the passport: R. v. Berryman, supra.

FRAUDULENT USE OF CERTIFICATE OF CITIZENSHIP / Definition of "certificate of citizenship" and "certificate of naturalization".

58. (1) Every one who, while in or out of Canada,

- (a) uses a certificate of citizenship or a certificate of naturalization for a fraudulent purpose, or
- (b) being a person to whom a certificate of citizenship or a certificate of naturalization has been granted, knowingly parts with the possession of that certificate with intent that it should be used for a fraudulent purpose, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) In this section, “certificate of citizenship” and “certificate of naturalization”, respectively, mean a certificate of citizenship and a certificate of naturalization as defined by the Citizenship Act. R.S., c. C-34, s. 59; 1974-75-76, c. 108, s. 41.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515, except that the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

The related offences of forgery of or uttering a forged passport are found in s. 57. Reference may also be made to the personation offence in s. 403.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the indictable offence of fraudulently using a certificate of naturalization or citizenship. It also prohibits parting with a certificate of citizenship or naturalization, knowing and intending that it will be used fraudulently. The offence is committed whether the improper activities involving these certificates occur inside or outside Canada. The certificates referred to in the section are to be given the meaning set out in the Citizenship Act. The maximum sentence for this offence is two years.

Sedition

SEDITIONOUS WORDS / Seditious libel / Seditious conspiracy / Seditious intention.

59. (1) Seditious words are words that express a seditious intention.

(2) A seditious libel is a libel that expresses a seditious intention.

(3) A seditious conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to carry out a seditious intention.

(4) Without limiting the generality of the meaning of the expression “seditious intention”, every one shall be presumed to have a seditious intention who

(a) teaches or advocates, or

(b) publishes or circulates any writing that advocates, the use, without the authority of law, of force as a means of accomplishing a governmental change within Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 60.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Defence of good faith, see s. 60.

Punishment for sedition, see s. 61.

Special provisions for indictment of seditious libel and for proof of the libel, see s. 584. The seditious offences are triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. The offences in this section may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183. The offence of blasphemous libel is in s. 296, of defamatory libel in ss. 297 to 317 and advocating genocide and hate propaganda in ss. 318 to 320.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the essential elements of offences relating to sedition which are created in s. 61. Section 59(4) provides two examples of what is presumed to demonstrate a seditious intention, but it is expressly stated that this subsection is not intended to exhaustively define what is encompassed by the phrase seditious intention. This presumption may be subject to attack under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The heart of the examples given in this subsection is advocating, without legal authority, the use of force to achieve governmental change within Canada.

Section 59(1) to (3) defines what is meant by seditious words, seditious libel and seditious conspiracy, all of which have, as the cornerstone, the concept of expressing or agreeing to carry out a seditious intention.

ANNOTATIONS

The leading case on this section is Boucher v. The King (1950), 99 C.C.C. 1, [1951] 2 D.L.R. 369, [1951] S.C.R. 265 (after rehearing ordered from 96 C.C.C. 48, [1950] 1 D.L.R. 657, 9 C.R. 127) decided under s. 133 of the 1927 Code which was essentially worded the same as this section. The Court was divided on whether a "seditious intention" required proof in all cases of an intention to incite acts of violence or public disorder. Kerwin, Rand, Kellock and Estey, JJ., were of the view that it did. Taschereau, Cartwright, Fauteux and (semble) Locke, JJ., were of the view that it did in all cases except those related to the administration of justice which required only proof of an intention to bring the administration of justice into hatred or contempt or incite disaffection against it. Rinfret, C.J.C., did not come to a firm conclusion on the matter but merely pointed out that the advocating of force was not the only instance in which there could be a "seditious intention".

EXCEPTION.

60. Notwithstanding subsection 59(4), no person shall be deemed to have a seditious intention by reason only that he intends, in good faith,

- (a) to show that Her Majesty has been misled or mistaken in her measures;
- (b) to point out errors or defects in
  - (i) the government or constitution of Canada or a province,
  - (ii) Parliament or the legislature of a province, or
  - (iii) the administration of justice in Canada;
- (c) to procure, by lawful means, the alteration of any matter of government in Canada; or
- (d) to point out, for the purpose of removal, matters that produce or tend to produce feelings of hostility and ill-will between different classes of persons in Canada. R.S., C. C-34, s. 61.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The sedition offences are defined in s. 59.

Punishment for sedition offences is in s. 61.

The sedition offences are triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522 only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. The sedition offences may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out several specific exceptions protecting what might otherwise be said to come within the phrase seditious intention as expressed in s. 59(4). The focus of the exceptions is to permit legitimate criticism of the Queen or government policies or to procure change in the government by lawful means. In addition, s. 60(d) permits a person to point out matters which may produce ill will among the people of Canada if this is done with the intention of their removal.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS OFFENCES.

61. Every one who

- (a) speaks seditious words,
  - (b) publishes a seditious libel, or
  - (c) is a party to a seditious conspiracy,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 62.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The sedition offences are defined in s. 59. Note the good faith exception in s. 60.

Special provision for indictment of seditious libel, see s. 584.

Special provisions for indictment of seditious libel and for proof of the libel, see s. 584.

The sedition offences are triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. The offences referred to in this section may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates indictable offences relating to sedition and provides for a maximum sentence upon conviction of 14 years. The gravamen of these offences is expressing a seditious intention, either through speaking words evincing such intention or publishing such words. The third offence also involves seditious intention and prohibits conspiring to carry out this intention.

OFFENCES IN RELATION TO MILITARY FORCES / Definition of “member of a force”.

62. (1) Every one who wilfully

- (a) interferes with, impairs or influences the loyalty or discipline of a member of a force,
  - (b) publishes, edits, issues, circulates or distributes a writing that advises, counsels or urges insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny or refusal of duty by a member of a force, or
  - (c) advises, counsels, urges or in any manner causes insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny or refusal of duty by a member of a force,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) In this section, “member of a force” means a member of

- (a) the Canadian Forces; or
- (b) the naval, army or air forces of a state other than Canada that are lawfully present in Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 63.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Canadian Forces” is defined in s. 2. “Counsels” is defined in s. 22(3). The term “wilfully” does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: Regina v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.). The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515 except that the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

Other provisions also deal with offences concerning the military, see, for example, s. 53, inciting to mutiny; s. 54, assisting deserter; ss. 419, 420, offences in relation to military uniforms and certificates and military stores.

Reference should also be made to the National Defence Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. N-5.

SYNOPSIS

This section prohibits activity designed to create disloyalty, insubordination, mutiny or refusal of duty by military forces in Canada. Subsection (2) expands the section to apply to both Canadian forces and the armed forces of any other nation which are lawfully present in Canada. Section 62(1)(a) spells out a variety of activities which are prohibited, including interfering with the loyalty or discipline of a member of the forces. Section 62(1)(b) focuses on participation in activities such as the publication, circulation and distribution of written material advocating such insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny or refusal of duty. Section 62(1)(c) prohibits urging, counselling, or in any way causing the same range of improper activities by a member of a force as is set out in s. 62(1)(b).

The maximum sentence for this indictable offence is five years.

Unlawful Assemblies and Riots

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY / Lawful assembly becoming unlawful / Exception.

63. (1) An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner or so conduct themselves when they are assembled as to cause persons in the neighbourhood of the assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds, that they

(a) will disturb the peace tumultuously; or

(b) will by that assembly needlessly and without reasonable cause provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

(2) Persons who are lawfully assembled may become an unlawful assembly if they conduct themselves with a common purpose in a manner that would have made the assembly unlawful if they had assembled in that manner for that purpose.

(3) Persons are not unlawfully assembled by reason only that they are assembled to protect the dwelling-house of any one of them against persons who are threatening to break and enter it for the purpose of committing an indictable offence therein. R.S., c. C-34, s. 64.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Arrest powers for breach of the peace, see ss. 30, 31.

Being a member of an unlawful assembly is a summary conviction offence pursuant to s. 66. The trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Related provisions concerning riots, including procedure for reading of proclamation to disperse rioters and offences relating to riots, see ss. 64, 65, 67, 68, 69. Use of force to suppress a riot and the duty of officers to disperse rioters, see ss. 32 and 33. The offence of causing a disturbance is in s. 175.

SYNOPSIS

Section 63 sets out what constitutes an unlawful assembly, and also provides for certain exceptions. Stripped to its essentials, s. 63(1) requires that three or more persons be involved, and that they assemble in a way, or behave in such a way after assembling, that causes others in the neighbourhood to be afraid that the assembly will either disturb the peace tumultuously or provoke others to do so. Tumultuous means chaotic, disorderly, clamorous or uproarious. It must be shown that the assembly has gathered together with the intention to carry out a common purpose, and that the fears of those in the area of the assembly are based on reasonable grounds. If the offence lies under s. 63(1)(b) (provoking others), the accused have the defence of reasonable cause.

Simplified, s. 63(2) provides that any assembly, which was initially lawful may become an unlawful assembly if the people assembled conduct themselves in a manner which would have brought them within s. 63(1), had they done so at the outset of the assembly. Again, it must be shown that there was a common purpose for the assembly under this paragraph.

Subsection (3) exempts persons from criminal liability if they have assembled for the purpose of protecting the dwelling house of any of those assembled from others who wish to break and enter this dwelling with the intention of committing therein an indictable offence.

ANNOTATIONS

A grievance against the authorities does not provide a legal right to occupy a roadway, which is a public highway over which all members of the public are entitled to traverse: R. v. Thomas (1971), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 514, [1971] 2 W.W.R. 734 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

Provided that the accused is part of the assembly which has become unlawful through the conduct of its members then it is no defence that he was passively acquiescent: R. v. Paulger and Les (1982), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 78 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

RIOT.

64. A riot is an unlawful assembly that has begun to disturb the peace tumultuously. R.S., c. C-34, s. 65.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 63, definition of “unlawful assembly”; s. 65, punishment of rioters; s. 67, procedure for reading of proclamation to disperse rioters; s. 68, offences relating to reading of proclamation; s. 69, offence for failure of peace officer to suppress riot; ss. 32 and 33, use of force to suppress a riot and the duty of officers to disperse rioters.

ANNOTATIONS

It is essential to proof of a riot that there be actual or threatened force and violence, in addition to public disorder, confusion and uproar. Moreover, even if a tumultuous disturbance of the peace breaks out during an assembly, the accused must be shown first to have taken some part in that disturbance in one way or another. In addition, the requirement that the persons in the neighbourhood of the assembly fear “on reasonable grounds” that the members of the assembly will disturb the peace tumultuously requires that these grounds be manifest to any reasonable person within the assembly. What is required is at least objective foresight of the consequences set out in s. 63. Finally, the accused must be shown not only to have acted as a participant, but also to have intended to take part in the riot or to have been so reckless as to have acted as if he did so intend. The offence therefore requires proof of a guilty intent, does not impose absolute liability and therefore does not violate s. 7 of the Charter: R. v. Brien (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 550, [1994] N.W.T.R. 59 (S.C.).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Definition of "unlawful assembly", see s. 63. The trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515, except that the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer or the officer in charge pursuant to ss. 496, 497 and 498. Arrest powers for breach of the peace, see ss. 30, 31. Use of force to suppress a riot and the duty of officers to disperse rioters, see ss. 32 and 33. The offence of causing a disturbance is in s. 175.

ANNOTATIONS

The actions of only a few members can turn the assembly into an unlawful one as defined in s. 63 and thereby render all members of the assembly liable to be convicted of the offence under this section: R. v. Kalyn et al. (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 378 (Sask. Prov. Ct.).

READING PROCLAMATION.*67. A person who is

- (a) a justice, mayor or sheriff, or the lawful deputy of a mayor or sheriff,
- (b) a warden or deputy warden of a prison, or
- (c) the institutional head of a penitentiary, as those expressions are defined in subsection 2(1) of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act, or that person's deputy, who receives notice that, at any place within the jurisdiction of the person, twelve or more persons are unlawfully and riotously assembled together shall go to that place and, after approaching as near as is safe, if the person is satisfied that a riot is in progress, shall command silence and thereupon make or cause to be made in a loud voice a proclamation in the following words or to the like effect:

Her Majesty the Queen charges and commands all persons being assembled immediately to disperse and peaceably to depart to their habitations or to their lawful business on the pain of being guilty of an offence for which, on conviction, they may be sentenced to imprisonment for life. GOD SAVE THE QUEEN. CROSS-REFERENCES

Definition of "justice", see s. 2. Definition of riot, see s. 64. The definition of sheriff or mayor will be found in the relevant provincial legislation. A justice, sheriff and mayor are peace officers as defined by s. 2. Offences of obstructing a peace officer, see s. 129 and assaulting a peace officer in execution of duty, see s. 270. The offence of taking part in a riot is in s. 65. Punishment of offences in relation to reading of proclamation, see s. 68. Offence by peace officer in failing to suppress riot, see s. 69. Use of force to suppress a riot and the duty of officers to disperse rioters, see ss. 32 and 33.

SYNOPSIS

Section 67 provides for what is commonly referred to as "reading the riot act" by a justice, mayor or sheriff (or lawful deputy of the latter two officials) or the head of a prison or penitentiary. The prerequisites for reading the proclamation are that there be 12 or more people who are unlawfully and riotously assembled and that the official is satisfied that a riot is in progress. The official must then command silence, and shall read, or cause another to read, the "riot act" in a loud voice from as close to those assembled as is safe.

The precise words set out in the Criminal Code need not be used, so long as the words are “of like effect”.

OFFENCES RELATED TO PROCLAMATION.

68. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who

- (a) opposes, hinders or assaults, wilfully and with force, a person who begins to make or is about to begin to make or is making the proclamation referred to in section 67 so that it is not made;
- (b) does not peaceably disperse and depart from a place where the proclamation referred to in section 67 is made within thirty minutes after it is made; or
- (c) does not depart from a place within thirty minutes when he has reasonable grounds to believe that the proclamation referred to in section 67 would have been made in that place if some person had not opposed, hindered or assaulted, wilfully and with force, a person who would have made it. R.S., c. C-34, s. 69.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Procedure for reading proclamation, see s. 67 and cross-references noted under that section. The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515. Conviction for these offences will, in certain circumstances, require imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(1).

SYNOPSIS

Section 68 creates a number of indictable offences which flow from the reading of the “riot act” pursuant to s. 67, or an effort to do so. The maximum punishment for these offences is imprisonment for life.

Section 68(a) sets out a number of different means of obstructing the efforts of the person who is about to begin, or who has begun, to read the “riot act”. The actions of the accused must prevent the completion or the reading of the proclamation. There is no intention specified in the paragraph beyond the intention to do the specified acts wilfully and with force to thwart the reading of the proclamation.

Section 68(b) makes it an offence not to leave the location where the “riot act” was read and to disperse peacefully within 30 minutes of it being read.

Section 68(c) imposes liability for failing to depart and disperse in similar terms to that described in para. (b) if the accused had reasonable grounds to believe that the proclamation, although not read, would have been, had the official not been thwarted from doing so.

NEGLECT BY PEACE OFFICER.

69. A peace officer who receives notice that there is a riot within his jurisdiction and, without reasonable excuse, fails to take all reasonable steps to suppress the riot is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 70.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Peace officer” is defined in s. 2. Definition of “riot”, see s. 64. Procedure for reading proclamation to disperse rioters, see s. 67 and see cross-references noted under that section. Release pending trial is governed by s. 515 except that the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

ORDERS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL / General or special order / Punishment.

- 70. (1) The Governor in Council may, by proclamation, make orders
- (a) to prohibit assemblies, without lawful authority, of persons for the purpose
    - (i) of training or drilling themselves,
    - (ii) of being trained or drilled to the use of arms, or
    - (iii) of practising military exercises; or
  - (b) to prohibit persons when assembled for any purpose from training or drilling themselves or from being trained or drilled.
- (2) An order that is made under subsection (1) may be general or may be made applicable to particular places, districts or assemblies to be specified in the order.
- (3) Every one who contravenes an order made under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 71.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Proclamation" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, and procedure for issuing proclamations in s. 18 of that Act. Publication of proclamations is governed by the Statutory Instruments Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. S-22.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2).

Release pending trial is governed by s. 515 except that the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 70 authorizes the Governor in Council (Cabinet) to make orders which prohibit various types of assemblies for the purpose of activities such as the training or drilling of groups, practising military exercises or arms training. The section only applies if the assembly is without lawful authority. It also prohibits persons who are assembled for any purpose from undertaking any of the prohibited activities.

Subsection (2) states that an order made under s. 70(1) may be general or made specifically applicable at a particular area, assembly and so on. One example of the latter would be an order prohibiting a particular private paramilitary training school from being run within Canada.

If the accused contravenes an order proclaimed under s. 70(1), s. 70(3) makes this an indictable offence punishable by up to five years imprisonment. Basic principles of criminal responsibility (and s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms) would require that there be proof that the accused knew of the existence of the relevant order.

Duels

DUELLING.

- 71. Every one who

(a) challenges or attempts by any means to provoke another person to fight a duel,
 (b) attempts to provoke a person to challenge another person to fight a duel, or
 (c) accepts a challenge to fight a duel,
 is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 72.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has an election as to mode of trial for this offence, pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515 except that the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498. Conviction for this offence may in some circumstances attract imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(2).

ANNOTATIONS

The act of the accused in loading a gun and carrying it out to the street in acceptance of a challenge by the deceased constitutes an unlawful act within this section which will support a charge of manslaughter notwithstanding the shot which killed the deceased was fired accidentally: R. v. Lelievre (1962), 132 C.C.C. 288, 32 D.L.R. (2d) 723 (Ont. C.A.).

Forcible Entry and Detainer

FORCIBLE ENTRY / Matters not material / Forcible detainer / Questions of law.

72. (1) A person commits forcible entry when that person enters real property that is in the actual and peaceable possession of another in a manner that is likely to cause a breach of the peace or reasonable apprehension of a breach of the peace.

(1.1) For the purposes of subsection (1), it is immaterial whether or not a person is entitled to enter the real property or whether or not that person has any intention of taking possession of the real property.

(2) A person commits forcible detainer when, being in actual possession of real property without colour of right, he detains it in a manner that is likely to cause a breach of the peace or reasonable apprehension of a breach of the peace, against a person who is entitled by law to possession of it.

(3) The questions whether a person is in actual and peaceable possession or is in actual possession without colour of right are questions of law. R.S., c. C-34, s. 73; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 10.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Punishment for this offence is prescribed by s. 73 and see cross-references under that section as to mode of trial. There are a number of related provisions as follows: ss. 30 and 31, arrest and detention for breach of the peace; s. 40, defence of dwelling against person forcibly breaking or entering dwelling house; ss. 41 and 42, defence of real property.

The offence of break and enter with intent to commit an indictable offence is defined by s. 348. The term "colour of right" is not defined, but likely embraces an honest, although mistaken, belief of entitlement to the property although the mistake is based on a mistake of law or fact. [See discussion of colour of right in relation to theft in R. v. Howson, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 348 (Ont. C.A.).]

SYNOPSIS

Section 72 sets out what constitutes forcible entry or detainer.

Section 72(1) states that forcible entry requires proof that the accused entered real property that was actually peaceably possessed by another. It must be further shown that the accused did so in a manner that is likely to produce either a breach of the peace or a reasonable apprehension of a breach of the peace. Section 72(1.1) provides the clarification that it is irrelevant whether the accused is entitled to enter the property or whether the accused intends to try to take possession of it. Section 72(3) specifies that the issue of whether a person is in actual and peaceable possession is a question of law.

Section 72(2) spells out what comprises forcible detainer. It focuses upon the improper retention of real property by an accused who does not have a colour of right for doing so against the person who has a lawful right to possess this property. The accused must be in actual possession of the real property. It must be shown that the manner of detaining the property is likely to cause a breach of the peace or the reasonable apprehension of this occurring. Subsection (3) provides that the question of whether the accused is in actual possession without colour of right is a question of law. This means that the judge will determine these issues.

PUNISHMENT.

- 73. Every person who commits forcible entry or forcible detainer is guilty of (a) an offence punishable on summary conviction; or (b) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 74; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 11; 1992, c. 1, s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the prosecution proceeds by way of summary conviction, the trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Where the prosecution proceeds by way of indictment, then the accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2), except that the accused is eligible for release by the peace officer and officer in charge pursuant to ss. 496, 497 and 498. Conviction for this offence may in some circumstances attract imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(2).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the punishment for offences committed under s. 72 (forcible entry or detainer). The offence may be prosecuted by way of summary conviction or by indictment. In the latter case, the maximum sentence is two years imprisonment.

Piracy

PIRACY BY LAW OF NATIONS / Punishment.

- 74. (1) Every one commits piracy who does any act that, by the law of nations, is piracy.
(2) Every one who commits piracy while in or out of Canada is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 75; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

There is no definition of piracy in the Criminal Code, apparently because there was no internationally recognized definition of piracy when the Code was first enacted. In their text, Canadian Criminal Law, International and Transnational Aspects (Butterworths, 1981), Williams and Castel suggest that the 1958 Geneva Convention on the High Seas, to which Canada is not a party, is generally declaratory of established principles relating to piracy. Articles 15 and 16 of that Convention are as follows:

Article 15

Piracy consists of any of the following acts:

- (1) Any illegal acts of violence, detention or any act of depredation, committed for private ends by the crew or the passengers of a private ship or a private aircraft, and directed:
  - (a) On the high seas, against another ship or aircraft, or against persons or property on board such ship or aircraft;
  - (b) Against a ship, aircraft, persons or property in a place outside the jurisdiction of any state;
- (2) Any act of voluntary participation in the operation of a ship or of an aircraft with knowledge of facts making it a pirate ship or aircraft;
- (3) Any act of inciting or of intentionally facilitating an act described in sub-paragraph 1 or sub-paragraph 2 of this article.

Article 16

The acts of piracy, as defined in Article 15, committed by a warship, government ship or government aircraft whose crew has mutinied and taken control of the ship or aircraft are assimilated to acts committed by a private ship.

As to unavailability of defence of compulsion by threats, see s. 17. The offence in this section is triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. Where the offence is committed on the territorial sea or on internal waters, see s. 477. Conviction for this offence will require imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(1).

SYNOPSIS

Section 74 makes it an indictable offence to commit any act which is defined by the law of nations as piracy.

Subsection (2) provides for a maximum sentence of imprisonment for life regardless of whether the act of piracy takes place in or out of Canada.

PIRATICAL ACTS.

75. Every one who, while in or out of Canada,

- (a) steals a Canadian ship,
  - (b) steals or without lawful authority throws overboard, damages or destroys anything that is part of the cargo, supplies or fittings in a Canadian ship,
  - (c) does or attempts to do a mutinous act on a Canadian ship, or
  - (d) counsels a person to do anything mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c),
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 76; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 7(3).

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Counsels” is defined in s. 22(3). “Steal” is defined in s. 2 as theft. Theft is defined in s. 322. Inciting to mutiny is also an offence under s. 53.

The offences in this section are triable only by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. Where the offence is committed on the territorial sea or on internal waters, see s. 477. Conviction for this offence may, in some circumstances, require imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(1).

SYNOPSIS

This indictable offence deals with piracy, but is limited to such acts committed in relation to a Canadian ship. The maximum sentence upon conviction for any of the offences created by this section is 14 years.

Paragraph (a) prohibits stealing a Canadian ship. Paragraph (b) prohibits, without lawful authority, throwing anything overboard, stealing, or damaging either the cargo of the ship or any part of supplies or fittings of the ship. Paragraph (c) states that doing or attempting to do a mutinous act on a Canadian ship is an offence. Finally, para. (d) makes it an offence to counsel any one to do any of the acts in the aforementioned paragraphs.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Definition of “flight”, see s. 7(8). Aircraft deemed to be in service, see s. 7(9). Assault is defined in s. 265.

This offence, if committed outside Canada, is deemed to have been committed in Canada where the accused is found in Canada (s. 7(2)). As to place of trial, see s. 7(5). Availability of plea of autrefois, see s. 7(6). Requirement of consent of Attorney General of Canada where offence committed outside Canada and accused is not a Canadian citizen, see s. 7(7). Conviction for this offence may in some circumstances require imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substance under s. 100(1).

SYNOPSIS

Section 77 creates five indictable offences relating to endangering aircraft safety while in flight or rendering an aircraft incapable of flight. Upon conviction under s. 77, a person is liable to imprisonment for life.

Paragraphs (a) and (e) involve actions by the accused during flight. The former makes it an offence to commit an assault that is likely to endanger the safety of the aircraft. Paragraph (e) imposes criminal liability upon any one who communicates any information to another that the accused knows is false and endangers the safety of the aircraft. Note that, unlike the other paragraphs in this section, para. (e) requires actual danger to result from the accused’s action.

Paragraphs (b) and (c) prohibit activities which either result in damage to the aircraft so that it is likely to endanger the safety of the aircraft or make it incapable of flight. Paragraph (d) prohibits interference with air navigation facilities which is likely to endanger aircraft in flight. The doing of an action specified in one of these paragraphs which has the likelihood of producing the endangerment is sufficient to make out the offence.

Note that there must be an actual explosion for this section to come into operation. The accused may rely upon a lawful excuse for the failure.

If death resulted or was likely to result, the accused is liable to life imprisonment. For lesser potential or actual harm, the punishment is a maximum of 14 years.

ANNOTATIONS

Other offences in relation to explosives: s. 78 (taking explosive aboard civil aircraft); s. 80 (breach of duty of care in relation to explosives); s. 82 (possession without lawful excuse).

SYNOPSIS

This section makes certain actions relating to dangerous substances into indictable offences and provides for the punishment of such actions.

Section 81(1)(a) and (b) prohibit actions done which may result in bodily harm to another or, in the case of para. (a), either bodily harm or serious damage to property. Violations of either paragraph carry a maximum sentence of life imprisonment. Section 81(1)(a) requires that the accused did the action with the intention of causing the explosion of an explosive device. Section 81(1)(b) requires that the accused intended to cause bodily harm to another by doing one of the things specified in subparas. (i) to (iii). Note that para. (a) requires the likelihood of serious bodily harm or death, but not the intent to cause such harm. On the other hand, para. (b) requires the intent to harm but no likelihood that such harm result.

Section 81(1)(c) makes it an offence to place or throw an explosive device. However, it must be shown that the accused did the act with the intention of damaging or destroying property without lawful excuse.

Section 81(1)(d) relates to the possession, care or control over such a device. To make out the offence under this paragraph, it must be shown that the accused had the intention by the possession, etc., of the device to either endanger life, cause serious property damage or to enable another to do so.

The maximum sentence for offences under s. 81(1)(c) and (d) is 14 years.

ANNOTATIONS

A conspiracy to violate para. (1)(a) may be based on possession of explosives where the requisite intent is shown, notwithstanding the existence of the specific possession offence in para. (1)(d): R. v. Musitano et al. (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 53 O.R. (2d) 321 (Ont. C.A.).

ANNOTATIONS

“Firearm” – This definition includes not only a barrelled weapon that is actually capable of causing serious bodily injury or death but also anything that has the potential of becoming a firearm through an adaptation. The acceptable amount of adaptation, and the time required therefor, for something still to remain within the definition is dependent upon the nature of the offence where the definition is involved. The purpose of each section must be identified and the amount, nature, and time spent for adaptation determined so as to give effect to Parliament’s intention when enacting the particular section: R. v. Covin and Covin (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 240, 3 D.L.R. (4th) 558, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 725 (5:0).

There is no burden on the Crown to negative what theoretically might be a defence, that the pistol was not a firearm in the sense that it was incapable of firing bullets or misfires, but has no foundation in the evidence. “If there is evidence on the record either viva voce or based upon an examination of the exhibit itself from which it can be reasonably inferred that the alleged firearm is, because of some physical defect or inadequacy, incapable of being fired then, depending on the circumstances, it might be that it is something less than a firearm . . .": R. v. Marchesani, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 350, [1970] 2 O.R. 57 (H.C.J.).

"Prohibited weapon" – A knife may come within para. (b) whether or not as a knife it comes within the ordinary meaning of weapon and whether or not it was designed to be used as a prohibited weapon if in fact its blade through wear and tear or alteration can be fully opened for use by applying centrifugal force or gravity to the blade. It is the capability and not the design of the knife which determines whether or not it is a prohibited weapon. The words "any knife that has a blade that opens automatically by . . . centrifugal force" should be interpreted as meaning one that opens by means of a centrifugal force applied to the blade and not to the handle. The word "open" in the definition means open with the capacity for use as a weapon. Any knife which, when held in a position where the handle is above the blade and the blade drops open at or about a 90-degree angle to the handle and by gravity continues to open fully, available for use, when the handle is placed in a vertical position or when centrifugal force is applied to a partially opened blade is a knife having a blade that opens automatically by gravity or centrifugal force and is therefore a prohibited weapon: R. v. Richard and Walker (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 333, 24 C.R. (3d) 373 (N.B.C.A.).

A knife which will only open by holding the blade and applying centrifugal force to the handle is not within the definition. However, a knife although not originally so designed which through long use opens by application of centrifugal force to the blade is a prohibited weapon: R. v. Archer (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 129 (Ont. C.A.).

Despite the fact that an additional manual operation had to be performed, before the knife, a so-called "butterfly knife," was in a position to be opened automatically by centrifugal force and that some skill was required to perform the operation did not prevent the knife from being a prohibited weapon: R. v. Vaughan (1991), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 576, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 691, 45 Q.A.C. 302 (5:0).

The word "weapon" in para. (e) of the definition should be given a broader meaning than as defined in s. 2, to encompass any article or device that can, on occasion, be used to inflict injury, harm or death to a person whether used offensively or defensively. Thus, in the absence of a challenge to the power of the Governor in Council to designate the device as a prohibited weapon on the basis that it does not fall within this normal everyday meaning of weapon, a prohibited weapon under para. (e) is simply what the Governor in Council has declared to be a prohibited weapon: R. v. K.(A.) (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 135, 9 C.R. (4th) 269, 9 W.A.C. 244 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 70 C.C.C. (3d) vi. Contra: R. v. Murray (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 568, 7 O.A.C. 127 (Ont. C.A.) where it was held that the definition of "weapon" in s. 2 applies to a charge under s. 90 and, thus, the Crown must also prove that the device was a weapon within that definition.

The unassembled parts of a silencer do not come within the definition in para. (a): R. v. Ross (1984), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 175 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

"Restricted weapon" – A determination by the Governor in Council under para. (d) that a particular weapon is in this class is not subject to judicial review: Lawrence v. The Queen (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 230, [1978] 2 F.C. 782 (T.D.).

A pistol, although lacking a magazine when found in the possession of the accused, comes within para. (a) of this definition, notwithstanding that in this state two hands would be required to fire. Once the magazine was loaded, it could be fired with one hand and was thus "designed" to be aimed and fired by the action of one hand: R. v. Watkins and Graber (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 465 (B.C.C.A.).

An antique pistol whose firing pin had been filed down and which had not apparently been used was not a firearm within the meaning of this section. The evidence was that a replacement part could not easily have been found and the pistol could not have been put in a condition capable of firing in a reasonable time: R. v. J.F. (1987), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 81 (Que. C.A.).

Offences Related to the Use of Firearms and other Offensive Weapons

85. [Repealed. 1995, c. 39, s. 139.] [For text of the new s. 85 please see p. CC/177.]

POINTING A FIREARM / Careless use, etc. of firearm / Storage, etc. of firearms.

86. (1) Every one who, without lawful excuse, points a firearm at another person, whether the firearm is loaded or unloaded,

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who, without lawful excuse, uses, carries, handles, ships or stores any firearm or ammunition in a careless manner or without reasonable precautions for the safety of other persons

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment
  - (i) in the case of a first offence, for a term not exceeding two years, and
  - (ii) in the case of a second or subsequent offence, for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

NOTE: Subsection (2) re-enacted by 1991, c. 40, s. 3 as subsecs. (2) and (3) (that part of s. 3 which enacts subsec. (2) to come into force by order of the Governor in Council, however, subsec. (2) as enacted by 1991, c. 40, s. 3 repealed by 1995, c. 39, s. 163 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council)). The unproclaimed text printed in lightface italics reads as follows:

Careless handling of firearm.

(2) Every person who uses, carries, handles, ships or stores any firearm or ammunition in a manner that shows wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Every person who stores, displays, handles or transports any firearm in a manner contrary to a regulation made under paragraph 116(1)(g)

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 84; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Firearm" is defined in s. 84(1).

Where the prosecution seeks the higher penalty prescribed by subsec. (2)(a)(ii), it must comply with the provisions of s. 665. Section 667 provides one method of proof of the prior conviction. Note that no reference to the prior conviction may be made in the indictment, by virtue of s. 664.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offences in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates two offences: subsec. (1) deals with pointing a firearm; subsec. (2) relates to the careless storage, or use of a firearm or ammunition.

Subsection (1) creates a general intent offence which is proven if a firearm is pointed (loaded or not) at another and there is no lawful excuse for so doing. If the pointing of the firearm was an excessive reaction to a situation, such as removing unarmed trespassers whom one is not afraid of, no lawful excuse will be made out.

Subsection (2) requires that it be proven that the care used to deal with the weapon fell below the reasonable standard of care required to ensure that no person is endangered by the weapon. In addition, it must be shown that there is no lawful excuse for the apparent carelessness. Case-law has established that the offence is proven if only a single person is endangered, notwithstanding the use of the words "other persons" in the section.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – The offence created by this subsection is one of general intent for the purpose of the self-induced intoxication defence: R. v. Kelly (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 203, 50 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 106 (Nfld. Dist. Ct.).

Subsec. (2) – This offence requires proof of conduct showing a marked departure from the standard of care of a reasonably prudent person in the circumstances. So interpreted this provision does not violate s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This offence can also constitute the underlying or predicate offence for unlawful act manslaughter: R. v. Gosset, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 76, 83 C.C.C. (3d) 494, 23 C.R. (4th) 280; R. v. Finlay, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 103, 83 C.C.C. (3d) 513, 23 C.R. (4th) 321.

The offence of use of a firearm in a careless manner was made out where the accused intentionally discharged a firearm over the head of another hunter in order to scare him: R. v. Zimmer (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 190 (B.C.C.A.).

The offence under this subsection is not included in the offence of pointing a firearm under subsec. (1): R. v. Morrison (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (B.C.C.A.).

In a series of cases, the Supreme Court of Canada had occasion to explore the fault element in cases of so-called "penal negligence" apparently as distinguished from criminal negligence. Careless use of a firearm would be one of these offences. In R. v. Creighton, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 3, 83 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 23 C.R. (4th) 189. McLachlin J. writing for a majority of the court suggested the following approach to proof of such offences. The first question is whether the actus reus is established. This requires that the negligence constitute a marked departure from the standards of a reasonable person in all the circumstances of the case. The next question is whether the mens rea is established. Normally the mens rea for objective foresight of risk of harm is inferred from the facts. The standard is that of the reasonable person in the circumstances of the accused. The normal inference that a person who committed a manifestly dangerous act failed to direct their mind to the risk and the need to take care may be negated by evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to lack of capacity to appreciate the risk. Short of incapacity, personal factors are not relevant whether those factors might indicate, for example, either a lack of experience or a special experience. Also see: R. v. Gosset, supra; R. v. Naglik, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 122, 83 C.C.C. (3d) 526, 23 C.R. (4th) 335; and R. v. Finlay, supra.

A finding of careless storage cannot be based upon the personal opinion of a police officer. Where existing regulations dealing with the storage of firearms and ammunition were not relevant, as in the instant case, it was encumbant upon the Crown to adduce expert evidence to establish that the storage of the firearms and ammunition was careless: R. v. Halliday (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 574, 82 O.A.C. 150 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 103 C.C.C. (3d) vi. In considering carelessness, the federal firearm storage regulations are relevant in determining the appropriate standard for those who are transporting or storing guns: R. v. Blanchard (1994), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 360 (Y.T.T.C.).

Offences Related to Possession of Firearms and other Offensive Weapons

POSSESSION OF WEAPON OR IMITATION.

87. Every one who carries or has in his possession a weapon or imitation thereof, for a purpose dangerous to the public peace or for the purpose of committing an offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 85; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Weapon” is defined in s. 2 and “possession” is defined in s. 4(3).

An accused charged with this offence may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the mandatory prohibition order for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives prescribed by s. 100(1) if violence against a person is used, threatened or attempted and otherwise liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2).

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

This section is broader than the immediately preceding sections as it deals with “weapons” or an “imitation thereof”, not firearms. The definition of “weapon” in s. 2 applies so that anything designed as a weapon or which the accused intends to use as a weapon satisfies the definition. The crucial element in this offence is the purpose for which the accused has the weapon. Merely using the weapon in a way which is in fact dangerous will not make out the charge unless it is proven that this was the accused’s purpose for possessing the weapon. All circumstances surrounding the possession of the weapon, including its use, if any, will be considered to determine the accused’s purpose in possessing the weapon.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence – The offence, contrary to this section, requires proof of possession and proof that the purpose of that possession was one dangerous to the public peace. There must, at some time, be a meeting of these two elements and generally the purpose will have been formed prior to the taking of possession and will continue as possession is taken. However, the elements of the offence must be distinguished from the evidentiary problems which can arise as demonstrated by cases such as R. v. Proverbs, infra, where the proof of the unlawful purpose is only through the actual use of the weapon. In this case, R. v. Cassidy (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) (7:0), the court held that it did not have to determine whether the accused could never be convicted if the actual use was the only evidence of the purpose since there was evidence adduced of formation of the unlawful purpose prior to use of the weapon.

The purpose for which the accused had possession of the weapon must be determined at an instant of time which precedes its use. The use of the weapon in a manner dangerous to the public peace does not constitute the offence although the formation of the unlawful purpose may be inferred from the circumstances in which the weapon was used. Thus, if the accused, in fear of harm to himself in his own home loaded, on the sudden, a weapon which he had not had for a purpose dangerous to the public peace and only intended to use it to defend himself in the event that his premises were broken into, unaware that it was the police seeking entry to execute a warrant, then the offence was not made out: R. v. Proverbs (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 249 (Ont. C.A.).

Relevance of self-defence – The subjective purpose, i.e., self-defence, of a person carrying an offensive weapon is only a factor which should be considered in determining whether an offence has been committed. Therefore, notwithstanding the explanation given by the possessor of the weapon the trial Judge may still convict if the other circumstances in the evidence prove a purpose dangerous to the public peace: R. v. Nelson (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 29, 19 C.R.N.S. 88 (Ont. C.A.) (4:1).

This section does not prohibit persons arming themselves for self-protection and in the absence of other circumstances the offence under this section is not committed if the accused carries for self-defence a weapon that is an appropriate instrument with which to repel, in a lawful manner, the type of attack reasonably apprehended and if the accused is competent to handle the weapon and likely to use it responsibly: R. v. Sulland (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 68, 41 B.C.L.R. 167 (C.A.).

Meaning of "weapon" – A broken beer bottle was held to be a weapon within the meaning of "offensive weapon" in s. 2 so as to support a conviction under this section: R. v. Allan (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 521 (N.B.C.A.). As also was sulphuric acid where the accused intended to inflict injury, albeit to himself in a suicide attempt. The further element of the purpose dangerous to the public peace was established where the accused exposed others to danger, namely those whom he knew would attempt to frustrate his suicide: R. v. Dugan (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 45 (Ont. Prov. Ct.). Similarly, R. v. Pelly, [1980] 1 W.W.R. 120 (Sask. Prov. Ct.).

Proof of offence – The possession by the accused of weapons in his own home does not preclude a finding of a purpose dangerous to the public peace: R. v. Stavroff (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 101 D.L.R. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Evidence that the accused was in a "skid-row" bar and attempted to hide a jack-knife with a 4-inch blade when the police entered the bar, where there was no evidence of any disturbance in the bar, the police merely being on routine patrol, was not sufficient to support an inference that the possession was for a purpose dangerous to the public peace: R. v. Halvorsen (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 543, 10 C.R. (3d) 252 (B.C.C.A.).

WHILE ATTENDING PUBLIC MEETING.

88. Every one who, without lawful excuse, has a weapon in his possession while he is attending or is on his way to attend a public meeting is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 86; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Weapon" is defined in s. 2 and "possession" is defined in s. 4(3).

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

This section focuses on the circumstances under which the accused possesses a weapon. If the accused has a weapon while attending or on the way to a public meeting, the accused is guilty unless there is a lawful excuse for the possession of the weapon. An example of such an excuse would be that the accused is a peace officer armed in the line of duty (see s. 92). No additional intention, such as the intention to use the weapon, is required.

CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPON.

89. Every one who carries a weapon concealed, unless he is the holder of a permit under which he may lawfully so carry it,

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 87; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Weapon” is defined in s. 2.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

The Criminal Code does not in terms provide for a permit to carry a concealed weapon, but see s. 84 which defines “permit” as a permit issued under s. 110 relating to permits to carry restricted weapons and note the exemptions for peace officers etc. in s. 92.

Section 115 reverses the burden of proof that the person was the holder of a permit but also provides that a document purporting to be a permit is evidence of the statements contained therein.

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of “carries” – In a case decided under the old s. 85 it was held that a person carries a weapon if it is in an automobile of which he has care and control and it was not necessary that the accused have the weapon on his person: R. v. Hanabury, infra.

Meaning of “concealed” – To prove concealment it must be established that the accused took steps to hide an object that he knew to be a weapon so that it would not be observed or come to the notice of others. On the other hand, a gun which is carried in a gun case will not be considered concealed. In most cases the gun carrying case will resemble the firearm itself so that it cannot be considered to be hidden. Wrapping a firearm in a blanket or canvass and securing it with a rope as required by some provincial regulations should also not be considered to be concealing the weapon. In most cases the wrapped weapon will still resemble a firearm and not be considered to be concealed. Finally placing of a firearm in a locked trunk in a locked and unattended vehicle in compliance with Federal regulations must be considered an exception to the carrying a concealed weapon offence: R. v. Felawka, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 199, 85 C.C.C. (3d) 248, 25 C.R. (4th) 70.

POSSESSION OF PROHIBITED WEAPON / Prohibited weapon in motor vehicle / Saving provision / Classes of persons / Large-capacity cartridge magazines / Idem.

90. (1) Every one who has in his possession a prohibited weapon

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who is an occupant of a motor vehicle in which he knows there is a prohibited weapon

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who comes into possession of a prohibited weapon by operation of law and thereafter, with reasonable despatch, lawfully disposes thereof.

(3.1) Subsection (1) does not apply in a province with respect to any person designated by the Attorney General of the province as a person who belongs to a class of persons who require a prohibited weapon described in paragraph (c), (e) or (f) of the definition "prohibited weapon" in subsection 84(1) or any component or part thereof for a purpose that the Governor in Council prescribes by regulation to be an industrial purpose, or to any person who is under the direct and immediate supervision of such a person.

(3.2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no person is guilty of an offence under subsection (1) by reason only that the person possesses a prohibited weapon described in paragraph (f) of the definition of that expression in subsection 84(1), where

- (a) that person has been authorized in writing by the local registrar of firearms to be a person who may possess such a weapon for use in conjunction with a firearm that is suitable for use in shooting competitions designated by the Attorney General and is lawfully possessed by the person and where the person has complied with all conditions for the possession of that weapon that are prescribed by regulations or that are required by the local registrar of firearms in the particular circumstances and in the interests of the safety of the person or of any other person; or
- (b) that person is a person who is designated for the purposes of paragraph 95(3)(b).

(4) Subsection (2) does not apply to an occupant of a motor vehicle in which there is a prohibited weapon where, by virtue of subsection (3) or section 92, subsection (1) does not apply to the person who is in possession of that weapon. R.S., c. C-34, s. 88; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 28, s. 6; 1991, c. 40, ss. 4, 35; 1994, c. 44, s. 6.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Weapon" and "motor vehicle" are defined in s. 2 and "prohibited weapon" is defined in s. 84. Reference should also be made to restricted weapons orders made by the Governor in Council and the exemption for certain types of weapons by virtue of s. 84.

"Possession" is defined in s. 4(3).

An authorization to intercept private communications may be obtained in relation to an offence under this section by virtue of ss. 183 and 186.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable depending on the circumstances to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Note related offences: s. 95, importing etc. of prohibited weapon; s. 104(1), failing to report finding of prohibited weapon; s. 95.1, making automatic firearm.

Note exemption for peace officers, members of the armed forces etc. in s. 92.

The special search and seizure provisions in relation to prohibited weapons are set out in ss. 101 to 103.

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

This section proscribes the possession of prohibited weapons (as defined in s. 84). The accused must be aware of the characteristics of the weapon which make it prohibited or be reckless about such features. A mistake of law as to whether the weapon is prohibited affords no defence.

Under subsec. (2), anyone who is an occupant of a motor vehicle which he knows contains a prohibited weapon, is guilty of an offence.

The offences created by subsecs. (1) and (2) are subject to exceptions as set out in subsecs. (3), (3.11), (3.2) and (4). Subsection (3) provides the defence that the person in possession of such a weapon obtained it by lawful means and disposed of it within a reasonable time. Subsection (4) states that the person in the car, referred to in subsec. (2), will not be held liable if the person in possession of the prohibited weapon is a peace officer or other person permitted to have such a weapon pursuant to s. 92(1).

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence / *mens rea – Mens rea is an element of this offence and where the prohibited weapon is a knife “that opens automatically by gravity or centrifugal force” as defined in s. 84(1)(b), ignorance by the accused that the knife possessed this quality is a defence to a charge under this section: R. v. Phillips (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 548 (Ont. C.A.).

The requisite mens rea is supplied by either knowledge or recklessness with respect to the characteristics of the knife which, in fact, make it a prohibited weapon: R. v. Archer (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 129 (Ont. C.A.).

However in R. v. Richard and Walker (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 333, 24 C.R. (3d) 373 (N.B.C.A.) it was held that the offence was one of strict liability but it was open to the accused to avoid liability by proof that he did not know that the blade would open by the application of centrifugal force to the blade.

Provided the accused was aware of the characteristics which make the weapon a prohibited weapon, it is no defence that he was unaware that such a weapon was prohibited. The accused’s mistake is one of law: R. v. Baxter (1982), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 447 (Alta. C.A.).

Meaning of prohibited weapon / also see notes under s. 84 – In R. v. Vokac (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 201, [1978] 5 W.W.R. 397 (B.C.C.A.) it was held that where the prohibited weapon was defined under Prohibited Weapons Order No. 1, SOR/74-297 as “any device designed to be used for the purpose of injuring, immobilizing or otherwise incapacitating any person by the discharge therefrom of . . . (b) any liquid, spray, powder or other substance that is capable of injuring, immobilizing or otherwise incapacitating any person” the label on the spray canister was admissible as proof of the purpose for which it was designed although the label could not prove the capability of the spray. This latter element was proved by viva voce evidence of a police officer who experimented with the spray seized from the accused.

In order to constitute a prohibited weapon it is not sufficient that the device falls within the description set out in a Prohibited Weapons Order. The device must also come within the definition of “weapon” in s. 2: R. v. Murray (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 568 (Ont. C.A.). Contra: R. v. K.(A.) (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 135, 9 C.R. (4th) 269, 9 W.A.C. 244, leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 70 C.C.C. (3d) vi, where it was held that the word “weapon” in s. 84(1)(e) should be given a broader meaning than as defined in s. 2 to encompass any article or device that can on occasion be used to inflict injury, harm or death to a person whether used offensively or defensively. Thus, in the absence of a challenge to the power of the Governor in Council to designate the device as a prohibited weapon on the basis that it does not fall within this normal everyday meaning of weapon, a prohibited weapon under s. 84 is simply what the Governor in Council has declared to be a prohibited weapon.

The acceptable amount of adaptation and the time required therefor, for an inoperable weapon such as a sawed-off rifle to remain within the definition of "firearm" in s. 84 is dependent upon the nature of the offence where the definition is involved. The offence under this section is a continuing one having as its purpose the suppression of possession of devices which constitute a particular danger to the public, such as a sawed-off rifle which can easily be concealed because of its reduced length. In view of the nature of the continuing offence of possession of a prohibited weapon and having regard to the purpose of the section, the acceptable amount of adaptation and the time-span required to render the gun operable would be longer than for other offences. Thus, where the sawed-off rifle could be made operable by insertion of a firing unit which could be obtained from local stores and inserted in less than two minutes, then the weapon was a firearm and a prohibited weapon within the meaning of s. 84: R. v. Ferguson (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 256 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Cook (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 61 (Man. C.A.).

REFUSAL AND NOTIFICATION/Request for reference to judge/Hearing/Burden of proof/Order/Appeal/Definition of "appeal court".

90.1. (1) Where, pursuant to paragraph 90(3.2)(a), a local registrar of firearms refuses to authorize in writing that a person is a person who may possess a prohibited weapon referred to in that paragraph for use in conjunction with a firearm that is suitable for use in shooting competitions designated by the Attorney General, the local registrar of firearms shall notify the person in writing of the refusal and the reasons for it and include in the notification a copy of this section.

(2) A person who has received a notification referred to in subsection (1) may, within 30 days after receiving the notification or within such time as is, before or after the expiration of that period, allowed by a provincial court judge, request in writing the local registrar of firearms to refer the matter to a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the person resides.

(3) On a reference by the local registrar of firearms pursuant to subsection (2), the provincial court judge shall fix a date for the hearing of the reference and direct that notice of the hearing be given to the person and to the local registrar of firearms, in such a manner as the provincial court judge may specify.

(4) In a hearing under subsection (3) the burden of proof is on the person to satisfy the provincial court judge that the refusal was not justified.

(5) Where at the conclusion of the hearing under subsection (3), the person has satisfied the provincial court judge that the refusal was not justified, the provincial court judge shall, by order, direct the local registrar of firearms to authorize in writing that the person may possess a prohibited weapon referred to in paragraph 90(3.2)(a) for use in conjunction with a firearm that is suitable for use in shooting competitions designated by the Attorney General and the local registrar of firearms shall immediately comply with the order.

(6) Where a provincial court judge makes an order pursuant to subsection (5), the local registrar of firearms may appeal to the appeal court against the order and the provisions of Part XXVII except sections 816 and 819 and 829 to 836 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of the appeal.

(7) In this section, "appeal court" has the meaning given that expression in subsection 100(11). 1991, c. 40, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Because of the expanded definition of prohibited weapon to include some types of weapons which might be used in legitimate shooting competitions, namely large-capacity cartridge magazines as defined in para. (f) of the definition of prohibited weapon in s. 84(1), provision is made for giving permission in writing to possess such weapons. This section then sets out the procedure for an appeal by way of a reference to a provincial court judge by the person who has been refused permission. Where the judge overturns the decision of the local registrar, then the local registrar is given a right of appeal to the summary conviction appeal court.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Weapon" is defined in s. 2 and "restricted weapon" is defined in s. 84. Reference should also be made to restricted weapons orders made by the Governor in Council and the exemption for certain types of weapons by virtue of s. 84(2).

"Motor vehicle" is defined in s. 2 and "possession" is defined in s. 4(3).

The procedure for obtaining and revocation of a registration certificate for a restricted weapon is set out in ss. 109 and 112. The procedure for a permit to carry a restricted weapon is set out in ss. 110 and 112.

Section 115 reverses the burden of proof that the person was the holder of a permit but also provides that a document purporting to be a permit is evidence of the statements contained therein.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Note related offences: s. 96, sale etc. of restricted weapon; s. 104(1), failing to report finding of restricted weapon, false statements in relation to applications for certificates or permits.

Note exemption for peace officers, members of the armed forces etc. in s. 92.

This section is part of a comprehensive scheme relating to the sale, handling and use of firearms provided for in this Part. The special search and seizure provisions in relation to firearms are set out in ss. 101 to 103. Note especially power to seize restricted weapons pursuant to s. 102(1)(a).

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

Section 91 regulates the possession of restricted weapons. It includes the offence of possessing such a weapon without a registration certificate (subsec. (1)), being in a location not permitted by the permit or registration certificate (subsec. (2)), or being in a motor vehicle in the knowledge that it contains a restricted weapon (subsec. (3)). These offences are subject to specific defences within the subsections creating the offences and the exceptions set out in subsections (4) and (5).

Subsection (6) provides the additional defence for persons in possession of restricted weapons in the ordinary course of a business as set out in s. 105(1) and (2)(b)(ii), unless the person is subject to a prohibition order under Part III of the Criminal Code or as part of a probation order.

Case-law in Ontario indicates that a conviction under this section will not bar a conviction tion for carrying a concealed weapon (under s. 89), as each offence involves sufficiently distinct elements.

ANNOTATIONS

While this is a true criminal offence requiring proof of mens rea, the accused's ignorance that the weapon was a restricted weapon as designated by an amendment to the Restricted Weapons Order, published in the Canada Gazette is ignorance of law and no defence: R. v. Williams (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 58 (Y.T. Terr. Ct.).

Similarly, the accused's mistaken belief that the weapon was an antique and therefore not subject to the registration requirements was no defence: R. v. Létourneau (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 451 (Que. C.A.).

The exemption in subsec. (4)(c) did not apply to police officers who did not have registration certificates and took possession of restricted weapons at the scene of an investigation with the intention of keeping the weapons for themselves. The officers had attended at the scene of a suicide and, at the insistence of a relative of the deceased, had removed all the firearms from the home. The officers treated the firearms as gifts and only turned them in to the police when their superior learned of the "gift". The term "by operation of law" refers to a situation where the person, from the outset, was justified in acquiring the weapon without first having obtained a certificate: R. v. Bibeau (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 339, 1 C.R. (4th) 397 (Que. C.A.).

AMNESTY PERIODS / Idem.

91.1. (1) The Governor in Council may make orders specifying periods of time as amnesty periods with respect to weapons or classes of weapons, or explosive substances, and where the Governor in Council makes such an order, no person who, during that period, delivers such a weapon or explosive substance that is unlawfully in the person's possession to a peace officer, local registrar of firearms or firearms officer for registration or destruction or other disposition as provided in the order is, by reason only of the fact that the person was in possession of the weapon or explosive substance prior to the delivery or by reason only of the fact that the person transported the weapon or explosive substance for purposes of the delivery, guilty of an offence under section 82, 90 or 91, as the case may be.

(2) Any proceedings taken under section 82, 90 or 91 against any person for any action taken by the person in reliance on subsection (1) following an order referred to therein are a nullity. 1991, c. 40, s. 6.

MEMBERS OF FORCES, PEACE OFFICERS, ETC. / Museums.

92. (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act,

- (a) a member of the Canadian Forces or of the armed forces of a state other than Canada who is authorized under paragraph 14(a) of the Visiting Forces Act or who is attached or seconded to any of the Canadian Forces,
- (b) a peace officer or a person in the public service of Canada or employed by the government of a province,
- (c) an officer under the Immigration Act, the Customs Act or the Excise Act, or
- (d) a person who, under the authority of the Canadian Forces or a police force that includes peace officers or public officers, imports, manufactures, repairs, alters, modifies or sells weapons for or on behalf of the Canadian Forces or that police force is not guilty of an offence under this Act by reason only that, in the case of a person described in any of paragraphs (a) to (c), the person is required to possess and possesses a restricted or prohibited weapon for the purpose of the person's duties or employment and, in the case of a person described in paragraph (d), the person possesses a restricted or prohibited weapon in the course of business on behalf of the Canadian Forces or a police force referred to in that paragraph.

(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no operator of or person employed in a museum established by the Chief of the Defence Staff or a museum approved for the purposes of this Part by the Commissioner or the Attorney General of the province in which it is situated is guilty of an offence under this Act by reason only that the person possesses a restricted or prohibited weapon for the purpose of exhibiting that weapon or of storing, repairing, restoring, maintaining or transporting that weapon for the purpose of exhibiting it. R.S., c. C-34, s. 90; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (2nd Supp.), s. 213(3); 1991, c. 40, s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Peace officer" and "public officer" and "Canadian Forces" are defined by s. 2. "Restricted weapon" and "prohibited weapon" are defined by s. 84.

By virtue of s. 84, "commissioner" means the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Section 98 provides for further exemptions for peace officers, members of the armed forces, etc.

ANNOTATIONS

The exemption in subsec. (1) did not apply to police officers who took possession of restricted weapons with the intention of keeping them for themselves. The officers had attended at the scene of a suicide and, at the insistence of a relative of the deceased, had removed all the firearms from the home. The officers treated the firearms as gifts and only turned them in to the police when their superior learned of the "gift". The officers' act in accepting the gifts had nothing to do with the investigation which they were undertaking: R. v. Bibeau (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 339, 1 C.R. (4th) 397 (Que. C.A.).

This is an indictable or summary conviction offence. The maximum term of imprisonment on indictment is five years.

Note: Related offences: s. 91, possession of restricted weapon; s. 104(1), failing to report finding of restricted weapon, false statements in relation to applications for certificates or permits.

Note exemption for peace officers, members of the armed forces etc. in s. 92.

This section is part of a comprehensive scheme relating to the sale, handling and use of firearms provided for in this Part. The special search and seizure provisions in relation to firearms are set out in ss. 101 to 103. Note, especially, power to seize restricted weapons pursuant to s. 102(1)(a).

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

Section 96 creates additional offences relating to transactions or transfers of restricted weapons to persons without the requisite permit. Subsection (1) provides broad prohibitions covering actions ranging from giving to delivering restricted weapons to a person who does not hold a proper permit. However, subsec. (2) allows a permit-holder to let another person use a restricted weapon in the same manner as the permit-holder may, so long as he remains within the immediate supervision of the permit holder.

The section also prohibits the importation of a restricted weapon unless the importer has a permit to possess such a weapon.

Both offences under this section are punishable on summary conviction or indictment, with the maximum term of imprisonment on indictment being five years.

Transitional provision

1991, c. 40, s. 34 provides as follows:

Notwithstanding subsection 48(1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, a permit issued under subsection 110(5) of the Criminal Code or under section 97 of the Criminal Code, as that section read immediately before the coming into force of section 3 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, other than a permit that is expressed to be issued for a specified period, ceases to be in force or have any effect on the day that is ninety days after the date of the coming into force of this section, unless the permit is revoked before that day.

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Firearm” and “firearms acquisition certificate” are defined in s. 84.

The procedure for obtaining a firearms acquisition certificate is set out in s. 106. Section 107 provides for alternatives to firearms acquisition certificate upon agreement with the province.

Section 115 reverses the burden of proof that the person was the holder of a firearms acquisition certificate but also provides that a document, purporting to be a certificate, is evidence of the statements contained therein.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Note exemption for peace officers, members of the armed forces etc. in s. 98. This section is part of a comprehensive scheme relating to the sale, handling and use of firearms provided for in this Part. The special search and seizure provisions in relation to firearms are set out in ss. 101 to 103. Note, especially, power to seize firearms pursuant to s. 102(1)(b) from person under the age of 16 years.

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

A key document in the legislative scheme to control firearms is the firearms acquisition certificate. This section prohibits a wide range of activities, including giving or delivering a firearm to a person who does not produce for inspection a valid firearms acquisition certificate either at or before the transfer of the weapon. Certain exceptions to liability under this section are set out in subsec. (2). These include certain types of loans of the weapon or returns following a loan, as well as the case in which the certificate is not produced but is in fact possessed by the transferee.

Liability also attaches, under subsec. (3), to the person who acquires a firearm without a valid firearms acquisition certificate, unless the action comes within the saving provisions of subsec. (4). Offences under this section are punishable on indictment by a maximum term of imprisonment of two years, or on summary conviction.

MEMBERS OF FORCES, PEACE OFFICERS, ETC. / Importation, etc., on behalf of armed forces and police forces / Importation, etc., on behalf of museums.

(b) a peace officer or a person in the public service of Canada or employed by the government of a province, or

(c) a peace officer or a person employed in a museum established by the Chief of the Defence Staff or a museum approved for the purposes of this Part by the Commissioner or the Attorney General of the province in which it is situated

(2) Notwithstanding sections 95 to 97, a person who, under the authority of the Canadian Armed Forces or a police force that includes peace officers or public officers of a class referred to in paragraph (1)(b), imports, manufactures, repairs, alters, modifies or sells weapons or components or parts of weapons for or on behalf of the Canadian Armed Forces or such a police force is not guilty of an offence under this Act by reason only that that person so imports or manufactures weapons or components or parts thereof or that he sells, barters, gives, lends, transfers or delivers weapons or components or parts thereof to the Canadian Armed Forces or such a police force.

(3) Notwithstanding sections 95 to 97, a person who, under the supervision of an operator or of a person employed in a museum established by the Chief of the Defence Staff or a museum approved for the purposes of this Part by the Commissioner or the Attorney General of the province in which it is situated, imports, buys, repairs, restores or maintains weapons or components or parts of weapons for or on behalf of the museum is not guilty of an offence under this Act by reason only that the person so imports, buys, repairs, restores or maintains weapons or components or parts thereof or sells, barters, gives, lends, transfers or delivers weapons or components or parts thereof to the museum. R.S., c. C-34, s. 96; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 13; 1991, s. 40, s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "Attorney General", "Canadian Forces", "peace officer", "public officer" and "weapon" are defined in s. 2. "Commissioner" is defined in s. 84. Also see s. 92 which exempts some of the same persons referred to in this section from offences under the Code.

SYNOPSIS

This section acts as an exception to liability otherwise triggered by ss. 95 to 97, which relate to transactions involving restricted or prohibited weapons or involving acquisition of firearms by persons without valid firearms acquisition certificates. Subsections (1) and (2) exempt wide categories of law enforcement and armed forces personnel and those who supply them with weapons from the operation of ss. 95 to 97.

Subsection (3) extends the exemption from liability under the same sections to those who are acting under the supervision of an approved museum and who are engaged in the handling or transportation of the weapons for the museum.

EXCEPTION.

99. Notwithstanding sections 96 and 97, a person is not guilty of an offence under this Act by reason only that he transfers or delivers

(a) any restricted weapon to a person who carries on a business described in subparagraph 105(2)(b)(ii), or

(b) any firearm, other than a restricted weapon, to a person who carries on a business described in subsection 105(1) or subparagraph 105(2)(b)(ii) for use in the course of that business. R.S., c. C-34, s. 97; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “firearm” and “restricted weapon” are defined in s. 84.

SYNOPSIS

Section 99 exempts persons who would otherwise be guilty of an offence under s. 96 (delivering, etc., a restricted weapon to a person without a permit) or s. 97 (delivering, etc., a firearm to a person without a valid firearms acquisition certificate), if the transfer is to a person carrying on one of the class of businesses described in s. 105. Note that the exemption regarding restricted weapons is more limited and covers only those businesses involved in the transportation or shipping of restricted firearms or ammunition (per s. 105(2)(b)(ii)).

ORDER PROHIBITING POSSESSION OF FIREARMS, ETC. / Where order not to be made / Criteria / Reasons / Discretionary order prohibiting possession of firearms, etc. / Duration of order / Definition of “release from imprisonment” / Application for order of prohibition / Fixing date for hearing and notice / Hearing of application and disposition / Hearing of reference and disposition / Revocation on order / Idem / Where hearing may proceed ex parte / Appeal to appeal court in certain cases / Definitions / “appeal court” / “provincial court judge” / Possession of firearm, ammunition, etc., while prohibited by order / Defence.

100. (1) Where an offender is convicted or discharged under section 736 of an indictable offence in the commission of which violence against a person is used, threatened or attempted and for which the offender may be sentenced to imprisonment for ten years or more or of an offence under section 85, the court that sentences the offender shall, subject to subsections (1.1) to (1.3), in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for that offence, make an order prohibiting the offender from possessing any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance for any period of time specified in the order that commences on the day on which the order is made and expires not earlier than

(a) in the case of a first conviction for such an offence, ten years, and

(b) in any other case, life, after the time of the offender’s release from imprisonment after conviction for the offence or, if the offender is not then imprisoned or subject to imprisonment, after the time of the offender’s conviction or discharge for that offence.

NOTE: Subsection (1) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (Sch. I, item 6) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730, however, 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (Sch. I, item 6) repealed 1995, c. 39, s. 190(c) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council).

(1.1) The court is not required to make an order under subsection (1) where the court is satisfied that the offender has established that

- (a) it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of the offender or of any other person that the order be made; and
- (b) the circumstances are such that it would not be appropriate to make the order.

(1.2) In considering whether the circumstances are such that it would not be appropriate to make an order under subsection (1), the court shall consider

- (a) the criminal record of the offender, the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission;
- (b) whether the offender needs a firearm for the sustenance of the offender or the offender's family; and
- (c) whether the order would constitute a virtual prohibition against employment in the only vocation open to the offender.

(1.3) Where the court does not make an order under subsection (1), the court shall give reasons why the order is not being made.

(2) When an offender is convicted or discharged under section 736 of

- (a) an offence involving the use, carriage, possession, handling or storage of any firearm or ammunition,
- (b) an offence, other than an offence referred to in subsection (1), in the commission of which violence against a person was used, threatened or attempted, or
- (c) an offence described in subsection 39(1) or (2) or 48(1) or (2) of the Food and Drugs Act or in subsection 4(1) or (2) or 5(1) of the Narcotic Control Act, the court that sentences the offender, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for the offence, shall consider whether it is desirable, in the interests of the safety of the offender or of any other person, to make an order prohibiting the offender from possessing any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance and ordering the offender to surrender any firearms acquisition certificate that the offender possesses, and where the court decides that it is not desirable, in the interests of the safety of the offender or of any other person, for the offender to possess any of those things, the court shall so order.

NOTE: Subsection (2) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (Sch. I, item 7) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730, however, 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (Sch. I, item 7) repealed 1995, c. 39, s. 190(c) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council).

NOTE: Subsection (2)(c) replaced 1996, Bill C-8, s. 65 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force as of May 15, 1996 and also may change before receiving Royal Assent, is therefor printed in lightface italics and reads as follows:

- (c) an offence described in subsection 5(3) or (4) or 6(3) of the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act,

(2.1) An order referred to in subsection (2) may be for any period of time specified in the order but shall not expire later than ten years after the time of the offender's release from imprisonment after conviction for the offence to which the order relates, or, if the offender is not then imprisoned or subject to imprisonment, after the time of the offender's conviction or discharge from that offence.

(3) For the purposes of subsections (1) and (2), "release from imprisonment" means release from confinement by reason of expiration of sentence, commencement of mandatory supervision or grant of parole other than day parole.

(4) Where a peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of any person that a particular person should possess any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance, he may apply to a provincial court judge for an order prohibiting that particular person from having in his possession any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance.

(5) On receipt of an application made pursuant to subsection (4) or on a reference by a firearms officer, pursuant to subsection 106(7), of his opinion that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of an applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate or of any other person that the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate acquire a firearm, the provincial court judge to whom the application or reference is made shall fix a date for the hearing of the application or reference and direct that notice of the hearing be given to the person against whom the order of prohibition is sought or the applicant for the firearms acquisition certificate and the firearms officer, as the case may be, in such manner as the provincial court judge may specify.

(6) At the hearing of an application made pursuant to subsection (4), the provincial court judge shall hear all relevant evidence presented by or on behalf of the applicant and the person against whom the order of prohibition is sought and where, at the conclusion of the hearing, the provincial court judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of the person against whom the order of prohibition is sought or of any other person that the person against whom the order is sought should possess any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance, the provincial court judge shall make an order prohibiting him from having in his possession any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance for any period of time, not exceeding five years, specified in the order and computed from the day the order is made.

(7) At the hearing of a reference referred to in subsection (5), the provincial court judge shall hear all relevant evidence presented by or on behalf of the firearms officer and the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate and where, at the conclusion of the hearing, the firearms officer has satisfied the provincial court judge that the opinion of the firearms officer that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant or of any other person that the applicant acquire a firearm is justified, the provincial court judge shall, by order, confirm that opinion and the refusal to issue the firearms acquisition certificate and may prohibit the applicant from possessing any firearm, ammunition or explosive substance for any period, not exceeding five years, specified in the order and computed from the day the order is made.

(7.1) Where an order is made under subsection (1), (2) or (7), any firearms acquisition certificate that is held by the person who is the subject of the order is automatically revoked.

(8) Where, at the conclusion of a hearing referred to in subsection (7), the firearms officer has not satisfied the provincial court judge that his opinion that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate or of any other person that the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate acquire a firearm is justified, the provincial court judge shall, by order, direct the firearms officer to issue to that person a firearms acquisition certificate and, on payment of the fee, if any, fixed for such a certificate, the firearms officer shall forthwith comply with the direction.

(9) A provincial court judge may proceed ex parte to hear and determine an application made pursuant to subsection (4) or a reference referred to in subsection (5) in the absence of the person against whom the order of prohibition is sought or the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate, as the case may be, in circumstances in which a summary conviction court may, pursuant to Part XXVII, proceed with a trial in the absence of the defendant as fully and effectually as if the defendant had appeared.

(10) Where a provincial court judge

- (a) makes an order pursuant to subsection (6) or (7), the prohibited person, or
- (b) refuses to make an order pursuant to subsection (6), or makes an order pursuant to subsection (8), the Attorney General may appeal to the appeal court against the order or refusal to make an order, as the case may be, and the provisions of Part XXVII except sections 816 to 819 and 829 to 838 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of such an appeal.

(11) In this section,

“appeal court” means

- (a) in the Province of Ontario, the Ontario Court (General Division) sitting in the region, district or county or group of counties where the adjudication was made,
- (b) in the Province of Quebec, the Superior Court,
- (b.1) [Repealed. 1992, c. 51, s. 33(1).]

- (d) in the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, the Trial Division of the Supreme Court, and
- (e) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Supreme Court;

NOTE: Definition “appeal court” amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by re-enacting para. (e). The text of para. (e), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (e) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, the Supreme Court;

“provincial court judge” means a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division where the person against whom the relevant application for an order of prohibition was brought or in respect of whom the reference was made, as the case may be, resides.

(12) Every one who has in his possession any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance while he is prohibited from doing so by any order made pursuant to this section

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(13) An order made pursuant to subsection (1), (2), (6) or (7) shall

- (a) specify a reasonable period within which the person against whom the order is made may surrender to a police officer or firearms officer, to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs, or otherwise lawfully dispose of any firearm or any ammunition or explosive substance lawfully possessed by that person prior to the making of the order, and during which subsection (12) does not apply to that person; and
- (b) state that if that person fails to dispose of the firearm, ammunition or explosive substance within the period specified in the order, the firearm, ammunition or explosive substance is forfeited to Her Majesty and must be surrendered to a police officer or firearms officer to be disposed of as the Attorney General

The terms “firearm”, “firearms officer” and “firearms acquisition certificate” are defined in s. 84 and the terms “explosive substance”, “peace officer” and “provincial court judge” in s. 2. The terms “parole”, “day parole” and “mandatory supervision” are defined by the Parole Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-2. The reference in subsec. (9) to the power of a summary conviction court to proceed with a trial ex parte is to s. 803(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment in respect of the offence in subsec. (12) then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Presumably, a person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to a further discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. The orders made under subssecs. (1) and (2) are included in the definition of sentence in s. 673 and thus appealable as a sentence appeal in indictable proceedings to the Court of Appeal under Part XXI. The order under subsec. (2) is also included in the definition of sentence in s. 785 and thus appealable as a sentence appeal under Part XXVII where the order was made in summary conviction proceedings. This section is part of a comprehensive scheme relating to the sale, handling and use of firearms provided for in this Part. The special search and seizure provisions in relation to firearms are set out in ss. 101 to 103. In addition to the orders which may be made under subssecs. (1) and (2), an accused placed on probation can be required as a term of probation not to own, possess or carry any weapon: s. 737(2)(d). As some of the provisions of Part XXVII apply to an order made under subssecs. (6), (7) and (8), a further appeal will lie from the decision under subsec. (10) of the appeal court (defined in subsec. (11)) to the Court of Appeal (as defined in s. 673) with leave on a question of law alone, pursuant to s. 839.

The making of a prohibition order under this section must be reported to the Commissioner under s. 114(3).

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

This provision creates prohibition orders against the possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive devices. These orders are imposed on offenders convicted (or discharged) in connection with offences involving violence, threats of violence or firearms.

Subsection (1) imposes a mandatory prohibition of at least ten years for a first such offence, and life in any other case, if the underlying offence is punishable by 10 years or more imprisonment or is the offence of using a firearm to commit an indictable offence (s. 85). The duration of the order begins to run upon the release of the offender from any term of imprisonment.

Subsections (1.1) to (1.3), however, allow a court to relieve against the harshness of subsec. (1) in special circumstances. It would appear that Parliament envisaged that the prohibition order need not be made in circumstances analogous to those in which some courts had created a constitutional exemption from the operation of the predecessor to this section. In general, the courts had granted a constitutional exemption where the effect of the order would be to deprive the accused [usually a member of the First Nations] from pursuing an occupation such as hunting and trapping for which possession of a firearm was a necessity. In granting the exemption, the court would sometimes also place the accused on probation with terms as to the custody of the firearm when the accused did not need it to pursue his occupation.

Subsection (2) gives the court a discretion and permits making a prohibition order of up to ten years if the underlying offence is other than one noted in subsec. (1) and involves the use, threatened or attempted use of violence, is a firearm offence or certain drug offences.

The third category of such order arises when a police officer applies to a provincial court judge, on the basis of reasonable grounds, that it is not desirable in the interest of safety of any person, including the person against whom the order is sought that a particular person possess firearms, ammunition or explosives. Subsections (4) to (11) provide a detailed procedure, which is to be followed at such hearings and provides for a right of appeal against the making of, or the refusal to make, such an order.

Subsection (12) creates the offence of possession of firearms, ammunition or explosives in contravention of a prohibition order under this section. This offence is punishable on summary conviction or on indictment. The maximum term of imprisonment on indictment is five years.

Subsection (13) provides that a prohibition order made under this section must set out a reasonable time within which the person may dispose of the prohibited objects by turning them over to the authorities or otherwise. During the time specified in the order for disposal, the accused may not be prosecuted under subsec. (12).

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) / Circumstances in which order must be made – An order is to be made under this subsection whether or not a firearm was used in the commission of the offence: R. v. Savard (1979), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 286, 11 C.R. (3d) 309 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Broome (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 426, 24 C.R. (3d) 254 (Ont. C.A.).

Further, the order must be made even where the commission of violence is not an essential element of the offence (as in break and enter with intent to commit an indictable offence under s. 348) it being sufficient that violence occurred in a manner which was closely related to the commission of the offence: R. v. Howard (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 344 (B.C.C.A.).

The phrase “against a person” in this subsection refers to a person other than the accused and thus this subsection does not apply where the offence arises out of a suicide attempt and violence was not used against any other person: R. v. Vandermeulen (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 286 (B.C.C.A.).

Making of order under para. (b) where previous conviction – The mandatory prohibition is to be imposed even where the previous conviction for an offence, in the commission of which violence was used, threatened or attempted was registered prior to the proclamation of this section: R. v. Keays (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 229 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the Crown relies on a previous conviction for “robbery while armed” there must be evidence that violence was used, threatened or attempted, it being possible to commit such an offence without the use, threat or attempted use of violence: R. v. Keays, supra.

Where the Crown seeks the longer prohibition for a subsequent conviction as provided for in para. (b) it must give notice as required by s. 665: R. v. Jobb (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 476, [1988] 6 W.W.R. 268, 67 Sask. R. 315 (C.A.).

Subsec. (1.1) – In R. v. Austin (1994), 94 C.C.C. (3d) 252 (B.C.C.A.), McEachern C.J.B.C. dissenting held that an order must be made absent proof by the offender that it is not in the interests of the safety of the offender or any other person that a prohibition order be made. Even if the accused can meet this requirement, the court must then consider the factors in subsec. 1.2 and any other relevant matters. The dissenting opinion of McEachern C.J.B.C. was affirmed by the S.C.C., 103 C.C.C. (3d) 384, 105 W.A.C. 160n.

Subsec. (2) – This subsection rather than subsec. (1) applied where the accused was convicted of the offence contrary to s. 87 involving the discharge of a rifle into the air in the presence of other persons. For subsec. (1) to apply, the indictable offence must itself have an aspect of violence in its carrying out or execution: R. v. Cardinal (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 269, 22 A.R. 241 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Blinch (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 72 W.A.C. 140 (B.C.C.A.).

The phrase “in the commission of which violence against a person was used, threatened or attempted” modifies only the word “offence” and an order may be made under this subsection with respect to a use, carriage, possession, handling, shipping or storage charge that does not involve the use, attempt or threat of violence: R. v. Myers (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 59, 32 Alta. L.R. (2d) 97 (C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Boucher (1991), 65 C.C.C. (3d) 446 (Que. C.A.) where it was pointed out that the French version of this section is erroneous.

Subsec. (6) – This subsection is intra vires Parliament: Re Motiuk and The Queen (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 161, 127 D.L.R. (3d) 146 (B.C.S.C.); R. v. Anderson (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 439 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

The scheme of the pre-emptive prohibition under this section is that, pursuant to subsec. (4), a peace officer, acting on reasonable grounds, may apply to a provincial court judge for an order prohibiting a particular person from possessing a firearm. The peace officer is not required to act solely on the basis of evidence that would be admissible at trial. At the subsequent hearing under s. 100(6), the provincial court judge must be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that it is not desirable, in the interests of the safety of the person or of others, that the subject of the prohibition application should possess a firearm. The provincial court judge thus confirms the existence of the reasonable grounds which led the peace officer to launch the application. It was not intended that the judge strictly apply the rules of evidence. Rather, the judge must simply be satisfied that the peace officer had reasonable grounds to believe as he did, that is, that there was an objective basis for the reasonable grounds on which the peace officer acted. Accordingly, hearsay evidence is admissible at a firearm prohibition hearing under this section. Frailties in the evidence are a matter of weight. In considering what weight to attach to hearsay evidence, the judge should take into account the explanation, if any, for not making the best evidence available. Further, the Crown bears the burden of proof and in considering the weight of the evidence a judge must scrutinize the evidence to ensure that it is credible and trustworthy: R. v. Zeolkowski (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 566, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1378, 61 D.L.R. (4th) 725 (5:0).

Subsec. (13) – This subsection is mandatory and where the order fails to specify a reasonable time for disposal of the firearm, ammunition or explosives then the order is defective and cannot support a conviction under subsec. (12): R. v. MacCallum (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 414, 39 N.B.R. (2d) 262 (Q.B.). Contra: R. v. Avery (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 16 (N.W.T.C.A.) where it was held that even if the order failed to comply with this subsection, until set aside it must be complied with and could support a conviction for the offence contrary to subsec. (12).

SEARCH AND SEIZURE / Disposition / Definition of “dwelling-house”.

101. (1) Whenever a peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that an offence is being committed or has been committed against any of the provisions of this Act relating to prohibited weapons, restricted weapons, firearms or ammunition and that evidence of the offence is likely to be found on a person, in a vehicle or in any place or premises other than a dwelling-house, the peace officer may, where the conditions for obtaining a warrant exist but, by reason of exigent circumstances, it would not be practicable to obtain a warrant, search, without warrant, the person, vehicle, place or premises, and may seize anything by means of or in relation to which that officer believes on reasonable grounds the offence is being committed or has been committed.

(2) Anything seized pursuant to subsection (1) shall be dealt with in accordance with sections 490 and 491.

(3) For the purposes of this section, "dwelling-house" does not include a unit that is designed to be mobile other than such a unit that is being used as a permanent residence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 99; 1972, c. 17, s. 2; 1974-75-76, c. 19, s. 1, c. 48, s. 25; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 13.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "firearm", "prohibited weapon" and "restricted weapon" are defined in s. 84. "Dwelling house" is defined in s. 2 although, bear in mind subsec. (3). "Peace officer" is defined in s. 2. Search of a dwelling house would have to be pursuant to a warrant as authorized by s. 487 or 487.1. As well, s. 103 provides for the issuance of a search warrant or for a warrantless search where there are grounds for believing that it is not desirable in the interests of safety for a person to have possession, custody or control of a firearm, offensive weapon, ammunition or explosive substance. Seizure of restricted weapons, prohibited weapons and firearms is also authorized in certain circumstances under s. 102. Reference should also be made to s. 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. A person searched pursuant to this section would be detained within the meaning of s. 10 of the Charter and therefore see notes under that section. Use of force in enforcement of the law is principally dealt with in s. 25. Obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty is an offence under s. 129 and assaulting a peace officer in the execution of his duty is an offence under s. 270.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Singh (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 38, 7 C.R.R. 132 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that the officers had the requisite reasonable grounds for a search under the predecessor to this section. The accused roughly fitted the description of a suspect in a multiple shooting which took place only a short time before and not far from where the accused was seen. As well, he had a noticeable bulge in his pocket and refused to make eye-contact with the officers. In these circumstances, there was no unreasonable search and seizure in breach of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

SEIZURE / Exception—immediate supervision / Return / Forfeiture.

102. (1) Notwithstanding section 101, a peace officer who finds

- (a) a person in possession of any restricted weapon who fails then and there to produce, for inspection by the peace officer, a registration certificate or permit under which he may lawfully possess the weapon,
  - (b) a person under the age of sixteen years in possession of any firearm who fails then and there to produce, for inspection by the peace officer, a permit under which he may lawfully possess the firearm, or
  - (c) any person in possession of a prohibited weapon,
- may, unless possession of the restricted weapon, firearm or prohibited weapon by the person in the circumstances in which it is so found is authorized by any provision of this Part, seize the restricted weapon, firearm or prohibited weapon.

(1.1) A person under the age of eighteen years is authorized to be in possession of a firearm where

- (a) the person is under the direct and immediate supervision of another person who may lawfully possess the firearm; or
- (b) the person possesses a permit under which the person may lawfully possess the firearm.

(2) Where a person from whom a restricted weapon, firearm or prohibited weapon was seized under subsection (1), within fourteen days after the seizure, claims it and produces for inspection by the peace officer by whom it was seized, or any other peace officer having custody thereof, a registration certificate or permit under which the person from whom the seizure was made is lawfully entitled to possess the restricted weapon, firearm or prohibited weapon, the restricted weapon, firearm or prohibited weapon shall forthwith be returned to that person.

(3) Where any restricted weapon, firearm or prohibited weapon that was seized pursuant to subsection (1) is not returned as and when provided by subsection (2), a peace officer shall forthwith take it before a provincial court judge who may, after affording the person from whom it was seized or the owner thereof, if known, an opportunity to establish that he is lawfully entitled to the possession thereof, declare it to be forfeited to Her Majesty, whereupon it shall be disposed of as the Attorney General directs. R.S., c. C-34, s. 100; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 28, s. 9; 1991, c. 40, s. 14.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “firearm”, “prohibited weapon”, “restricted weapon”, “registration certificate” and “permit” are defined in s. 84. “Peace officer” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. Section 101 provides an additional warrantless search and seizure power. As well, s. 103 provides for the issuance of a search warrant or for a warrantless search where there are grounds for believing that it is not desirable in the interests of safety for a person to have possession, custody or control of a firearm, offensive weapon, ammunition or explosive substance. Reference should also be made to s. 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Use of force in enforcement of the law is principally dealt with in s. 25. Obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty is an offence under s. 129 and assaulting a peace officer in the execution of his duty is an offence under s. 270.

SYNOPSIS

This provision permits the warrantless seizure of certain types of weapons and firearms. Prohibited weapons, restricted weapons for which the person does not produce a registration certificate or permit, or firearms, which are in the possession of a person under 16 who does not produce a permit, may be seized under s. 102(1). However, subsec. (2) requires the return of restricted weapons or firearms possessed by a person under 16, if a permit or certificate is produced within 14 days after the seizure, if the possession at the time of the seizure was in accordance with the terms of the permit or certificate.

If the weapon or firearm is not returned pursuant to subsec. (2), the police shall bring an application to a provincial court judge for the forfeiture of the weapon. The person from whom the weapon is seized, or the owner of the weapon, has the opportunity to establish that he or she had lawful possession of the weapon.

103. (1) Where, on application to a justice made by a peace officer with respect to any person, the justice is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of that person, or of any other person, that that person possess, or have custody or control of, any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance, the justice may issue a warrant authorizing the search for and seizure of any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition, explosive substance, authorization referred to in subsection 90(3.2), firearms acquisition certificate, registration certificate issued under section 109 or permit issued under section 110, in the possession, custody or control of that person.

(2) Where, with respect to any person, a peace officer is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of that person, or of any other person, that that person possess, or have custody or control of, any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance, the peace officer may, where the conditions for obtaining a warrant under subsection (1) exist but by reason of a possible danger to the safety of that person or any other person, it would not be practicable to obtain a warrant, search for and seize any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition, explosive substance, authorization referred to in subsection 90(3.2), firearms acquisition certificate, registration certificate issued under section 109 or permit issued under section 110, in the possession, custody or control of that person.

(3) A peace officer who executes a warrant referred to in subsection (1) or who conducts a search without warrant under subsection (2) shall forthwith make a return to the justice by whom the warrant was issued or, if no warrant was issued, to a justice by whom a warrant might have been issued showing

- (a) in the case of an execution of a warrant, the articles, if any, seized and the date of execution of the warrant; and
- (b) in the case of a search without warrant, the grounds on which it was concluded that the peace officer was entitled to conduct the search and the articles, if any, seized.

(3.1) Where a peace officer who performs a seizure under subsection (1) or (2) is unable to seize an authorization referred to in subsection 90(3.2), a firearms acquisition certificate, a registration certificate issued under section 109 or a permit issued under section 110, the authorization, firearms acquisition certificate, registration certificate or permit is automatically revoked.

(4) Where any articles have been seized pursuant to subsection (1) or (2), the justice by whom a warrant was issued, or, if no warrant was issued, a justice by whom a warrant might have been issued shall, on application for an order for the disposition of the articles so seized made by the peace officer within thirty days after the date of execution of the warrant or of the seizure without warrant, as the case may be, fix a date for the hearing of the application and direct that notice of the hearing be given to such persons or in such manner as the justice may specify.

(4.1) A justice may proceed to hear and determine an application under subsection (4) in the absence of the person against whom the order is sought in circumstances in which a summary conviction court may, pursuant to Part XXVII, proceed with a trial in the absence of the defendant as fully and effectually as if the defendant had appeared.

(5) At the hearing of an application under subsection (4), the justice shall hear all relevant evidence, including evidence respecting the value of the articles in respect of which the application was made.

(6) If, following the hearing of an application under subsection (4) made with respect to any person, the justice finds that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of that person or of any other person that that person should possess, or have custody or control of, any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance, the justice may

- (a) order that any or all of the articles seized be disposed of on such terms as the justice deems fair and reasonable, and give such directions concerning the payment or application of the proceeds, if any, of the disposition as the justice sees fit; and
- (b) where the justice is satisfied that the circumstances warrant such action,
  - (i) order that the possession by that person of any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance specified in the order, or of all such articles, be prohibited during any period, not exceeding five years, specified in the order and computed from the day on which the order is made, and

- (ii) order that any firearms acquisition certificate issued to the person be revoked and prohibit the person from applying for a firearms acquisition certificate for any period referred to in subparagraph (i).

(7) Any articles seized pursuant to subsection (1) or (2) in respect of which

- (a) no application under subsection (4) is made within thirty days after the date of execution of the warrant or of the seizure without warrant, as the case may be, or
- (b) where an application under subsection (4) is made within the period referred to in paragraph (a), the justice does not make a finding as described in subsection (6) shall be returned to the person from whom they were seized.

(7.1) Where, pursuant to subsection (7), articles are returned to a person from whom they were seized and an authorization, a firearms acquisition certificate, a registration certificate or a permit has been revoked pursuant to subsection (3.1), the justice referred to in paragraph (7)(b) may order that the revocation be reversed and that the authorization, firearms acquisition certificate, registration certificate or permit be restored.

(8) Where a justice

- (a) makes an order under subsection (6) with respect to any person, that person, or
- (b) does not make a finding as described in subsection (6) following the hearing of an application under subsection (4), or makes the finding but does not make an order to the effect described in paragraph (6)(a) or to the effect described in paragraph (6)(b), the Attorney General may appeal to the appeal court against the making of the order, or against the failure to make the finding or to make an order to the effects so described, as the case may be, and the provisions of Part XXVII except sections 816 to 819 and 829 to 838 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of the appeal.

(9) In this section,

“appeal court” has the meaning given that expression in subsection 100(11);

“justice” means a justice having jurisdiction in the territorial division where the person with respect to whom an application is made under subsection (1) or the person with respect to whom a search without warrant is made under subsection (2) resides.

(10) Every person who possesses any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition, explosive substance or firearms acquisition certificate while prohibited from doing so by any order made pursuant to paragraph (6)(b)

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 101; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 15.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “firearm” is defined in s. 84. “Offensive weapon”, “explosive substance”, “peace officer” and “justice” are defined in s. 2. Sections 101 and 102 provide additional warrantless search and seizure powers. As well, a search warrant could be issued under ss. 487 and 487.1 in the circumstances set out therein. Reference should also be made to s. 8 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Use of force in enforcement of the law is principally dealt with in s. 25. Obstructing a peace officer in the execution of his duty is an offence under s. 129 and assaulting a peace officer in the execution of his duty is an offence under s. 270. Under s. 29, an officer executing a warrant is to have it with him where feasible and to produce it when requested. Misconduct by peace officers in execution of process is an offence under s. 128.

As some of the provisions of Part XXVII apply to an appeal under subsec. (8), a further appeal will lie from the decision of the appeal court (defined in s. 100(11)) to the Court of Appeal (as defined in s. 673) with leave on a question of law alone, pursuant to s. 839. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment in respect of the offence in subsec. (10) then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Presumably, a person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to a further discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. The making of a prohibition order under subsec. (6)(b) must be reported to the Commissioner under s. 114(3).

SYNOPSIS

This section deals primarily with the issuance of a warrant to seize firearms, etc., and the procedure for the disposition of weapons so seized. Subsection (1) permits a peace officer to make an application to a justice for a warrant to search for and seize firearms, offensive weapons, ammunition or explosive substances or any permit or certificate, or authorization. It must be shown that there are reasonable grounds to believe that it is against the interests of the safety of the person in possession, control or custody of the weapons, etc., or any other person, for such possession to continue. Subsection (2) permits a warrantless search and seizure by a peace officer in the same circumstances as subsec. (1), if it is impractical, for reasons of safety, to obtain a warrant.

Subsection (3) requires a return to the justice after a seizure is made under either subsec. (1) or (2). If the search is made without warrant, the officer must also set out the grounds upon which the search was made and why the seizure of the objects is justified. Subsections (4) to (9) create the procedure for a hearing after seizure, to determine if the weapons, etc., seized should be returned or disposed of, and whether a prohibition order should be made against the person who had been in possession, control or custody of the items seized. Provision is also made for an order revoking a firearms acquisition certificate and prohibiting application for one. The section provides for an appeal from the making or the refusal to make a prohibition order under this section.

Subsection (10) creates the offence of being in violation of a prohibition order made under this section, and the offence may be tried by way of indictment or summary conviction procedure, with a maximum punishment on indictment of a five year term of imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

This section is intra vires Parliament, being within the criminal law power under s. 91(27) of the Constitution Act, 1867 and designed to reduce the incidence of violent crime: A.-G. Can. v. Pattison; A.-G. Can. v. Metcalf et al. (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 138, 21 C.R. (3d) 255, [1981] 4 W.W.R. 611 (Alta. C.A.).

Subsec. (1) – The bare, unsupported allegation that the persons were members of a motorcycle gang shown to be involved in violent criminal activity was not a sufficient basis for the issuance of a search warrant under this section. On the other hand, it may be that, if it were shown that the persons wore the gang “colours” or insignia and thus were identified with the gang then there would be a basis for issuing the warrant: R. v. Conrad (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 311 (Alta. C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – This subsection, which authorizes search of premises, does not infringe

s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Smith (1988), 5 W.C.B. 164 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

Subsec. (4) – The warrant having been quashed, it was not open to the Crown to proceed with a disposition hearing under this subsection and the firearms must be returned to their owners: R. v. Merchant; R. v. Buettner (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 316, 79 Alta. L.R. (2d) 316 (C.A.).

Found, Lost, Mislaid, Stolen and Defaced Firearms and other Weapons

FINDING WEAPON / Lost weapon, etc. / Tampering with serial number / Exception / Evidence / Punishment.

104. (1) Every one commits an offence who, on finding a prohibited weapon, restricted weapon or firearm that he has reasonable grounds to believe has been lost or abandoned, does not with reasonable despatch

- (a) deliver it to a peace officer, a local registrar of firearms or a firearms officer; or
- (b) report to a peace officer, a local registrar of firearms or a firearms officer that he has found it.

(2) Every one commits an offence who, having lost or mislaid a restricted weapon for which he has a registration certificate or permit or having had the weapon stolen from his possession, does not with reasonable despatch report to a peace officer or a local registrar of firearms that he has lost or mislaid the weapon or that the weapon has been stolen from him.

(3) Every one commits an offence who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on that person,

- (a) alters, defaces or removes a serial number on a firearm; or
- (b) possesses a firearm knowing that the serial number thereon has been altered, defaced or removed.

(3.1) No person is guilty of an offence under paragraph (3)(b) by reason only of possessing a restricted weapon the serial number on which has been altered, defaced or removed, where that serial number has been replaced and a registration certificate has been issued in respect of the restricted weapon that mentions the new serial number.

(4) In proceedings under subsection (3), evidence that a person possesses a firearm the serial number of which has been wholly or partially obliterated otherwise than through normal use over time is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that the person possesses the firearm knowing that the serial number thereon has been altered, defaced or removed.

(5) Every one who contravenes this section

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 102; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 16.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “firearm”, “prohibited weapon”, “restricted weapon”, “registration certificate”, “permit”, “local registrar of firearms” and “firearms officer” are defined in s. 84. “Peace officer”, “weapon”, and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment in respect of an offence in this section then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496 and 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates offences dealing with losing and finding weapons and tampering with serial numbers on firearms.

Subsection (1) creates an offence of omission, which is triggered by the failure of a finder of a prohibited or restricted weapon or a firearm, which the finder has reasonable grounds to believe is lost or abandoned, to turn over such a weapon to authorities or to report its finding.

Subsection (2) focuses on the person who loses a weapon or has it stolen and creates an offence of omission for failing to report the loss or theft to authorities within a reasonable time.

Subsections (3) and (4) deal with either possession of a firearm with an altered or defaced serial number or for so altering a weapon. However, subsec. (3.1) allows for a new serial number to be registered in which case no offence is committed. Subsection (3) permits a lawful excuse to be raised but places the onus of establishing it upon the accused. Subsection (4) creates the presumption of knowledge that the weapon has been so altered if the weapon in the accused's possession has a totally or partially obliterated serial number other than from normal use over time. Subsection (5) sets the punishment for this offence, which may be prosecuted by summary conviction or indictment. The maximum term of imprisonment on indictment is five years.

- (d) mail a copy of the records and inventory to the Commissioner or to any person authorized by subsection 110(5) to issue a permit to carry on the business in accordance with any request in writing made by the Commissioner or person so authorized.

(1.2) A person who operates a museum referred to in subsection (1) or who carries on a business described in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) shall ensure that any person employed in or in connection with the museum or business whose duties include the handling of firearms or restricted or prohibited weapons holds a firearms acquisition certificate.

(1.3) Notwithstanding subsection (1.2), the Attorney General of the province in which a manufacturing business referred to in that subsection is located may designate, for the purposes of this subsection, any person or class of persons employed in or in connection with the business, as a person who need not hold a firearms acquisition certificate for the purposes of employment.

(2) A person who

NOTE: Subsection (4) re-enacted by 1991, c. 40, s. 39(4)(a) (was to come into force on the coming into force of s. 18(3), but re-enactment now postponed until some future date, however, subsec. (4) as enacted by 1991, c. 40, s. 39(4) repealed by 1995, c. 39, s. 164 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council)). (5) Where a person operates a museum referred to in subsection (1), or carries on a business described in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) or in subparagraph (2)(b)(i), at more than one location, each location shall be deemed for the purposes of this section and regulations made pursuant to paragraphs 116(1)(a) to (c) to be a separate museum or business.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "firearm", "restricted weapon", "local registrar of firearms" and "Commissioner" are defined in s. 84. Police officers and police constables are within the definition of “peace officer” in s. 2. A permit to operate a business described in this section is obtained pursuant to s. 110(5). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment in respect of an offence in this section then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496 and 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. A person found guilty of the offence in this section is liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

SYNOPSIS

Section 105 deals with the record keeping and regulation of businesses which manufacture, sell, buy, import, repair or otherwise deal with restricted weapons, firearms and ammunition. Subsection (8) creates offences triable by summary conviction or by indictment for breaches of the requirements which this section imposes upon such businesses. The person carrying on the business must ensure that the business has the proper permits and complies with regulations made pursuant to s. 116 regarding dealing with restricted weapons, firearms or ammunition and must report any loss or theft from the business involving weapons or ammunition, or any destruction of weapons. Breaches of these requirements are punishable on summary conviction or indictment, with the maximum term of imprisonment or indictment being five years.

(1.1) For greater certainty, an application for a firearms acquisition certificate need not be submitted in person, but the firearms officer who receives the application may require that the applicant appear in person before the firearms acquisition certificate is issued and the firearms officer must be satisfied that any photograph of the applicant that is to be attached to the firearms acquisition certificate is a current photograph of the applicant sufficient to accurately identify the applicant.

(1.2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), where an applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate holds a valid firearms acquisition certificate at the time of applying for a new firearms acquisition certificate

- (a) the firearms officer may issue the new firearms acquisition certificate before the twenty-eight days referred to in subsection (1) have elapsed; and

(2) No firearms acquisition certificate may be issued to a person who

NOTE: Subsection (2)(b) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (Sch. I, item 8) (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 737(2)(d) with s. 732.1(3)(d), however, 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (Sch.   - (ii) been certified by a firearms officer, in circumstances prescribed by regulation, as meeting the criteria of competence in the safe handling and use of firearms and the laws relating to firearms prescribed by regulation.

that, at the time he completed the course or test, was approved for the purposes of this section by the Attorney General of the province in which he took the course or test.

(2.1) Where a firearms officer certifies that an applicant is competent for the purposes of subparagraph 106(2)(c)(ii), the firearms officer shall immediately so inform the chief provincial firearms officer in writing and shall give reasons for the certification.

(2.2) In the case of an applicant who has been the subject of an order under subsection 100(1), (2) or (7), the applicant shall produce evidence that the applicant successfully completed both the course and the test referred to in subparagraph (2)(c)(i) after the expiration of the order.

(3) Paragraph (2)(c) shall come into force in any province only on a day fixed in a proclamation declaring that paragraph to be in force in that province.

(4) A firearms officer shall be deemed to have notice of a matter that may render it desirable in the interests of the safety of an applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate or of any other person that the applicant should not acquire a firearm and a provincial court judge, on a reference pursuant to subsection (7), is entitled to confirm the opinion of a firearms officer that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant or of any other person that the applicant should acquire a firearm, where it is made to appear to the judge that

- (a) the applicant has been convicted within five years immediately preceding the date of the application, in proceedings on indictment, of
  - (i) an offence in the commission of which violence against another person was used, threatened or attempted, or
  - (ii) an offence under this Part;

- (b) the applicant, within five years immediately preceding the date of the application, has been treated for a mental disorder, whether in a hospital, mental institute or psychiatric clinic or otherwise and whether or not the applicant was, during that period, confined to such a hospital, institute or clinic, where the disorder was associated with violence or threatened or attempted violence on the part of the applicant against any person;
  - (c) the applicant has a history of behaviour occurring within five years immediately preceding the date of the application, that included violence or threatened or attempted violence on the part of the applicant against any person; or
  - (d) there is another good and sufficient reason for confirming the opinion.
- (5) Where a firearms officer who has received an application for a firearms acquisition certificate has notice of any matter that may render it desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant or of any other person that the applicant should not acquire a firearm, the firearms officer shall notify the applicant in writing that, in the opinion of the firearms officer, it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant or of any other person that the applicant acquire a firearm and of the reasons therefor, and that, unless within thirty days after the day on which the notice is received by the applicant or within such further time as is, before or after the expiration of that period, allowed by a provincial court judge, the applicant, in writing, requests the firearms officer to refer the opinion to a provincial court judge for confirmation or variation thereof, the application for the firearms acquisition certificate will be refused.
- (6) A notice given by a firearms officer under this section shall be accompanied by a copy or an extract of the provisions of this section and of subsections 100(5) to (13).
- (7) On receipt by a firearms officer, within the time provided in subsection (5), of a request in writing to refer his opinion referred to in that subsection to a provincial court judge for confirmation or variation thereof, the firearms officer shall forthwith comply with that request.
- (8) An application for a firearms acquisition certificate shall be made to a firearms officer in a form prescribed by the Commissioner and shall be accompanied by the names of two persons who belong to a class of persons prescribed by regulation who have known the applicant for at least three years and who can confirm that the information on the application, and any further information submitted pursuant to subsection (9), is true.
- (8.1) No person who is referred to in subsection (8) incurs any civil liability by reason of any action taken by that person in connection with the person's name having accompanied an application for a firearms acquisition certificate.
- (9) A firearms officer who has received an application for a firearms acquisition certificate may require the applicant to submit such further information in addition to that included in the application as may reasonably be regarded as relevant for the purpose of determining whether there is any matter that might render it dangerous for the safety of the applicant or of any other person if the applicant acquired a firearm.
- (9.1) Without restricting the scope of the inquiries a firearms officer may make under subsection (1), a firearms officer who has received an application for a firearms acquisition certificate may conduct an investigation which may consist of interviews with the applicant's neighbours, community/social workers, spouse, dependents, or whomever in the opinion of the firearms officer may provide information pertaining to whether the applicant has a history of violent behaviour, including violence in the home.

(10) No local registrar of firearms, firearms officer or other person shall require as information, to be submitted by an applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate or permit, details concerning the makes or serial numbers of shotguns or rifles of a type, kind or design commonly used in Canada for hunting or sporting purposes.

(11) The firearms acquisition certificate shall be in a form prescribed by the Commissioner, shall, except where the Commissioner deems that to do so would be inappropriate, have a photograph of the holder attached to it, and shall be valid for five years after the day on which it is issued, unless it is revoked before that time.

(12) Notwithstanding subsection (11), no fee is payable in respect of a firearms acquisition certificate that is issued to a person who requires a firearm to hunt or trap in order to sustain himself or his family.

(13) A firearms acquisition certificate is valid throughout Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 104; 1976-77, c. 53, ss. 3, 47.

(14) Where a firearms officer refuses to issue a firearms acquisition certificate, the firearms officer shall notify the applicant in writing of the refusal and the reasons for it and include in the notification a copy of this subsection and subsections (15) to (20).

(15) Where a firearms officer refuses to issue a firearms acquisition certificate, the applicant may, within thirty days after being notified of the refusal or within such further time as is, before or after the expiration of that period, allowed by a provincial court judge, request, in writing, the firearms officer to refer the matter to a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division in which the applicant resides.

(16) On a reference by a firearms officer pursuant to subsection (15), the provincial court judge shall fix a date for the hearing of the reference and direct that notice of the hearing be given to the applicant and to the firearms officer, in such manner as the provincial court judge may specify.

(17) In a hearing under subsection (16) the burden of proof is on the applicant for the firearms acquisition certificate to satisfy the provincial court judge that the refusal to issue the firearms acquisition certificate was not justified.

(18) Where, at the conclusion of a hearing under subsection (16), the applicant has satisfied the provincial court judge that the refusal to issue the firearms acquisition certificate was not justified, the provincial court judge shall, by order, direct the firearms officer to issue to the applicant a firearms acquisition certificate and the firearms officer shall immediately comply with the order.

(19) Where a provincial court judge makes an order pursuant to subsection (18), the firearms officer may appeal to the appeal court against the order, and the provisions of Part XXVII except sections 816 to 819 and 829 to 838 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of the appeal.

(20) In this section, "appeal court" has the meaning given that expression in subsection 100(11). R.S., c. C-34, s. 104; 1976-77, c. 53, ss. 3, 47; 1991, c. 40, s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "firearm", "firearms acquisition certificate", "Commissioner", "local registrar of firearms", "permit" and "firearms officer" are defined in s. 84. "Attorney General", "weapon" and "provincial court judge" are defined in s. 2. Age, for the purpose of subsec. (2)(a), is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Under s. 110(7), a firearms officer may, in some circumstances, issue a permit to a person under the age of 18 years to possess a firearm other than a restricted weapon. Transfer of a firearm to a person under the age of 18 years without such a permit is an offence under s. 93. The term “proceedings on indictment” in subsec. (4)(a) would not include a conviction made in proceedings under Part XXVII, even though the offence was a Crown option offence. Delivery of a firearm to a person without a firearms acquisition certificate is an offence under s. 97. Section 107 provides for alternative firearms acquisition certificates upon agreement with the province. Making a false statement on an application for a certificate, altering or defacing a certificate and failing to deliver up a certificate when prohibited from possessing firearms are offences under s. 113. Section 114 requires the Commissioner to keep a registry of applications for firearms acquisition certificates which have been refused.

SYNOPSIS

This section stipulates which criteria are to be applied in granting a firearms acquisition certificate and the proper procedure for so doing. It also sets out who is prevented from having such a certificate, which includes persons with convictions within the last five years for a firearms offence, or an offence involving the use, or threat of use, of violence. Another excluded group are persons who have suffered from a mental disorder which was accompanied by violence, threat of violence or attempted use of violence against themselves or another within the last five years. A third prohibited group are persons whose behaviour showed violence or threat of violence to themselves or another within five years. Other persons who may not receive a certificate are those under 18 years of age, those who are under a prohibition order and those who have not completed a firearms safety test or course.

If a firearms officer determines not to issue a certificate, the applicant must be notified of the refusal and the reasons for the refusal. Applicants so refused have the right to ask that the refusal be referred to a provincial court judge who may confirm or vary the decision. Case-law has held that such hearings may be conducted with more relaxed rules of evidence than trials. At the hearing, the burden of proof is on the applicant and if the judge reverses the officer, then the officer may appeal to the appeal court.

Subsection (9) gives the firearms officer the power to require the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate to provide additional information beyond that normally required, if the information sought is reasonably relevant to the purpose of determining if it might be dangerous for the applicant to have a firearm.

The fee for a firearms acquisition certificate is $10, but is waived if the applicant requires the firearm to hunt or trap to support himself. The certificate is valid throughout Canada for five years.

ANNOTATIONS

Grounds for refusing certificate – It was not grounds for refusing the application for a firearms acquisition certificate that the applicant’s father was associated with an outlaw motorcycle gang. The applicant himself was a good student, had completed a firearms handling course and had a legitimate reason for acquiring the firearm for big game hunting: Wrin v. Milton (1987), 82 N.S.R. (2d) 1 (Co. Ct.). However, the spouse of the gang member was properly refused a certificate. She was an active participant in the activities of the gang and the officer’s finding that it was desirable, in the interests of the safety of the applicant or any other person, that she not acquire firearms was supported by the evidence: Milton v. Wrin (1987), 81 N.S.R. (2d) 446 (Co. Ct.).

FIREARMS ACQUISITION CERTIFICATE FOR OTHER PERSONS / Application.

107. (1) Notwithstanding subsection 106(2), the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing the persons, other than individuals, or classes of such persons to which firearms acquisition certificates may be issued, and subsections 106(1), (5) to (7), (9) to (11) and (13) to (20) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of firearms acquisition certificates issued to such persons.

(2) An application for a firearms acquisition certificate by a person or a member of a class of persons prescribed pursuant to subsection (1) shall be made to a firearms officer in a form prescribed by the Commissioner. R.S., c. C-34, s. 105; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 20.

Restricted Weapon Registration Certificates

APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE / Permit to convey / Limitation / Idem / Idem / Changes / Time of ownership / Distribution of copies of application / Matters to be reported to Commissioner / Registration certificate / Limitation.

109. (1) An application for a registration certificate in respect of a restricted weapon shall be in a form prescribed by the Commissioner and shall be made to a local registrar of firearms.

(2) On receiving an application for a registration certificate, a local registrar of firearms may issue a permit under subsection 110(4) authorizing the applicant to convey the weapon to him for examination.

(3) A registration certificate may be issued only where a local registrar of firearms indicates on the copy of the application for the certificate that is sent to the Commissioner pursuant to subsection (5) that

- (a) the applicant for the certificate is the holder of a firearms acquisition certificate and is eighteen or more years of age, and
- (b) the restricted weapon to which the application relates bears a serial number sufficient to distinguish it from other restricted weapons or, in the case of an antique firearm that does not bear such a serial number, it is accurately described in the application, and further that the restricted weapon to which the application relates

- (c) is required by the applicant
  - (i) to protect life,
  - (ii) for use in connection with his lawful profession or occupation,
  - (iii) for use in target practice under the auspices of a shooting club approved for the purposes of this section by the Attorney General of the province in which the premises of the shooting club are located or by an agent specially designated by that Attorney General in writing for the purpose of this subsection, or
  - (iv) for use in target practice in accordance with conditions proposed to be attached to the permit to be issued in respect of the restricted weapon under subsection 110(1),
- (d) will form part of a gun collection of the applicant who is a genuine gun collector and who has complied with any regulations relating to the secure storage of,

and the keeping of records respecting, restricted weapons made pursuant to subsection 116(1), or

(e) is or is deemed pursuant to paragraph 116(f) to be a relic for the purposes of this Part.

(4) A registration certificate may only be issued in respect of a restricted weapon described in paragraph (c) of the definition “restricted weapon” in subsection 84(1) where a local registrar of firearms, in addition to the matters referred to in subsection (3), indicates on the copy of the application that is sent to the Commissioner pursuant to subsection (5) that the restricted weapon will form part of a gun collection of the applicant who is a genuine gun collector whose collection includes one or more restricted weapons described in that paragraph.

(4.1) A registration certificate may only be issued in respect of a restricted weapon described in paragraph (c.1) of the definition “restricted weapon” in subsection 84(1) where a local registrar of firearms, in addition to the matters referred to in subsection (3),

(a) indicates on the copy of the application that is sent to the commissioner pursuant to subsection (5) that the restricted weapon will form part of a gun collection of the applicant who is a genuine gun collector whose collection includes one or more restricted weapons described in that paragraph; and

(b) describes on the copy referred to in paragraph (a) all alterations that have been made to the restricted weapon to enable it to fire only one projectile with one pressure of the trigger.

(4.2) Where the description of the alterations referred to in paragraph (4.1)(b) changes in respect of a restricted weapon, the restricted weapon registration certificate issued in respect of the weapon is automatically revoked and the holder of that certificate shall immediately apply for a new registration certificate in respect of the weapon.

(4.3) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no registration certificate may be issued in respect of a restricted weapon described in paragraph (c.1) of the definition “restricted weapon” in subsection 84(1) to a person who did not lawfully possess such a restricted weapon at the time of the coming into force of this subsection.

(5) The local registrar of firearms by whom an application for a registration certificate is received shall

(a) send one copy thereof to the Commissioner;

(b) deliver one copy thereof to the applicant for the certificate; and

(c) retain one copy thereof.

(6) Where a local registrar of firearms to whom an application for a registration certificate is made has notice of any matter that may render it desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant or any other person that the applicant should not possess a restricted weapon, he shall report that matter to the Commissioner and he may, if the restricted weapon is conveyed to him for examination, hold the weapon pending the final disposition of the application for a registration certificate in respect thereof.

(7) On receiving an endorsed copy of an application for a registration certificate, the Commissioner shall, subject to subsections (3) and (4) and section 112, register the restricted weapon described in the application and issue a restricted weapon registration certificate therefor to the applicant, in such form as the Commissioner may prescribe, indicating thereon the place at which the holder of the certificate is thereby entitled to possess the restricted weapon.

(8) No place other than the usual dwelling-house of the applicant for a registration certificate or his ordinary place of business may be indicated on the registration certificate as the place at which the holder of the certificate is thereby entitled to possess the restricted weapon to which the certificate relates. 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 21.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "registration certificate", "restricted weapon", "Commissioner", "local registrar of firearms", "permit" and "firearms acquisition certificate" are defined in s. 84. The term "dwelling-house" is defined in s. 2. The Commissioner may refuse to issue the registration certificate pursuant to s. 112 and may also revoke the certificate. A person authorized to issue a permit may revoke it under s. 112(2). These decisions may be appealed pursuant to s. 112. Age, for the purpose of subsec. (3)(a), is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Making a false statement on an application for a certificate, altering or defacing a certificate, failing to deliver up a certificate which has been revoked or when prohibited from possessing firearms are offences under s. 113. Section 114 requires the Commissioner to keep a registry of registration certificates that have been issued and revoked and applications which have been refused. Possession of a restricted weapon without a registration certificate or in contravention of the terms of the certificate or any permit are offences under s. 91.

SYNOPSIS

This provision sets out detailed procedures for an application for a registration certificate for restricted weapons. As part of the application process, s. 109(2) requires that the weapon be examined by a local registrar of firearms, who will issue a special permit to allow the applicant to transport the weapon for the purpose of this examination. Such registration certificates are only available to persons 18 years of age or more, are limited to weapons bearing serial numbers (except in the case of antiques) and may only be issued for one of the limited purposes listed in the section. Permissible purposes include possession by gun collectors, use for target practice, use in connection with the applicant's lawful employment, or to protect life. Subsection (8) limits certificates to authorizing possession at either home or usual place of business.

The local registrar of firearms receives the application and a copy is forwarded to the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. The Commissioner shall issue the certificate unless the requirements of the section are not met. If the local registrar of firearms knows any reason why it is desirable that an applicant not receive a certificate, the registrar must advise the Commissioner and may retain the weapon (if it has been turned in for examination) until the Commissioner makes a determination about the applicant.

ANNOTATIONS

In view of subsec. (8), the registrar has no power to designate some other place, such as the premises of a gun club, as the place where the owner may store the restricted weapon: R. v. Wilson (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 126 (Alta. Q.B.).

REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE FOR OTHER PERSONS.

109.1. - (a) to protect life;
- (b) for use in connection with his lawful profession or occupation;

Transitional provision

1991, c. 40, s. 34 provides as follows:

34. Notwithstanding subsection 48(1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, a permit issued under subsection 110(5) of the Criminal Code or under section 97 of the Criminal Code, as that section read immediately before the coming into force of section 3 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, other than a permit that is expressed to be issued for a specified period, ceases to be in force or have an effect on the day that is ninety days after the date of the coming into force of this section, unless the permit is revoked before that day.

(6) A permit to possess a firearm, other than a restricted weapon, may be issued by a firearms officer to a person under the age of eighteen years who hunts or traps as a way of life if the firearms officer is satisfied that the person needs to hunt or trap in order to sustain the person or the person's family and the application for the permit includes a consent to the issuance of the permit signed by a parent of the applicant or, if a consent by a parent cannot be obtained because of the death of both parents or for any other reason it is not practicable or desirable in the opinion of the firearms officer to whom the application is made to obtain a parent's consent, a person having custody or control of the applicant.

(7) A permit authorizing a person who is twelve or more years of age but under the age of eighteen years to possess a firearm, other than a restricted weapon, may be issued by a firearms officer if the firearms officer is satisfied that the applicant therefor requires such a permit in order to enable the applicant to possess a firearm for the purpose of target practice, game hunting or instruction in the use of firearms in accordance with conditions for supervision attached to the permit signed by a parent of the applicant or, if a consent by a parent cannot be obtained because of the death of both parents or for any other reason it is not practicable or desirable in the opinion of the firearms officer to whom the application is made to obtain a parent's consent, a person having custody or control of the applicant.

(8) A permit mentioned in subsection (6) or (7) shall remain in force until
(a) the expiration of the period for which it is expressed to be issued, or

(b) the person to whom it is issued attains the age of eighteen years, whichever first occurs, unless it is sooner revoked.

(9) Permits mentioned in subsections (1), (2.1), (3), (3.1), (4), (6) and (7) shall be issued without payment of a fee, but no permit mentioned in subsection (5) may be issued unless the application therefor is accompanied by the fee prescribed by regulation.

(10) No permit, other than

(a) a permit for the possession of a restricted weapon for use as described in paragraph (2)(c),

(b) a permit to transport a restricted weapon from one place to another place specified therein as mentioned in subsection (3), is valid outside the province in which it is issued unless it is issued by the Commissioner or a person designated in writing by him and authorized in writing by him to issue permits valid outside the province and is endorsed for the purposes of this subsection by the person who issued it as being valid within the provinces indicated therein.

(11) Every permit shall be in a form prescribed by the Commissioner, but any person who is authorized to issue a permit relating to any restricted weapon, firearm or ammunition may attach to the permit any reasonable condition relating to the use, carriage, possession, handling or storage of weapons or ammunition that he deems desirable in the particular circumstances and in the interests of the safety of the applicant therefor or any other person. 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, ss. 23, 40.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “registration certificate”, “restricted weapon”, “Commissioner”, “local registrar of firearms”, “chief provincial firearms officer”, “permit” and “firearms acquisition certificate” are defined in s. 84. The terms “dwelling-house” and “Attorney General” are defined in s. 2. A permit may be revoked by any person who is authorized to issue it pursuant to s. 112(2). A person authorized to issue a permit under subsecs. (3) to (7) may refuse to issue it under s. 112(4). These decisions may be appealed pursuant to s. 112. Age, for the purpose of subsec. (7), is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Transferring a firearm to a person under the age of 18 years without a permit is an offence under s. 93. Making a false statement on an application for a permit, altering or defacing a permit, failing to comply with the terms of a permit, failing to deliver up a permit which has been revoked or when prohibited from possessing firearms are offences under s. 113. Section 114 requires the Commissioner to keep a registry of permits that have been issued and revoked and applications which have been refused. Possession of a restricted weapon without a registration certificate or in contravention of the terms of the certificate and without a permit are offences under s. 91.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the circumstances under which a person may carry or transport restricted weapons and when permits for firearms other than restricted weapons may be issued to a person under 18.

A special permit is required to carry a restricted weapon (in addition to a firearms acquisition certificate, and the registration of the weapon). Subsection (2) provides that the only permissible purposes for which such permits may be issued are target practice (either in connection with the terms of the permit or under the control of an authorized shooting club), in connection with lawful employment or to protect life. In addition, however, provision is made for issuing permits to persons who do not reside in Canada where the person is in Canada to participate in a target shooting competition that is held under the auspices of a shooting club.

Subsections (3) and (4) deal with permits to transport a restricted weapon. The purposes for which such permits may be issued are broader and more open-ended in subsec. (3) than in subsec. (2). So long as there is a bona fide reason advanced, such as a change in residence, the permit may be issued. A second type of transportation permit allows the holder to convey the weapon to a local registrar of firearms. An example of when such a permit would be required is to permit inspection under s. 109(2).

Subsections (6) and (7) allow persons under 18 years to be issued permits for firearms other than restricted weapons. Subsection (6) allows for persons under 18 years to have such permits if they hunt or trap as a way of life and, in most circumstances, the consent of one parent is needed in support of such an application. Subsection (7) empowers firearms officers to issue permits to 12 to 18-year-olds for target practice, game hunting or to get instruction regarding the use of firearms. Again, the consent of a parent is generally required before such a permit is issued.

The permits outlined above are issued without fee.

Subsection (10) limits the validity of most permits to the issuing province unless they are to be used to convey the weapon to the local registrar of firearms or they are issued in relation to target practice under the control of an approved shooting club.

Subsection (11) allows the person issuing the permit to attach such reasonable conditions to the permit on the use, carriage, possession, handling, or storage of the weapon or ammunition as are desirable in the interests of safety of the permit holder or others.

Subsection (5) deals with permits to carry on the firearms-related businesses described in s. 105. These permits do require a fee.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) / Permit to carry firearm – The applicant for a permit to carry a restricted weapon, having been refused a permit by the Assistant Commissioner, could reapply to the Commissioner. The Commissioner's decision affirming the dismissal of the application should not be interfered with lightly by the courts. Where the Commissioner's reasons indicated that he had considered the relevant factors and not taken into consideration any irrelevant factors then an application for mandamus to compel the issuing of the permit must be dismissed. Refusal of the permit in such circumstances does not violate s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Commissioner of R.C.M.P. v. Turenko, [1985] 1 F.C. 669 (C.A.).

The legislative scheme for issuing permits to carry restricted weapons is intra vires Parliament, being legislation in relation to criminal law: Martinoff v. Dawson (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 482 (B.C.C.A.).

Subsec. (5) / Permit to carry on business – While there are no statutory criteria to guide the chief provincial firearms officer in determining whether or not to issue a permit under this subsection he may properly consider the criteria specified in s. 106(3) with respect to the issuance of firearms acquisition certificates. Moreover, the criteria should be applied not only to the applicant but to anyone else who might associate in the business with the applicant, even as an employee: R. v. Wilke (No. 2) (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 108 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

Subsec. 10 / Territorial jurisdiction – The Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. has jurisdiction to issue a permit to carry on a business described in s. 105 that is effective in more than one province. It is not open to the Commissioner to refuse to exercise that jurisdiction solely because of a desire not to interfere with the existing provincial administration of the scheme. No agreement with the provinces can nullify the power which Parliament has given to the Commissioner: Martinoff v. Canada (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 341, [1994] 2 F.C. 33, 18 A.T.M.R. L.R. (2d) 191 (C.A.).

AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES.

111. The Minister of Justice of Canada, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may enter into agreements with the governments of the provinces providing for payments by Canada to the provinces in respect of costs actually incurred by the provinces in the administration of sections 105, 106, 107 and subsection 110(5). 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 24.

112. (1) A registration certificate may be revoked by the Commissioner.

(2) A permit may be revoked by any person who is authorized to issue such a permit.

(2.1) An authorization referred to in subsection 90(3.2) may be revoked by a local registrar of firearms.

(4) Any person who is authorized to issue a permit under any of subsections 110(2.1) to (7) may refuse to issue such a permit where that person has notice of any matter that may render it desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant therefor or any other person that such a permit should not be issued to the applicant.

(5) Where a registration certificate or a permit is revoked or a firearms acquisition certificate is revoked pursuant to subsection 100(7.1) or 103(3.1) or subparagraph 103(6)(b)(ii) or the issue of any registration certificate or permit is refused under this section, the person by whom it is revoked or by whom its issue is refused shall give notice to the holder of the registration certificate, permit or firearms acquisition certificate or the applicant therefor, as the case may be, in writing, of the revocation or refusal and of the reasons therefor and shall include in the notification a copy or an extract of the provisions of this section.

(6) A notice under subsection (5) shall

(a) specify a reasonable period within which the person affected by the revocation or refusal may surrender to a police officer or otherwise lawfully dispose of any restricted weapon, firearm or ammunition in respect of which the notice applies, and during which that person is not liable to prosecution by reason only that the person possesses the restricted weapon, firearm or ammunition during that period of time; and

- (b) state that if that person fails to dispose of the restricted weapon, firearm or ammunition within the period specified in the notice, the restricted weapon, firearm or ammunition is forfeited to Her Majesty and must be surrendered to a police officer or firearms officer to be disposed of as the Attorney General directs.

(7) Where an appeal is taken under subsection (8), the period of time referred to in subsection (6) does not commence until that appeal is finally disposed of.

(8) A person who feels himself aggrieved by

- (a) any action or decision taken under this section, or
- (b) the failure of a local registrar of firearms to indicate on the copy of an application for a registration certificate that is sent by him to the Commissioner pursuant to subsection 109(5) any of the matters referred to in subsections 109(3) and (4) that is applicable in respect of the application, may, within thirty days from the day on which he was notified of the action or decision or became aware of the failure, unless before or after the expiration of that period further time is allowed by a provincial court judge, appeal to a provincial court judge from the action, decision or failure by filing with the provincial court judge a notice of appeal, setting out with reasonable certainty the action, decision or failure complained of and the grounds of appeal, together with such further material as the provincial court judge may require.

(9) A copy of any notice of appeal filed with a provincial court judge under subsection (8) and of any further material required to be filed therewith shall be served within fourteen days of the filing of the notice, unless before or after the expiration of that period further time is allowed by a provincial court judge, on the person who took the action or decision or who was responsible for the failure being appealed from or on such other person as the provincial court judge may direct.

(10) For the purposes of an appeal under subsection (8), the appellant is a competent and compellable witness.

(11) On the hearing of an appeal under subsection (8), the provincial court judge may

- (a) dismiss the appeal; or
- (b) allow the appeal and
  - (i) cancel the revocation of the registration certificate, permit or firearms acquisition certificate or direct that a registration certificate or permit be issued to the applicant therefor, as the case may be, or
  - (ii) direct that a registration certificate be issued notwithstanding the failure referred to in paragraph (8)(b).

(12) A provincial court judge shall dispose of an appeal under subsection (8) heard by him by dismissing it unless the applicant establishes to the satisfaction of the provincial court judge that a disposition referred to in paragraph (11)(b) is warranted.

(13) Where the provincial court judge

- (a) dismisses an appeal under subsection (11), the appellant, or
- (b) allows an appeal under subsection (11),
  - (i) the Attorney General of Canada or counsel instructed by him for the purpose, if the person who took the action or decision or who was responsible for the failure referred to in paragraph (8)(b) that was appealed from to the provincial court judge was the Commissioner or a local registrar of firearms appointed by him, or
  - (ii) the Attorney General or counsel instructed by him for the purpose, in any other case, may appeal to the appeal court against the dismissal or against the allowing of the appeal, as the case may be, and the provisions of Part XXVII except sections 816 to 819 and 829 to 838 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of that appeal.

(14) In this section,

“appeal court” has the meaning given that expression in subsection 100(11);

“provincial court judge” means a provincial court judge having jurisdiction in the territorial division where the person who feels himself aggrieved as described in subsection (8) resides. 1976-77, c. 53, s. 3; 1991, c. 40, s. 26.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “registration certificate”, “permit”, “Commissioner”, “local registrar of firearms” and “firearms officer” are defined in s. 84. “Attorney General”, “weapon”, and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. As some of the provisions of Part XXVII apply to an appeal under subsec. (13), a further appeal will lie from the decision of the appeal court (defined in s. 100(11)) to the Court of Appeal (as defined in s. 673) with leave on a question of law alone, pursuant to s. 839. Time-limits as specified in this section are calculated in accordance with ss. 26 and 27 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Making a false statement on an application for a permit or certificate, altering or defacing a permit or certificate, and failing to deliver up a permit or certificate which has been revoked are offences under s. 113. Section 114 requires the Commissioner to keep a registry of permits and registration certificates that have been issued and revoked and applications which have been refused.

SYNOPSIS

Section 112 permits the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. to refuse to issue registration certificates, regulates how permits or registration certificates may be revoked and creates an appeal process from such decisions.

The Commissioner has the power to refuse a registration certificate if it is desirable in the interests of safety of anyone (including the applicant) (s. 112(3)) or to revoke a registration certificate (s. 112(1)).

Anyone who is authorized to issue permits may revoke the permits described in s. 110(3) to (7) (permits to transport, carry on business in relation to restricted weapons or permits issued to those under 18 years) on the same basis as the Commissioner.

If a registration certificate or permit is not issued or is revoked, reasons must be given to the applicant or holder of the revoked permit or certificate. Such notice must provide a reasonable grace period to turn the weapon over to the authorities or to otherwise dispose of the weapon (s. 112(5) to (7)).

Subsections (8) to (12) create a right of appeal to a provincial court judge and prescribe time limits within which the appeal is to be commenced and notice served on the decision-maker whose decision led to the appeal.

Subsection (8) places the onus on the appellant to establish that the decision should be overturned. Subsection (10) states that the appellant is a competent and compellable witness on the appeal. Subsection (11) sets out the power of the provincial judge to dismiss the appeal, or to allow it and order the issuance of the certificate or permit or that the revoked permit or certificate be reissued to the appellant.

Subsection (13) permits a further appeal to the superior court in all provinces.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (13) – A further appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the decision of the “appeal Court” (defined in s. 100(11)) pursuant to s. 839(1) with leave on a question of law alone: A.-G. Can. v. Haines and Haines (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 189, 32 N.S.R. (2d) 60 (App. Div.).

CROSS-REFERENCES

“Firearm” is defined in s. 84(1).

A person convicted of this offence is subject to the mandatory prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

An accused charged with this offence may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Note provision for forfeiture of weapons used in commission of an offence in s. 491.

SYNOPSIS

This offence was created by Parliament for the purpose of imposing an additional punishment upon those accused who use firearms or imitation firearms while committing or fleeing from the commission of indictable offences (or the attempt to do either). It is important to note that s. 85(1)(a) does not apply in respect of certain indictable offences which already impose an additional penalty for the use of a firearm during the commission of the offence. It is not necessary that the accused intend to harm anyone with the firearm nor that it be proven to be loaded at the time it is used. There were several early challenges to the constitutional validity of the preceding s. 85 alleging violations of ss. 11(h) and 7 of the Charter. These efforts were unsuccessful but may need to be re-assessed as the case law continues to evolve, setting out the constitutionally permissible minimum level of intention in the criminal law.

Apart from murder, this is the only section of the Criminal Code which carries a minimum mandatory period of imprisonment upon a first conviction of one year, and upon a second (or subsequent) conviction of three years. The provision of a higher minimum for a second (or subsequent) offence may be invoked if it is proven that the accused was convicted before this section was passed for an offence involving the same conduct. Subsection (4) requires that the sentence for this offence must be consecutive to any other sentence imposed in connection with the same events.

ANNOTATIONS

Underlying offences which may found liability – An accused may be convicted of attempted robbery, specified as an attempt to commit the offence under s. 343(d), and the offence under this section. Further, conviction of both offences does not violate the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Krug v. The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 48 C.R. (3d) 97, 21 D.L.R. (4th) 161 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

An accused cannot be convicted of the offence under this section where the “indictable offence” referred to in subsec. (1) by its definition in the Code required the use of a firearm as a constituent element of the offence, for example, pointing a firearm under s. 86(1): R. v. Langevin (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 138, 10 C.R. (3d) 193 (Ont. C.A.); Krug v. The Queen, supra.

The accused may be convicted of the offence under this section and discharging a firearm with intent to wound contrary to s. 244: R. v. Pineault; R. v. Berube (1979), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 328, 12 C.R. (3d) 129 (Que. C.A.). Contra: R. v. Lavoie (1980), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 356, 29 N.B.R. (2d) 215 (C.A.).

An accused may also be convicted of this offence and the offence of possession of a weapon for a purpose dangerous to the public peace contrary to s. 87 where the evidence showed that the accused discharged the firearm: R. v. Yurkiv (1980), 18 C.R. (3d) 287 (Ont. C.A.).

An accused may be convicted of this offence and aggravated assault contrary to s. 268: R. v. Switzer (1987), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 303, 56 C.R. (3d) 107, 75 A.R. 167 (C.A.); R. v. Osbourne (1994), 94 C.C.C. (3d) 435, 21 O.R. (3d) 97, 74 O.A.C. 315 (C.A.).

Requirement of conviction for underlying offence – To render the accused guilty of the offence under this section, there must be a distinct conviction for the underlying indictable offence and not merely a finding of fact that the accused had committed an indictable offence in the course of which he used a firearm. Further, the court charging the offence under this section should clearly indicate the offence during which the accused allegedly used the firearm: R. v. Pringle (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 70 C.R. (3d) 305 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

This section may be resorted to only where there is a conviction for the underlying offence and the use of the firearm was in the actual commission or attempted commission of the underlying offence. Thus, the accused could not be convicted of using a firearm while a party to a robbery where, although a firearm was used to compel a third person to commit the robbery, this third person did not actually use the firearm to commit the robbery: R. v. Ingraham (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 27, 46 O.A.C. 216 (C.A.).

Proof of “use” of firearm – A person may be convicted of this offence although he does not use the firearm himself but is merely a party to the offence by virtue of s. 21: McGuigan v. The Queen (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 40 N.R. 499 (S.C.C.).

Use of a firearm under this section requires more than merely being in possession of, or armed with, a weapon and thus it would seem that the offence described in s. 87 of possession of a weapon for a purpose dangerous to the public peace cannot constitute the underlying indictable offence: R. v. Chang (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 413 (B.C.C.A.).

A separate offence contrary to this section is committed by the accused each time he uses a firearm in the commission of a separate indictable offence notwithstanding the indictable offences take place within a short time of each other and involve the same firearm: R. v. Woods et al. (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 554 (Ont. C.A.).

Meaning of “firearm” – To constitute a firearm within the meaning of this section, whatever is used on the scene of the crime must be proven by the Crown as capable either at the outset or through adaptation or assembly of being loaded and fired so as to have the potential for causing serious bodily harm during the commission of the offence or during the flight after the commission of that main offence. An operable but unloaded revolver or air pistol is a firearm because it is capable, during the commission of the offence when loaded and fired, of causing bodily injury. There is no requirement that the Crown prove that the accused was in possession of ammunition. If, however, the weapon is inoperable, then it is a firearm if, given the nature of the repairs or modifications required and the availability of parts on the scene, whatever was used could, during the commission of the offence, have been adapted by an ordinary person or by the accused, if possessing special skills, so as to be capable of firing and of causing serious injury: R. v. Covin and Covin (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 240, 3 D.L.R. (4th) 558, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 725 (5:0).

Thus, a pistol which lacked the magazine was a firearm for the purposes of this section, although without the magazine the safety disconnecter was also engaged. The Crown is not required to prove that the accused at the time of the offence was in possession of ammunition and any of the paraphernalia, including the magazine, by which the ammunition is loaded into the weapon: R. v. Watkins and Graber (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 465 (B.C.C.A.).

Imposition of sentence – It was held in R. v. MacLean (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 552, 12 C.R. (3d) 1 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.) and R. v. Goforth (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 573 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Cochrane (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 570, 67 W.A.C. 315 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Herrell (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 412, 69 O.A.C. 394 (C.A.), that in view of the language of subsec.(2) where the accused is convicted of several offences under subsec. (1) the sentences imposed for those offences must not only be consecutive to the indictable offence but consecutive to each other. The Court in R. v. MacLean did not appear to consider the further question whether where all convictions for the offence under subsec. (1) occur after the commission of the last offence the three-year minimum rather than the one-year minimum applies to all but the first conviction under this section. In R. v. Boucher, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 750 (5:0) the court in a brief judgment indicated that it essentially agreed with the interpretation of this section by the court of appeal in R. v. MacLean, supra. It was held in R. v. Cheetham, (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 109, 17 C.R. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.). that to constitute a “second or subsequent offence” within the meaning of subsec. (1)(d) the second offence must have been committed after a previous conviction for an offence referred to in that subsection, and R. v. Cheetham, supra, was followed in R. v. Oswald (1981), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 484 (B.C.C.A.).

Subsection (1)(d) applies even where the accused did not actually use the firearm himself in the prior non-s. 85 offence and was merely a party to its use: R. v. Nicholson (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 116, 24 C.R. (3d) 284, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 600, [1982] 1 W.W.R. 385 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

At least where the underlying offence is robbery, this section does not infringe s. 12 of the Charter although it could result in the imposition of a number of consecutive sentences for offences arising out of the same series of events: R. v. Brown, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 749, 93 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 34 C.R. (4th) 24.

Notwithstanding the wording of subsec. (2), the sentence for the offence under this section cannot be made consecutive to a life sentence: R. v. Cochrane (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 570, 67 W.A.C. 315 (B.C.C.A.).

- (c) a position or an employment in a public department;

"official" means a person who

- (a) holds an office, or
- (b) is appointed to discharge a public duty;

"witness" means a person who gives evidence orally under oath or by affidavit in a judicial proceeding, whether or not he is competent to be a witness, and includes a child of tender years who gives evidence but does not give it under oath, because, in the opinion of the person presiding, the child does not understand the nature of an oath. R.S., c. C-34, s. 107; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 15.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions set out in this section, applicable to offences created by this Part, reference should also be made to s. 2 and in particular the definitions of "justice", "provincial court judge", "peace officer", "public department", "public officer" and "Attorney General".

ANNOTATIONS

"evidence" – This definition, which has appeared in slightly different forms since the 1982 Code, was intended to avoid the difficulty at common law that, to prove perjury, it was necessary to show that the statement was material in the sense that, unless it related to the exact issue which was under consideration then the offence was not made out: Drew v. The King (1902), 6 C.C.C. 241 (Que. K.B., App. Side), affd 6 C.C.C. 424, 33 S.C.R. 228.

"judicial proceeding" – While it had been held in several earlier cases, notably R. v. Kohel (1926), 46 C.C.C. 279, [1926] 3 W.W.R. 478 (Sask. K.B.); R. v. Rulofson (1908), 14 C.C.C. 253 (B.C.S.C.) and R. v. Allen (1924), 43 C.C.C. 118, [1925] 1 D.L.R. 57 (Man. K.B.), that a civil examination for discovery is not a judicial proceeding where the official who administered the oath was not present during the examination, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal has now held to the contrary in R. v. Foster and Walton-Ball (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 484, [1982] 5 W.W.R. 363, and overruled R. v. Kohel. The absence of the official, in this case the deputy local registrar, was held not to invalidate the proceedings.

Properly interpreted, the relevant provision of the provincial Securities Act authorized the Registrar to require a person to submit to an examination under oath before him and, accordingly, such proceedings fell within para. (d) of this definition: Re M.C. Shumtacher (1961), 131 C.C.C. 259, [1962] S.C.R. 38, 31 D.L.R. (2d) 2 (Judson J. in chambers).

Although they were not entitled to make a final decision, persons, appointed under the provincial Securities Act to conduct an investigation and question witnesses under oath, were authorized by law to make an "inquiry" within the meaning of para. (d) and, accordingly, the proceeding was a judicial proceeding: R. v. Thomson (1974), 2 O.R. (2d) 644 (Co. Ct.).

"office" – This definition does not apply to an office under a municipal government so as to determine liability for the offence, contrary to s. 123, of offering a benefit to a municipal official [defined in s. 123(3), inter alia, as a person who holds an office under a municipal government]. The court, therefore, properly applied the dictionary definition of "office" as, inter alia, "A position to which certain duties are attached, esp. a place of trust, authority, or service under constituted authority.": Belzberg v. The Queen (1961), 131 C.C.C. 281, [1962] S.C.R. 254, 37 W.W.R. 97, 36 C.R. 368 (5:0).

"official" – The expression "means" used in this definition is of an explanatory and restrictive nature and in contradistinction to the expression "includes", used in the definition of "office", supra, which is of an extensive nature. It follows that, the definition in this subsection being governed by the definition of “office”, an official is a person who holds an office either within the meaning in para. (a), (b) or (c) of that definition, or within the usual meaning of the word office, which can be ascertained by reference to dictionaries, meaning in part, a “position of duty, trust, or authority, esp., in the public service, or in some corporation, society or the like” or a “position to which certain duties are attached, esp. a place of trust, authority, or service under constituted authority.” An elected member of a municipal council was, therefore, an official holding an office within the meaning of para. (a) and was also within the definition in para. (b). As regards the latter, while the term “appointed” is often used in contrast to the word “elected”, Parliament could not have intended any such distinction: R. v. Sheets (1971), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 508, [1971] S.C.R. 614, 16 D.L.R. (3d) 221, 15 C.R.N.S. 232 (9:0).

A member of the Legislative Council of Quebec appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in the name of The Queen is an official within the meaning of para. (ii): Martineau v. The Queen, [1966] 4 C.C.C. 327, [1966] S.C.R. 103, 48 C.R. 209 (5:0).

“witness” – The reference to a “child of tender years” in this definition is apparently a reference to former s. 16 of the Canada Evidence Act, which provided for the taking of the unsworn evidence of such a child. Section 16 has now been amended to provide for the taking of unsworn evidence of a “person under fourteen years of age or a person whose mental capacity is challenged”, who does not understand the nature of an oath or a solemn affirmation, but is able to communicate the evidence and who promises to tell the truth.

Section 14(2) of the Canada Evidence Act provides that evidence by a person, who makes a solemn affirmation in accordance with s. 14(1), has the same effect as if taken under oath and by s. 15(2), a person, who makes a solemn affirmation under s. 14(1), is liable to indictment and punishment for perjury in all respects as if he had been sworn. The form of the solemn affirmation is prescribed by s. 14(1).

While s. 13 of the Canada Evidence Act authorizes the administering of an oath, neither the Criminal Code nor the Canada Evidence Act prescribe a form of oath and no particular form was prescribed at common law. The essential element of an oath is that it be in a form which binds the conscience of the witness as a solemn appeal to the witness’ deity: R. v. Lee Tuck and Lung Tung (1912), 19 C.C.C. 471, 5 D.L.R. 629, 2 W.W.R. 605 (Alta. S.C.).

A witness who takes a certain form of oath, without objection, in the form generally administered to persons of his faith, agreeing that it binds his conscience, cannot thereafter be heard to say that he was not sworn: Shajoo Ram v. The King (No. 2) (1915), 25 C.C.C. 69, 51 S.C.R. 392, 26 D.L.R. 267 (5:0).

Corruption and Disobedience

BRIBERY OF JUDICIAL OFFICERS, ETC. / Consent of Attorney General.

119. (1) Every one who

- (a) being the holder of a judicial office, or being a member of Parliament or of the legislature of a province, corruptly
  - (i) accepts or obtains,
  - (ii) agrees to accept, or
  - (iii) attempts to obtain, any money, valuable consideration, office, place or employment for himself or another person in respect of anything done or omitted or to be done or omitted by him in his official capacity, or
- (b) gives or offers, corruptly, to a person mentioned in paragraph (a) any money, valuable consideration, office, place or employment in respect of anything done or omitted or to be done or omitted by him in his official capacity for himself or another person, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(2) No proceedings against a person who holds a judicial office shall be instituted under this section without the consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada.
R.S., c. C-34, s. 108.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "office" is defined in s. 118. The term "corruptly" is not defined in this Part but has been considered by the courts in relation to the secret commission offence in s. 426 where it was held not to mean wickedly or dishonestly but to refer to an act done mala fides, designed wholly or partially for the purpose of bringing about the effect forbidden by the section: R. v. Brown (1956), 116 C.C.C. 287 (Ont. C.A.).

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and falls within the definition of "enterprise crime offence" in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2. Conviction for this offence may, in some circumstances, result in loss of the office by virtue of s. 748(1) and other disabilities as prescribed by s. 748(2).

Where the accused is the holder of a judicial office, the consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada is required (subsec. (2)) and the offence may only be tried by a superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. [Note, attempt and conspiracy to commit the offence by the holder of a judicial office would not fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court.] It would also seem that, by virtue of s. 522, only a judge of a superior court can release on bail in such circumstances.

In all other cases, the accused has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2) and release pending trial is dealt with under s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

Sections 119 to 130 deal generally with corruption and disobedience of court orders. Section 119 creates offences which apply both to the person who accepts a bribe and to the person who offers a bribe. The offer, the acceptance, the agreement to accept or the attempt to obtain make out the full offence. It is an element of both offences that the offer, acceptance or solicitation must be done corruptly and there must be an attempt to influence the office-holder in his or her official capacity.

The seriousness of this offence is recognized by the maximum sentence of 14 years imprisonment.

Subsection (2) requires the consent of the federal Attorney General before a prosecution can be launched against a judge.

ANNOTATIONS

The corrupt act of a Member of Parliament does not have to be in connection with his legislative duties, it may be in connection with his participation in an administrative act of government: R. v. Bruneau, [1964] 1 C.C.C. 97, 42 C.R. 93 (Ont. C.A.).

In Arseneau v. The Queen (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 321, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 136 (7:2) the majority of the Court rejected the proposition that a member of the Legislature who is also a minister of the Crown is to be taken not to be acting in his official capacity as a member in respect of acts and decisions which he makes in the administration of his ministry. In the absence of evidence to the contrary it must be accepted that it was as a member that he was appointed a minister it being the generally accepted practice that a minister participate in the process of obtaining legislative authority for implementing his policies and approving expenditures. Thus his capacity as a member cannot be so severed from his functions as a minister as to make it an offence under this section to bribe him as a member but no offence to bribe the same person in his capacity as minister.

On a charge under this section the use to be made of the money received is irrelevant.

Thus, it is no defence that the Member used the money for non-reimbursable expenses he incurred as a Member of Parliament: R. v. Yanakis (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 374 (Que. C.A.).

BRIBERY OF OFFICERS.

120. Every one who

- (a) being a justice, police commissioner, peace officer, public officer or officer of a juvenile court, or being employed in the administration of criminal law, corruptly
  - (i) accepts or obtains,
  - (ii) agrees to accept, or
  - (iii) attempts to obtain,
 for himself or any other person any money, valuable consideration, office, place or employment with intent
  - (iv) to interfere with the administration of justice,
  - (v) to procure or facilitate the commission of an offence, or
  - (vi) to protect from detection or punishment a person who has committed or who intends to commit an offence, or
- (b) gives or offers, corruptly, to a person mentioned in paragraph (a) any money, valuable consideration, office, place or employment with intent that the person should do anything mentioned in subparagraph (a)(iv), (v) or (vi),

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 109.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice”, “peace officer” and “public officer” are defined in s. 2. The term “office” is defined in part in s. 118; see notes of that term under that section. The term “juvenile court” would appear to refer to an officer of the “juvenile court” as defined in s. 2 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-3 (now repealed). The Young Offenders Act now only contains definitions of “youth court” and “youth worker”. The term “corruptly” is not defined in this Part but has been considered by the courts in relation to the secret commission offence in s. 426 where it was held not to mean wickedly or dishonestly, but to refer to an act done mala fides designed wholly or partially for the purpose of bringing about the effect forbidden by the section: R. v. Brown (1956), 116 C.C.C. 287 (Ont. C.A.).

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and falls within the definition of “enterprise crime offence” in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2. Conviction for this offence may, in some circumstances, result in loss of the office by virtue of s. 748(1) and other disabilities as prescribed by s. 748(2).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is governed by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section parallels s. 119 in many ways, creating offences both relating to the person offering the bribe and the person who accepts or agrees to accept it. The group of public officers is different from those captured by s. 119, with this section targeting police officers, justices and others involved in the administration of the criminal law. Again, as with s. 119, the offer or acceptance must be done corruptly. The maximum punishment for this offence is 14 years imprisonment.

The acts need not involve the officers in their public capacity. However, the intent must be to interfere with justice, making it easier for another person to commit an offence or to protect an offender from detection or punishment. There is no need to obtain the consent of the Attorney General to prosecute under this section.

ANNOTATIONS

"administration of justice" – It was held, considering the predecessor of this section, that the "administration of justice" is not limited to apprehended proceedings in respect of crimes in the strict sense but extends to proceedings in respect of provincial offences. Further it was immaterial whether the police officer actually intended to institute a prosecution; it sufficed if the accused was apprehensive of a prosecution and gave the bribe to prevent it: Kalick v. The King (1920), 35 C.C.C. 159, 61 S.C.R. 175 (5:1).

The term "the administration of justice" in this section refers to events leading up to the imposition of sentence and does not cover the administrative structure that governs convicts after they have been sentenced: R. v. Smalbrugge (1984), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 283 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

"an offence" – "Offence" in para. (a)(vi) includes the contravention of a valid provincial statute: R. v. Sommerville, [1963] 3 C.C.C. 240, 40 C.R. 384 (Sask. C.A.).

mens rea – The offence contrary to para. (b) is a specific intent offence for which drunkenness is a defence. Further, evidence of good character adduced by the accused may not only serve to support the accused's credibility but must be considered from the standpoint of whether the accused as a person of good character was likely to have committed this offence unless he was so drunk as to lack the capacity to form the requisite intent: R. v. Dees (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 58 (Ont. C.A.).

FRAUDS ON THE GOVERNMENT / Contractor subscribing to election fund / Punishment.

- (i) gives, offers or agrees to give or offer to an official or to any member of his family, or to any one for the benefit of an official, or

- (b) having dealings of any kind with the government, pays a commission or reward to or confers an advantage or benefit of any kind on an employee or official of the government with which he deals, or to any member of his family, or to any one for the benefit of the employee or official, with respect to those dealings, unless he has the consent in writing of the head of the branch of government with which he deals, the proof of which lies on him;
- (c) being an official or employee of the government, demands, accepts or offers or agrees to accept from a person who has dealings with the government a commission, reward, advantage or benefit of any kind directly or indirectly, by himself or through a member of his family or through any one for his benefit, unless he has the consent in writing of the head of the branch of government that employs him or of which he is an official, the proof of which lies on him;
- (d) having or pretending to have influence with the government or with a minister of the government or an official, demands, accepts or offers or agrees to accept for himself or another person a reward, advantage or benefit of any kind as consideration for cooperation, assistance, exercise of influence or an act or omission in connection with

- (i) anything mentioned in subparagraph (a)(iii) or (iv), or
  - (ii) the appointment of any person, including himself, to an office;
  - (e) gives, offers or agrees to give or offer to a minister of the government or an official a reward, advantage or benefit of any kind as consideration for cooperation, assistance, exercise of influence or an act or omission in connection with
    - (i) anything mentioned in subparagraph (a)(iii) or (iv), or

- (2) Every one commits an offence who, in order to obtain or retain a contract with the government, or as a term of any such contract, whether express or implied, directly or indirectly subscribes or gives, or agrees to subscribe or give, to any person any valuable consideration

  - (b) with intent to influence or affect in any way the result of an election conducted for the purpose of electing persons to serve in Parliament or the legislature of a province.
- (3) Every one who commits an offence under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 110.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “official” and “government” are defined in s. 118. The term “office” is defined, in part, in s. 118; see notes of that term under that section. The term “person” is defined in s. 2. With respect to the offences set out in subsec. (1)(f), also see “bid-rigging” offence in s. 47 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and falls within the definition of “enterprise crime offence” in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2. Conviction for this offence bars the accused from contracting with Her Majesty or from receiving any benefit under a contract between Her Majesty and any other person or to hold office under Her Majesty, by virtue of s. 748(3), unless the capacity is restored by the Governor in Council under s. 748(4).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 121 creates a number of offences relating to frauds upon government and is aimed, in part, at what is known as influence peddling. As with ss. 119 and 120, offences are created to catch both the government officials (or a family member of such officials) and the person offering the bribe.

Section 121(1)(a), which deals specifically with influence peddling, catches a wide range of activities, including offers of loans or benefits offered for the purpose of obtaining an advantage in government business or benefits which the government may confer. There is no requirement that the official be actually able to be of assistance to bring about the result sought to be obtained. As with most offences created by this section, it is broad enough to encompass situations in which the intended recipient of the benefit is a family member of the government official.

Section 121(1)(b) creates an offence applicable to the person who confers an advantage or benefit upon an employee or an official of the government, by a person who has any kind of dealings with the government. The person offering the benefit must do so with the intention of conferring a benefit, however, no offence is committed where he has the consent in writing of the head of the branch of government, with which he deals, to do so. The accused must prove the existence of such consent.

Section 121(1)(c) creates a companion offence to the previous paragraph, and is aimed at the employee or official who receives the reward or benefit. The broad scope of this paragraph extends to benefits to family members of the accused official. As with the previous paragraph, the defence of consent by senior officials is provided and the onus is on the accused to demonstrate their consent.

Section 121(1)(d) and (e) create companion offences aimed at the person demanding and the person accepting a reward and the person offering the reward for the same purposes as in subsec. (1)(a) or to obtain the appointment of any person to an office. This offence requires the intention on the part of the person agreeing to accept the benefit of influencing, or pretending to do so, a minister or other employee of the government. The offence requires more than merely seeking access to governmental officials; the gravamen of the offence is attempting to influence decisions.

Section 121(1)(f) is aimed at the attempted influencing of government tendering processes. This paragraph creates offences for both sides of this type of corrupt deal-making. The key aspect of this offence is to offer or accept, the reward, advantage and so on, for the purpose of having competing tenders withdrawn from consideration.

Subsection (2) deals with attempts to curtail improper ties between those who have or seek to obtain government contracts and those who seek (or who wish to retain) elected office in the federal or provincial legislatures. The subsection is aimed at the intention to promote one or more candidate or to influence such elections to attain or retain government contracts. This offence prohibits valuable consideration being given, or promised, for such purpose directly or indirectly. The maximum punishment for the breach of this subsection is, by virtue of subsec. (3), five years imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – In R. v. Giguere et al. (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 37 C.R. (3d) 1, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 448 (4:1) it was held by three of the five judges (including Wilson, J., dissenting) that “influence” as used in this section refers to actually affecting a decision such as awarding a contract. However, co-operation and assistance are not so limited and would include opening doors or arranging meetings as the first step in an effort by another to secure a government contract. While the mere arranging of a meeting, for example, is not itself a crime it becomes so when a benefit is given, offered or demanded for the arranging of the meeting respecting the matters listed in this subsection and the person who receives or demands it is an official or one having or pretending to have influence in the relevant sense. A person having influence in the government in this sense is one who could affect, for example, a decision by the government to award a contract and similarly a person who pretends to have influence is a person who pretends he could affect such a government decision.

Subsec. (1)(a) – The application of this subsection is not confined to a person who holds office or has responsibility for the administration of law or justice but is also aimed at a person who exercises legislative functions and thus the offence may be committed by an appointed member of the Legislative Council of Quebec. The gist of the offence is influence peddling and the section is aimed at the improper use, actual or pretended, of the real or pretended influence that the official enjoys. It is not necessary to prove that the prohibited conduct was committed by the person in his official capacity: Martineau v. The Queen, [1966] 4 C.C.C. 327, [1966] S.C.R. 103.

Subsec. (1)(b) – It was held in R. v. Cooper (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 18, 37 C.R.N.S. (S.C.C.) that the offence is not one of strict liability, but is one requiring proof of mens rea of the intention to confer a benefit with respect to dealings with the Government. It was also held (4:3) that the jury was not misdirected by the Judge directing them that the offence was committed if the funds were conferred “directly or indirectly” in relation to the dealings.

In R. v. Achtem (1979), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 240, 13 C.R. (3d) 199, 11 Alta. L.R. (2d) 151 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., it was held that the accused had dealings with the “government” where his dealings were with the Alberta Housing Corporation, a corporation created by provincial statute whose board of directors was appointed by the Executive Council and consisted of Deputy-Ministers and performed the functions designated by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. Where, as in this case, the statute does not specifically provide whether or not the corporation is a Crown corporation the test is the nature and degree of control exercised by the Crown over it.

Subsec. (1)(c) – The offence under this subsection is committed even where the accused has received only the true value of services rendered outside his working hours where the compensation was received from a person who has dealings with the Government and the accused did not have the consent of his department head: Dore v. A.-G. Can. (1974), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 542, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 756, reheard in part 17 C.C.C. (2d) 359, [1975] 1 S.C.R. at p. 784.

A government employee receives an “advantage” or “benefit” within the meaning of this paragraph when the employee receives something of value which, in all of the circumstances, the trier of fact concludes constitutes a profit to the employee (or a family member) derived, in part at least, because the employee is a government employee or because of the nature of the work done by the employee for the government. Thus, this would include not only arrangements involving a quid pro quo but also where the employee gets something because he is a government employee, even though the giver expects nothing in return and the employee has done nothing to earn the thing given. In making the determination of whether or not there has been an advantage or benefit, an objective assessment of all the relevant evidence must be made and not exclusively by reference to the employee’s subjective state of mind. Once the prosecution has proved receipt of a benefit or advantage, there is no need for proof of any intent by the employee to exercise some undue influence in favour of the person giving the benefit. It is sufficient that there is proof that the employee decided to accept the thing offered with knowledge of the relevant circumstances: R. v. Greenwood (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 435, 5 O.R. (3d) 71 (C.A.).

The fact that this paragraph does not set out the mental element required for proof of the offence or that the section is extremely broad does not render it so vague as to be unconstitutional and infringe the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter. However, the placing of the burden on the accused to prove the existence of written consent from the head of the department violates the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter. Accordingly, the words “the proof of which lies on him” must be deleted: R. v. Fisher (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 103, 28 C.R. (4th) 63, 17 O.R. (3d) 295 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 94 C.C.C. (3d) vii, 119 D.L.R. (4th) vi, 25 C.R.R. (2d) 188n.

Subsec. (1)(d) – This subsection is limited to persons who have, or pretend to have, a significant nexus with government. This means someone who could or pretends he could affect, for example, a decision by government to award a contract. It is not directed at persons who are merely able to arrange a meeting with government officials: R. v. Giguere et al. (1983), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 37 C.R. (3d) 1, [1983] 2 S.C.R. 448.

In light of the wide definition of “person” in s. 2 an unincorporated political association such as the Nova Scotia Liberal Association may constitute a “person”, within the meaning of this paragraph: R. v. Barrow (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 694.

BREACH OF TRUST BY PUBLIC OFFICER.

122. Every official who, in connection with the duties of his office, commits fraud or a breach of trust is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, whether or not the fraud or breach of trust would be an offence if it were committed in relation to a private person. R.S., c. C-34, s. 111.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "official" is defined in s. 118. The term "office" is defined, in part, in s. 118; see notes of that term under that section. Breach of trust by a trustee is an offence under s. 336. The secret commission offence is found in s. 426.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and falls within the definition of "enterprise crime offence" in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

ANNOTATIONS

Breach of trust – In R. v. Campbell, [1967] 3 C.C.C. 250, 50 C.R. 270 (Ont. C.A.); affirmed 2 C.R.N.S. 403 (S.C.C.), it was held that breach of trust under this section is not to be confused with any necessity of breach of a trust in respect to trust property, as it merely relates to an abuse of public trust.

This offence requires proof that the accused is an official, that the impugned acts were committed in the general context of the execution of his duties and that the acts constituted a fraud or a breach of trust. Where the allegation is that the acts constituted a breach of trust, while it is not necessary to prove corruption, it must be shown that the accused did an act or failed to do an act contrary to the duty imposed upon him by statute, regulation, his contract of employment or directive in connection with his office and that the act gave him some personal benefit either directly or indirectly. This benefit could be payment of money or merely the hope of a promotion or a desire to please a superior. The criminal law should not be used as a sanction to punish mere technical breaches of conduct or acts of administrative indiscipline or administrative fault. What the law prohibits is some act done in furtherance of personal ends, the use of one's office in a public service for the promotion of private ends or to obtain directly or indirectly some benefit: R. v. Perreault (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 445, 48 Q.A.C. 303 (C.A.).

The accused, the town's mayor, was properly convicted upon evidence that he misled a constituent as to the value of the constituent's land and endeavoured to procure it for himself for personal profit. The work of a public servant must be a real service in which no concealed pecuniary self-interest should bias the judgment of the officer and in which the substantial truth of every transaction should be made to appear: R. v. McKitka (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 164, 35 B.C.L.R. 116 (C.A.), citing R. v. Arnoldi (1892), 23 O.R. 201 (H.C.J.).

MUNICIPAL CORRUPTION / Influencing municipal official / Definition of "municipal official".

123. (1) Every one who

(a) gives, offers or agrees to give or offer to a municipal official, or

(b) being a municipal official, demands, accepts or offers or agrees to accept from any person, a loan, reward, advantage or benefit of any kind as consideration for the official

(c) to abstain from voting at a meeting of the municipal council or a committee thereof,

(d) to vote in favour of or against a measure, motion or resolution,

(e) to aid in procuring or preventing the adoption of a measure, motion or resolution, or

(f) to perform or fail to perform an official act, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Every one who

(a) by suppression of the truth, in the case of a person who is under a duty to disclose the truth,

(b) by threats or deceit, or

(c) by any unlawful means, influences or attempts to influence a municipal official to do anything mentioned in paragraphs (1)(c) to (f) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(3) In this section, “municipal official” means a member of a municipal council or a person who holds an office under a municipal government. R.S., c. C-34, s. 112; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 16.

CROSS-REFERENCES

A municipal official may also be convicted of the offence under s. 122. Bribery, etc., of other officials is dealt with in ss. 119 and 120.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section is aimed at municipal officials who seek out or accept benefits to be influenced and those who offer such benefits. The section contains its own expanded definitions of the class of person included within the term “municipal official”. The prohibited activities are limited to efforts at influencing such officials in the performance of job related responsibilities, including voting for a resolution, or doing (or not doing) an official act. Also, it is an offence to enlist the assistance of an official (or for the official to offer) to influence others to vote for or against any resolution.

Subsection (2) is aimed at the party seeking to influence officials in those actions outlined above (i.e., voting for or against a resolution, or doing or not doing an official act) by a variety of means, including using threats, unlawful means or by the suppression of the truth by those who have a duty to tell the truth. This indictable offence has a maximum punishment of five years imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

In Belzberg v. The Queen (1961), 131 C.C.C. 281, 36 C.R. 368 (S.C.C.), it was held that the chief building inspector in Calgary held office under a municipal government and that, if he had complied with the requests made to him, he would have failed to perform an official act. Note that the word “office” in subsec. (3) was interpreted by reference to dictionaries and that it was held that the definition in s. 118 does not apply to this section.

SELLING OR PURCHASING OFFICE.*124. Every one who

- (a) purports to sell or agrees to sell an appointment to or a resignation from an office, or a consent to any such appointment or resignation, or receives or agrees to receive a reward or profit from the purported sale thereof, or
  - (b) purports to purchase or gives a reward or profit for the purported purchase of any such appointment, resignation or consent, or agrees or promises to do so,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 113.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "office" is defined, in part, in s. 118; see notes with respect to that term under that section. Similar offences, relating to attempting to influence appointments to offices, are dealt with in s. 125.

Conviction for this offence bars the accused from contracting with Her Majesty or from receiving any benefit under a contract between Her Majesty and any other person or to hold office under Her Majesty, by virtue of s. 748(3), unless the capacity is restored by the Governor in Council under s. 748(4).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offence of agreeing to sell or purchase a public office, to arrange the resignation from such office or to arrange the appointment of a person to such office. No sale need take place; the agreement to carry out one side of transaction of the proposed buying, selling, purchasing, etc., establishes the criminal liability. This indictable offence carries a five year maximum punishment.

INFLUENCING OR NEGOTIATING APPOINTMENTS OR DEALING IN OFFICES.*125. Every one who

- (a) receives, agrees to receive, gives or procures to be given, directly or indirectly, a reward, advantage or benefit of any kind as consideration for cooperation, assistance or exercise of influence to secure the appointment of any person to an office,
  - (b) solicits, recommends or negotiates in any manner with respect to an appointment to or resignation from an office, in expectation of a direct or indirect reward, advantage or benefit, or
  - (c) keeps without lawful authority, the proof of which lies on him, a place for transacting or negotiating any business relating to
    - (i) the filling of vacancies in offices,
    - (ii) the sale or purchase of offices, or
    - (iii) appointments to or resignations from offices,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 114.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "office" is defined, in part, in s. 118; see notes with respect to that term under that section. Similar offences, relating to purchasing or sale of offices, are dealt with in s. 125.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 125 prohibits attempts to influence or negotiate appointments to, or resignations from, office. Paragraphs (a) and (b) create criminal liability for a person who agrees to receive any benefit and the person who offers such benefit, respectively. The expansive language includes indirect benefits of any kind.

Paragraph (c) prohibits keeping a place for the purpose of business relating to the resignation from or appointments to offices or sales or purchases of offices. This paragraph permits the defence of lawful authority but the accused has the burden of proof of establishing it. This indictable offence has a maximum punishment of five years imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

Proof of corrupt intent is not an element of this offence: R. v. Auger (1942), 78 C.C.C. 136 (Que. Ct. Sess.). Contra: R. v. Melnyk (1938), 71 C.C.C. 362, [1939] 1 D.L.R. 270 (Alta. S.C.).

DISOBEYING A STATUTE / Attorney General of Canada may act.

126. (1) Every one who, without lawful excuse, contravenes an Act of Parliament by wilfully doing anything that it forbids or by wilfully omitting to do anything that it requires to be done is, unless a punishment is expressly provided by law, guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Any proceedings in respect of a contravention of or conspiracy to contravene an Act mentioned in subsection (1), other than this Act, may be instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government. R.S., c. C-34, s. 115; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Conspiracy is defined in s. 465.

The term “wilfully” does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offence of contravening any federal Act by wilfully doing any act prohibited thereby or wilfully failing to do any act required to be done by that Act. Such acts or omissions are punishable by a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years, if the Act does not create its own punishment. Up to two years is the minimum punishment created by the Criminal Code for indictable offences.

The section permits the defence of lawful excuse but, unlike many other sections in this Part of the Criminal Code, the onus of proving the lawful excuse is not shifted to the accused.

For offences covered by subsec. (1), other than those created by the Criminal Code, the federal government may commence prosecution for the offence, or conspiracy to commit the offence.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – An accused’s mistaken belief as to his legal obligations as imposed by the Act of Parliament does not constitute a lawful excuse within the meaning of this subsection: R. v. Parrot (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 539, 27 O.R. (2d) 333 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused loc. cit. C.C.C.

Subsec. (2) – This subsection is intra vires Parliament: R. v. Parrot, supra. [Also see notes under definition of “Attorney General” in s. 2.]

DISOBEYING ORDER OF COURT / Attorney General of Canada may act.

127. (1) Every one who, without lawful excuse, disobeys a lawful order made by a court of justice or by a person or body of persons authorized by any Act to make or give the order, other than an order for the payment of money, is, unless a punishment or other mode of proceeding is expressly provided by law, guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Where the order referred to in subsection (1) was made in proceedings instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of that Government, any proceedings in respect of a contravention of or conspiracy to contravene that order may be instituted and conducted in like manner. R.S., c. C-34, s. 116; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “Act” is defined in s. 2. Conspiracy is defined in s. 465.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

The indictable offence created by this section is disobeying an order of a court or other person or body established by legislation to give orders if there is no other penalty specified for such disobedience. Orders to pay money are specifically excluded from the operation of the section. The maximum punishment for this offence is two years imprisonment.

As with s. 126, the federal government may prosecute if the order disobeyed was made by proceedings commenced by and prosecuted by (or on behalf of) the federal government.

ANNOTATIONS

The words “lawful order” apply to an order of a Court either criminal or civil in nature, such as an order enjoining one party to a matrimonial dispute from molesting the other. Further, the inherent power of the Court to punish for contempt is not a mode of proceeding expressly provided by law within the meaning of the exception so as to bar a conviction under subsec. (1): R. v. Clement (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 449, 23 C.R. (3d) 193, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 468 (7:0).

MISCONDUCT OF OFFICERS EXECUTING PROCESS.

128. Every peace officer or coroner who, being entrusted with the execution of a process, wilfully

(a) misconducts himself in the execution of the process, or

(b) makes a false return to the process,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 117.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. The term “wilfully” does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.). Section 29 imposes certain duties on anyone executing a process. The use of force in enforcement of the law is principally dealt with under s. 25. Personating a peace officer is an offence under s. 130.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 128 is limited in its application to offences committed by peace officers or coroners in connection with their duties to execute process. It is a criminal offence for such persons to wilfully engage in misconduct in the execution of this process or to make a false return to the process. Section 128 creates an indictable offence punishable by a maximum sentence of two years imprisonment.

OFFENCES RELATING TO PUBLIC OR PEACE OFFICER.

129. Every one who

- (a) resists or wilfully obstructs a public officer or peace officer in the execution of his duty or any person lawfully acting in aid of such an officer,
- (b) omits, without reasonable excuse, to assist a public officer or peace officer in the execution of his duty in arresting a person or in preserving the peace, after having reasonable notice that he is required to do so, or
- (c) resists or wilfully obstructs any person in the lawful execution of a process against lands or goods or in making a lawful distress or seizure, is guilty of

- (d) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
- (e) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 118; 1972, c. 13, s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “peace officer” and “public officer” are defined in s. 2. The term “wilfully” does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.) where, however, reference was made to Rice v. Connolly, [1966] 2 Q.B. 414 (C.A.), a case of wilfully obstructing a constable in the execution of his duty. In that case, “wilful” was held to mean not only intentional but “something which is done without lawful excuse”.

Offence of assaulting a peace officer in execution of duty, see s. 270 and see also, notes under that section for further discussion of meaning of “execution of his duty”. The offence of attempting to obstruct justice is in s. 139, of public mischief in s. 140 and escape offences in ss. 144 to 147. Misconduct by a peace officer in executing process is an offence under s. 128. Section 29 imposes certain duties on anyone executing a process. The use of force in enforcement of the law is principally dealt with under s. 25 and see notes under that section. Sections 494 and 495 deal specifically with warrantless arrest powers. Additional duties are imposed and powers given under other provisions of the Code, especially in Parts I and II, respecting breach of the peace and more serious disorders. Personating a peace officer is an offence under s. 130.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offences in this section is, in certain circumstances, liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates an offence of wilfully obstructing or resisting a peace or public officer, or a person assisting that officer in the execution of his duties.

As a precondition to conviction under para. (a), it must be shown that the purpose of the accused's actions was to obstruct the officer and that the officer was engaged in the execution of his duties.

Paragraphs (a) and (c) require proof that the accused either resisted or wilfully obstructed the carrying out of these duties. Section 129(b) dictates that the accused receive reasonable notice that the accused's assistance is required to arrest a person or to preserve the peace and the accused has no reasonable excuse for refusing to assist.

These offences are punishable by summary conviction proceedings or by way of indictment. In the latter case, the maximum punishment is two years imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

Conduct amounting to obstruction of peace officer – Although the accused, a bicyclist, committed no provincial offence by refusing to identify himself to a police officer who had found him committing the summary conviction offence of going through a red light contrary to the Motor-vehicle Act (B.C.), since the officer had no power to arrest the accused under s. 495(2) (applicable to provincial offences by virtue of the Summary Convictions Act (B.C.) except if arrest was necessary to, inter alia, “establish the identity of the person”, the officer by requesting the accused to identify himself was carrying out the duty of enforcing the law and when the accused refused to accede to the officer's request he was obstructing the officer in the performance of his duties: R. v. Moore (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 83, 90 D.L.R. (3d) 112, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 195 (5:2).

However, no charge lay under this section where the accused refused to identify herself in circumstances where the officer had no evidence that she had committed any offence: R. v. Guthrie (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 216, 28 C.R. (3d) 395 (Alta. C.A.).

A person is not guilty of obstructing a peace officer merely by doing nothing, unless there is a legal duty to act arising at common law or by statute. The refusal of a motorist to hand over a radar detecting device could not constitute obstruction. The police officer had the right to arrest the accused if necessary to search him, but the refusal did not amount to obstruction. Willful obstruction of a police officer requires either some positive act, such as concealment of evidence, or an omission to do something which one is legally obliged to do: R. v. Lavin (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 279, 16 C.R. (4th) 112, [1992] R.J.Q. 1843 (C.A.).

An accused could not be convicted of this offence for failing to comply with the order of a police officer to comply with a municipal by-law where the by-law was later held to be ultra vires. Moreover, even if the by-law were valid, since the applicable provincial legislation provided other means of enforcement such as ticketing the offender, and since the accused did not interfere with that procedure, the accused could not be charged with this offence merely for disobeying the officer's order: R. v. Sharma (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 142, 100 D.L.R. (4th) 167, 19 C.R. (4th) 329, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 650.

In R. v. Long, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 313, 8 C.R.N.S. 298 (B.C.C.A.), it was held that the exercise of the right of the prisoner or someone speaking for him to know the reason for arrest does not per se amount to obstruction.

Any privilege which a person placed under arrest may have to resist that arrest where he is not informed of the reason for the arrest does not extend to a friend of the person and will not constitute a defence to a charge of obstructing a police officer where the friend interferes with the arrest: R. v. Saunders (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 243, 38 C.R.N.S. 33 (N.S.C.A.).

In R. v. Westlie (1971), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 315, [1971] 2 W.W.R. 417 (B.C.C.A.) the accused was convicted of wilfully obstructing a peace officer where on several occasions he stopped people in the “skid row” area of the city and pointed out to those people that the officer, who was in plain clothes for the purpose of detecting and arresting beggars, was a police officer. The members of the Court in three separate opinions were of the view that the officer was in the execution of his duty at the time and that the accused's conduct constituted a wilful obstruction of that duty in that it completely frustrated him in the duty in which he was engaged.

It is the purpose of the wilful obstruction, not its result, that goes to the offence and accordingly the fact that the assault did not prevent the peace officer from executing his duty is not a defence: R. v. Tortolano, Kelly and Cadwell (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 562 (Ont. C.A.), overruling R. v. Bakin (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 541 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Section 254(3) places a duty on a motorist to remain in the presence of the officer until he has completed the duties imposed on the officer by the section. Thus, an accused may be convicted of the offence contrary to this section where he flees the scene before the officer has had an opportunity to make a demand that he provide breath samples for analysis in the breathalyzer: R. v. Quist (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 207, 11 Sask. R. 28 (C.A.).

However, in R. v. Gall (1984), 28 M.V.R. 91, 35 Sask. R. 138 (Q.B.) the accused was acquitted of the offence under this section where he took flight after he had registered a "fail" on the roadside screening device and after the officer had given him the breathalyzer demand. The accused's identity was known and the officer had completed his duties under the section. The accused should have been charged with failing or refusing to comply with the breathalyzer demand.

Conduct amounting to resisting – A charge of resisting an officer in the execution of his duty will lie under this section where the accused resists an officer to whom he has been delivered by other officers even when the accused is arrested for a summary conviction offence and is ultimately acquitted of that charge. Although s. 495(1)(b) of the Code limits the power of arrest to where an officer "finds [the accused] committing" the offence the validity of the arrest is to be determined in relation to the circumstances which were apparent to the officer at the time the arrest was made. In any event an officer who receives an accused into custody from other officers is in the execution of his duty pursuant to s. 31(2) of the Code: R. v. Biron (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 513, 30 C.R.N.S. 109 (S.C.C.) (5:3).

Execution of his duty / also see notes under s. 270 – An officer would be in the execution of his duty in forcibly entering private premises where he believes on reasonable and probable grounds that he is confronted with an emergency situation involving the preservation of life of a person in the dwelling-house, or the prevention of serious injury to that person, and if a proper announcement is made prior to entry: R. v. Custer (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 372, [1984] 4 W.W.R. 133 (Sask. C.A.).

There is an implied authority for a person to proceed from the gate to the front door of a house and police officers on premises by invitation may, as well, have a reasonable time to leave following revocation of an invitation to enter. Thereafter, however, in the absence of common law or statutory authority, the officer is no longer in the execution of his duty if he remains on the premises. A mere failure to keep the peace does not of itself empower the police to enter private premises: R. v. Thomas (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 81, 91 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 341 (Nfld. C.A.), affd 78 C.C.C. (3d) 575n (S.C.C.). R. v. Evans (1996), 29 W.C.B. (2d) 276 (S.C.C.).

An officer is not in the execution of his duty where he is seeking to enforce a law which has been repealed even though he honestly and reasonably believes that the law exists: R. v. Houle (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 57, 48 C.R. (3d) 284, [1986] 2 W.W.R. 328 (Alta. C.A.).

A peace officer need not be involved in the investigation of a specific crime, with an identifiable suspect, in order to be "in execution of his duty". The officer will be engaged "in execution of his duty" if, at any given time while on duty, a peace officer's activities fall within the duties and responsibilities of a peace officer described by statute or common law. However, something more than merely being "on duty" or "at work" is required before a peace officer will be "in the execution of his duty". Further, while the accused cannot be convicted unless he knew that the officer was engaged in the execution of a duty, the accused need not know the specifics of that duty in detail: R. v. Noel (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 183, 104 W.A.C. 191 (B.C.C.A.).

Failing to assist officer / para. (b) – It is no defence to a charge under para. (b) that the person whom the officer sought to arrest was the accused's son. The assistance contemplated by para. (b) may be either verbal or physical depending on the circumstances but if the verbal assistance is obviously ineffectual then it is incumbent on the person to whom the request has been made to offer such physical assistance as may be required: R. v. Foster (1981), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 388, 27 C.R. (3d) 187 (Alta Q.B.).

Obstructing execution of process / para. (c) – It is no defence to a charge under this section arising out of the obstructing of a sheriff attempting to levy a distress pursuant to a warrant valid on its face, that the warrant may have been a nullity due to some procedural irregularity: R. v. Fritz (1979), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 285 (B.C.C.A.).

PERSONATING PEACE OFFICER.

130. Every one who

- (a) falsely represents himself to be a peace officer or a public officer, or
  - (b) not being a peace officer or public officer, uses a badge or article of uniform or equipment in a manner that is likely to cause persons to believe that he is a peace officer or a public officer, as the case may be,
- is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 119.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "peace officer" and "public officer" are defined in s. 2. The offence of obstructing a peace officer is in s. 129 and see notes under that section. Misconduct by a peace officer in executing process is an offence under s. 128. Other personation offences are dealt with in ss. 403 to 405.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

The final section in this group of offences creates the summary conviction offence of personating a peace officer. The offence may be committed by a person either by actually representing himself as a peace officer or public officer, or by using a badge or other equipment which is likely to cause others to believe that he is such an officer.

ANNOTATIONS

Mens rea is an essential element of this offence and where a municipality-licensed bailiff mistakenly believes that he is a peace officer, he must be acquitted of impersonation: R. v. Wallace, R. v. Hall, R. v. Leach (1959), 125 C.C.C. 72 (Ont. Mag. Ct.).

The offence under para. (a) of this section requires proof of a misrepresentation as a peace officer or public officer as defined in s. 2, which implicitly means a person vested with powers within Canada. Thus, it would not be an offence under para. (a) for the accused to falsely represent that he was a United States Sheriff's officer: R. v. Saleman (1984), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 526 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Misleading Justice

PERJURY / Idem / Application.

131. (1) Subject to subsection (3), every one commits perjury who, with intent to mislead, makes before a person who is authorized by law to permit it to be made before him a false statement under oath or solemn affirmation, by affidavit, solemn declaration or deposition or orally, knowing that the statement is false.

(2) Subsection (1) applies whether or not a statement referred to in that subsection is made in a judicial proceeding.

(3) Subsection (1) does not apply to a statement referred to in that subsection that is made by a person who is not specially permitted, authorized or required by law to make that statement. R.S., c. C-34, s. 120; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 17.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “statement”, and “judicial proceeding” are defined in s. 118. As to oath and solemn affirmation, see the notes concerning “witness” under s. 118 and ss. 13 to 16 of the Canada Evidence Act. Perjury is created an indictable offence by s. 132, which also prescribes the punishment. The requirement for corroboration is set out in s. 133. The related offence for cases excepted by the proviso in subsec. (3) is found in s. 134. The offence of giving contradictory evidence is in s. 136. The offence of fabricating evidence is in s. 137 and offences relating to affidavits in s. 138. The offence of attempting to obstruct justice is in s. 139. Note that s. 13 of the Canadian Charter of Rights, which otherwise protects against the use of prior testimony, does not apply to prosecutions for the offences of perjury and giving contradictory evidence. Section 5 of the Canada Evidence Act, which also protects against use of prior testimony, does not apply in a prosecution for perjury in the giving of that evidence.

Section 585 provides that no count charging perjury is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the statement was made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the words used, or that it does not expressly negative the words used. However, s. 587(1)(a) provides for the furnishing of particulars in perjury cases.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

SYNOPSIS

This section spells out the parameters of the offence of perjury. It requires proof of several discrete elements, including that the statement made must be false and that the accused knew that it was false. There must also be an intent to mislead. The false statement may have been made under oath or solemn affirmation, orally, by affidavit or solemn declaration. Section 131 has been amended to encompass the contents of two earlier sections: one related to perjury committed in judicial proceedings, and the other to extra-judicial proceedings. Section 131(2) removes this distinction by stating that the offence may be committed regardless of whether the false statement was made in a judicial proceeding. Another element of the offence is that the person before whom the statement is sworn, affirmed or declared must be authorized to receive such statements, and includes persons such as a judge at trial, a commissioner for the taking of oaths and a notary public.

Subsection (3) excludes liability under this section if the person making the false statement was not specially authorized or required by law to make a statement.

ANNOTATIONS

Relationship to other offences – It would appear that the effect of the amendments to this section and former s. 122 are to create a single offence of perjury which may be committed either by making false statements in a judicial proceeding (former s. 120) or in extrajudicial proceedings (former s. 122). This would overcome the problems encountered in cases such as R. v. Wilson (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 383, [1977] 2 W.W.R. 520 (Alta. C.A.) and R. v. Hewson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 407 (Ont. C.A.), where the accused who swore a false affidavit was held to have been improperly charged with the former s. 122 offence since the affidavit, being intended for use in judicial proceedings, civil or criminal, the offence, if any, was perjury as defined by the former s. 120.

Elements of offence generally – In R. v. Calder (1960), 129 C.C.C. 202, [1960] S.C.R. 892 (9:0), Cartwright J. summarized the elements of this offence as requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the evidence specified in the indictment was false in fact, that the accused when he gave it knew that it was false, and that he gave it with intent to mislead the court. Judson J. pointed out that where the most that can be found against the accused is that evidence he gave was in error then this affords no basis for the inference of the requisite knowledge and intent.

Mere carelessness or even recklessness in giving testimony on collateral matters, without any intent to mislead and give false evidence, does not amount to the offence of perjury: Besner v. The Queen (1975), 33 C.R.N.S. 122 (Que. C.A.).

Where the accused had given a complete statement to the police which he confirmed and then gave evidence at the preliminary inquiry that he knew to be false when he testified that he did not remember either being beaten or seeing at that time the two men who were charged with assaulting him, the argument that he could not be said to have had any intent to mislead the Court when there was no other evidence before it against which his failure of recollection could be measured was rejected. It was held that those non-recollections were “evidence” as defined under this Part of the Criminal Code, and the fact that a Court could or would not be misled does not alone preclude a finding that the accused intended to mislead it, for in the absence of other evidence as to the accused’s intention the inference could properly be drawn that in so doing what he did he intended to mislead the Court: Wolf v. The Queen (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 425, 27 C.R.N.S. 150 (S.C.C.) (9:0).

For there to be perjury, there has to be more than a deliberate false statement. The statement must also have been made with intent to mislead. In an exceptional case, an accused may be able to show that while he deliberately lied, he did not do so with intent to mislead: R. v. Hebert (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 59, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 233, 22 Q.A.C. 101.

In assessing whether or not perjury has occurred, the trier of fact must have all of the evidence of the accused bearing on the impugned testimony. However, an outright confession to prior perjury in testimony given several weeks earlier in the same proceeding cannot qualify as an explanatory statement to show that there was no intent to mislead: R. v. Zazulak (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 303, [1993] 8 W.W.R. 614, 12 Alta. L.R. (3d) 125 (C.A.), affd [1994] 25 S.C.R. 5n, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 415n, [1994] 5 W.W.R. 457.

Proof that testimony false – In Farris v. The Queen, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 245, [1965] 2 O.R. 396 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that it is no defence if the accused’s statement is literally true if he well knew and intended that the statement should be taken in another sense.

Proof of record – Proof of the record of proceedings in a civil action was made by exemplification, relying on s. 23 of the Canada Evidence Act. While s. 28 of the Canada Evidence Act requires at least 7 days notice where a “copy” of the record is produced, that requirement does not apply to exemplifications, being a “certified transcript under the great seal or under the seal of a particular court”: R. v. Kobold (1927), 48 C.C.C. 290, [1927] 3 W.W.R. 294, 37 Man. L.R. 37 (C.A.). In R. v. Tatomir (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 69 Alta. L.R. (2d) 305 (C.A.), the court considered the admissibility of a certified copy of a driving prohibition to prove an offence under s. 259. The court held that, at common law, judicial documents could be proved by the production of the original record or an exemplification under the seal of the court to which the record belongs without notice.

Requirement of oath or solemn affirmation – A witness who takes a certain form of oath, without objection, in the form generally administered to persons of his faith, agreeing that it binds his conscience, cannot thereafter be heard to say that he was not sworn: Shajoo Ram v. The King (No. 2) (1915), 25 C.C.C. 69, 51 S.C.R. 392, 26 D.L.R. 267 (5:0).

There is no statutory requirement as to the method of proof of the fact of a witness being sworn and thus, evidence of the court reporter and the instructing police officer that they both heard the oath being administered to the accused was sufficient proof of the administration of the oath. That the proof might have been made by other or different means, such as by the official record of the court or the testimony of the official who administered the oath, did not render the evidence of these witnesses inadmissible: R. v. Pfahler, [1963] 2 C.C.C. 289 (Ont. C.A.).

Effect of s. 5 of Canada Evidence Act – Where the accused had testified on a trial under the protection of s. 5 of the Canada Evidence Act that certain statements he had made at an earlier inquest and preliminary inquiry were false, his trial evidence could not later be used on prosecution for perjury in respect of his testimony at the inquest and preliminary inquiry. The provision in s. 5 applies only to perjury in the giving of “that evidence”, i.e., the evidence which it is alleged is false: R. v. Kruchkovski (1925), 43 C.C.C. 299, [1925] 2 D.L.R. 167, [1925] 1 W.W.R. 426 (Sask. C.A.).

Double jeopardy / also see notes under s. 613 – As long as it does not amount to a retrial of the original offence and particularly where the Crown is able to rely upon his subsequent contrary testimony an acquitted accused may be tried for his prior perjured denial of his commission of the original offence: R. v. Gushue (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 189, 35 C.R.N.S. 304 (Ont. C.A.), affd 50 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 30 N.R. 204 (S.C.C.) (7:0) holding that this principle applies to a prosecution under s. 124 [now s. 136] as well. Also see Grdic v. The Queen (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 46 C.R. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.), noted under s. 613, infra.

Permitted, authorized or required by law (subsec. (3)) / also see notes under s. 134 – An affidavit which the legislator has not permitted, authorized or required, in short, an affidavit which has no legal meaning or scope is exempted from the perjury offence: R. v. Boisjoly (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 309, [1972] S.C.R. 42, 23 D.L.R. (3d) 190 (5:0). [Considering former s. 122 of R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34 which made it an offence for a person being permitted, authorized or required by law to make a statement by affidavit, knowing it to be a false statement.]

PUNISHMENT.

132. Every one who commits perjury is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years, but if a person commits perjury to procure the conviction of another person for an offence punishable by death, the person who commits perjury is liable to a maximum term of imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 121; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 17.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence of perjury is defined in s. 131. The requirement for corroboration is set out in s. 133. As to related offences, see notes under s. 131. The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

SYNOPSIS

Section 132 states the punishment for the indictable offence of perjury. In any case in which the perjury is committed to convict another for an offence punishable by death (as is still possible for a few offences under the National Defence Act), the accused may be imprisoned for life. In any other perjury case, the maximum sentence is 14 years.

CORROBORATION.

133. No person shall be convicted of an offence under section 132 on the evidence of only one witness unless the evidence of that witness is corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused. R.S., c. C-34, s. 122; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 17.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence of perjury is defined in s. 131 and punishment is set out in s. 132. For related offences, see notes under s. 131.

SYNOPSIS

This section deals with an evidentiary requirement in a perjury prosecution. Before an accused may be convicted of perjury, there must be corroboration of a material particular if there is only one witness to the offence giving evidence.

ANNOTATIONS

Application to party to offence – Although this section also applies to the offence of subornation of perjury as laid down under s. 21, where the charge is inciting [now counselling] to commit perjury that was not in fact committed this section does not apply to the proof of the lesser s. 464 offence: R. v. Kyling (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 79, 15 D.L.R. (3d) 351 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

Evidence amounting to corroboration – While corroboration may be required on a charge of suborning perjury, it is only the perjury that requires corroboration not the accused's participation in the perjury and his knowledge of the falsity of the witness' evidence: R. v. Doz (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 200, 52 A.R. 321 (C.A.).

There is a conflict in the authorities as to what element of the offence must be corroborated. Thus, it was held in R. v. Nash (1914), 23 C.C.C. 38, 17 D.L.R. 725, 7 Alta. L.R. 449 (C.A.), that it was sufficient to show corroboration of the element of the offence that the testimony was false. R. v. Pattyson (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 174, [1973] 5 W.W.R. 203 (Sask. C.A.), seems to be to the same effect. However, in Boisjoly v. The Queen (1970), 11 C.R.N.S. 265 (Que. C.A.), it was held that there must be corroboration of the accused's knowledge of the falsity of the evidence.

While corroboration is required of a material particular it need not be with respect to a contested issue: R. v. Van Straten (1994), 89 C.C.C. (3d) 470, 149 A.R. 259, 63 W.A.C. 259 (C.A.).

In R. v. B.(G.) (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 3, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 577, 77 C.R. (3d) 327 (5:0), the court considered the effect of now repealed s. 586, which provided that no person shall be convicted on the unsworn evidence of a child "unless the evidence of the child is corroborated in a material particular by evidence that implicates the accused". The wording is thus almost identical to this section. It was there held that the requirement that the corroborating evidence implicate the accused requires only that the evidence confirm, in some material particular, the story of the witness giving the evidence which required corroboration. The confirming evidence need not also itself implicate the accused.

However, in R. v. Thind (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 301 (B.C.C.A.) the court refused to apply R. v. B. (G.), supra, and held that, to be capable of corroboration under this section, the evidence from the other witness must be in contradiction to what has been sworn to by the accused in the previous proceeding. The requirement of more than one witness must be as to the falsity of the statement alleged to be perjured and it is not sufficient that the evidence simply confirms the reliability or trustworthiness of the other prosecution witness. Similarly: R. v. Evans (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 369, 93 W.A.C. 186, 102 Man. R. (2d) 186 (C.A.).

On the trial of two accused on a charge of perjury arising out of testimony given at a judicial inquiry a statement given by one accused to the police several months before the inquiry is capable of constituting corroboration against his co-accused if it was made in furtherance of a conspiracy to hide the truth with respect to a matter dealt with at the inquiry even if it was not made in furtherance of a conspiracy to testify falsely at the inquiry: R. v. Zappia and Luppino (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 448 (Ont. C.A.).

Corroboration not required – As indicated above, corroboration is not required on a charge contrary to s. 464, counselling perjury which is not in fact committed: R. v. Kyling, supra. Nor is it required on a charge of conspiracy to commit perjury: R. v. Ferguson and Petrie, [1969] 1 C.C.C. 353 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Bouchard (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 338, 26 C.R. (3d) 178 (Man. C.A.) the Court was divided as to whether corroboration was required where the perjury charge was proved by the accused's own confession to a police officer that he had lied at the original trial. O'Sullivan, J.A., was of the view that this section nevertheless required corroboration. Matas, J.A., allowed the accused's appeal on another ground and therefore did not consider the point. Monnin, J.A., dissenting, was of the view that this section had no application in such circumstances.

The falsity of a statement by an accused as to his criminal record may be proved by production of a certificate of a fingerprint examiner as authorized by s. 667. Proof in such a manner must be considered an exception to the corroboration requirements of this section: R. v. Predy (1983), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 379 (Alta. C.A.).

IDEM / Application.

134. (1) Subject to subsection (2), every one who, not being specially permitted, authorized or required by law to make a statement under oath or solemn affirmation, makes such a statement, by affidavit, solemn declaration or deposition or orally before a person who is authorized by law to permit it to be made before him, knowing that the statement is false, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a statement referred to in that subsection that is made in the course of a criminal investigation. 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 6; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 17.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "statement" is defined in s. 118. As to oath and solemn affirmation, see the notes concerning "witness" under s. 118 and ss. 13 to 16 of the Canada Evidence Act. This section covers most of the circumstances excepted from the perjury offence by s. 131(3). Other related offences are as follows: The offence of giving contradictory evidence is in s. 136. The offence of fabricating evidence is in s. 137 and other offences relating to affidavits in s. 138. The offence of attempting to obstruct justice is in s. 139. Note that subsec. (2), while exempting from liability statements made in the course of a criminal investigation, would not protect against conduct amounting to public mischief under s. 140. The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Section 585 provides that no count charging the making of a false statement is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the statement was made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the words used, or that it does not expressly negative the words used. However, s. 587(1)(a) provides for the furnishing of particulars in such cases.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates an offence covering the conduct excepted from the main offence of perjury by s. 131(3). This summary conviction offence prohibits the making of false statements before a person authorized to receive statements when the accused was not specially required or authorized to make the statement under oath or affirmation. Like s. 131, this section applies to false statements made under oath or solemn affirmation orally, by affidavit or solemn declaration. While there is a requirement that the accused know that the statement is false, there is no requirement of an intent to mislead.

This section also contains an exception which is found in subsec. (2) which removes from its ambit statements made during a criminal investigation.

ANNOTATIONS

Permitted, authorized or required by law – An affidavit which the legislator has not permitted, authorized or required, in short, an affidavit which has no legal meaning or scope is one which is not permitted, authorized or required by law: R. v. Boisjoly (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 309, [1972] S.C.R. 42, 23 D.L.R. (3d) 190 (5:0). [Considering former s. 122 of R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34, which made it an offence for a person being permitted, authorized or required by law to make a statement by affidavit, knowing it to be a false statement.]

There being no law which specifically required or authorized the use of an affidavit on a bail review hearing, until that affidavit was actually filed or used at the bail review, it had no legal significance and was thus not one permitted, authorized or required by law: R. v. Hewson (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 407 (Ont. C.A.) (considering former s. 122).

Authorized by law to permit it to be made – Where the patent of the commissioner before whom the affidavits were sworn was limited to work in connection with a particular law firm and that firm had nothing whatever to do with the proceedings in which those affidavits were sworn then the commissioner had no authorization to take the oath of the accused and the offence is not made out: R. v. Edwards (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 112, 5 O.R. (2d) 599 (C.A.) [considering former s. 122 of R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34 which contained a similar phrase].

WITNESS GIVING CONTRADICTIONARY EVIDENCE / Definition of "evidence" / Proof of former trial / Consent required.

136. (1) Every one who, being a witness in a judicial proceeding, gives evidence with respect to any matter of fact or knowledge and who subsequently, in a judicial proceeding, gives evidence that is contrary to his previous evidence is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years, whether or not the prior or later evidence or either is true, but no person shall be convicted under this section unless the court, judge or provincial court judge, as the case may be, is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused, in giving evidence in either of the judicial proceedings, intended to mislead.

(2) Notwithstanding the definition "evidence" in section 118, "evidence", for the purposes of this section, does not include evidence that is not material.

(2.1) Where a person is charged with an offence under this section, a certificate specifying with reasonable particularity the proceeding in which that person is alleged to have given the evidence in respect of which the offence is charged, is evidence that it was given in a judicial proceeding, without proof of the signature or official character of the person by whom the certificate purports to be signed if it purports to be signed by the clerk of the court or other official having the custody of the record of that proceeding or by his lawful deputy.

(3) No proceedings shall be instituted under this section without the consent of the Attorney General. R.S., c. C-34, s. 124; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 18.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “witness”, and “judicial proceeding” are defined in s. 118. “Attorney General” is defined in s. 2. Note that s. 13 of the Canadian Charter of Rights, which otherwise protects against the use of prior testimony, does not apply to prosecutions for the offences of perjury and giving contradictory evidence. Section 5 of the Canada Evidence Act, which also protects against use of prior testimony, does not apply in a prosecution for perjury in the giving of that evidence. Thus, statements made under the protection of s. 5 could not be used in a prosecution under this section. Related offences are found in: s. 131, perjury; s. 134, false statements under oath; s. 137, fabricating evidence; s. 138, offences relating to affidavits; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 140, public mischief.

Section 585 provides that no count charging the making of a false statement is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the statement was made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the words used, or that it does not expressly negative the words used. However, s. 587(1)(a) provides for the furnishing of particulars in such cases. These provisions may apply to the charging of the offence under this section. Section 583(h) provides that a count is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the consent has been obtained. As to proof of that consent, see notes under that section.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

Section 136 is limited to witnesses who give evidence in a judicial proceeding and then give contradictory evidence in a judicial proceeding. The issue on which the impugned evidence is given may be either about facts or knowledge. It is not necessary to prove which of the contradictory statements is false. However, it is an element of the offence that the accused intended to mislead by giving the evidence in either of the judicial proceedings. The seriousness of this indictable offence is reflected in its maximum penalty of 14 years.

Subsection (2) narrows the definition of evidence which would otherwise apply in this Part (see s. 118) by excluding evidence which is not material.

The proof of this offence is facilitated by subsec. (2.1) which permits the use of a certificate signed by a court clerk or other court official who has control of the record. The certificate can be used as proof that the evidence was given in a judicial proceeding, and the signature of the official character of the person signing need not be proved.

The availability of this section is further limited by a prerequisite under subsec. (3) that the Attorney General consent to all prosecutions under this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence – Motive and intention are two separate matters and once the intention to mislead is established, even though it may have been for the highest motive, the offence, except for raising the successful defence of duress, is established: R. v. Falkenberg (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 562 (Ont. Co. Ct.), revd on other grounds 16 C.C.C. (2d) 525 (C.A.), infra.

Double jeopardy / Also see notes under ss. 131 and 613 – As long as it does not amount to a retrial of the original offence an acquitted accused may be tried under this section for his prior perjured denial of his commission of the original offence: Gushue v. The Queen (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 417, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 798 (7:0).

Consent of Attorney General / Also see notes under s. 583(1)(h) – A count for an offence for which the statutory consent of the Attorney-General to institute proceedings has been obtained cannot be amended if the amended count alleges another offence: R. v. Falkenberg (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 525, 25 C.R.N.S. 374 (Ont. C.A.), quashing his conviction in 13 C.C.C. (2d) 562, supra.

FABRICATING EVIDENCE.

137. Every one who, with intent to mislead, fabricates anything with intent that it shall be used as evidence in a judicial proceeding, existing or proposed, by any means other than perjury or incitement to perjury is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 125.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "judicial proceeding" is defined in s. 118. Perjury is defined by s. 131. "Incite" is within the definition of "counsel" in s. 22(3). By s. 22(1), a person is party to the offence counselled.

Related offences are found in s. 131, perjury; s. 134, false statements under oath; s. 136, giving contradictory evidence; s. 138, offences relating to affidavits; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 140, public mischief.

Section 585 provides that no count charging the fabricating of evidence is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the statement was made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the evidence fabricated, or that it does not expressly negative the words used. However, s. 587(1)(a) provides for the furnishing of particulars in such cases.

Note that s. 25(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 provides, in effect, that a document, such as one produced under subsec. (2.1), is admissible in evidence and the fact is deemed to be established in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

ANNOTATIONS

An accused could not be convicted of this offence, by reason of her having signed notes alleging that she had been kidnapped by a certain person, since the notes would not be admissible in evidence at the trial of the person alleged to have committed the kidnapping: R. v. Boyko (1945), 83 C.C.C. 295, [1945] 2 D.L.R. 568, [1945] 1 W.W.R. 521 (Sask. C.A.).

OFFENCES RELATING TO AFFIDAVITS.

- (a) signs a writing that purports to be an affidavit or statutory declaration and to have been sworn or declared before him when the writing was not so sworn or declared or when he knows that he has no authority to administer the oath or declaration,
  - (b) uses or offers for use any writing purporting to be an affidavit or statutory declaration that he knows was not sworn or declared, as the case may be, by the affiant or declarant or before a person authorized in that behalf, or
  - (c) signs as affiant or declarant a writing that purports to be an affidavit or statutory declaration and to have been sworn or declared by him, as the case may be, when the writing was not so sworn or declared,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 126.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 15 of the Canada Evidence Act provides for the form of solemn affirmation in the case of an affidavit or deposition. No particular form of oath is prescribed by law and see notes under "witness" in s. 118. A form of statutory declaration under the Canada Evidence Act is prescribed by s. 41 of that Act, but reference may also be made to the various provincial Evidence Acts.

Related offences are found in s. 131, perjury; s. 134, false statements under oath; s. 136, giving contradictory evidence; s. 137, fabricating evidence; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 140, public mischief.

Section 585 provides that no count charging the making of a false oath is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the oath was taken, or the subject of the inquiry. However, s. 587(1)(a) provides for the furnishing of particulars in such cases.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates offences relating to what may be referred to generally as “phoney affidavits” and it prohibits the use of such documents. It prohibits the accused, who may be either the affiant or the supposed witness, from signing a document saying that it is an affidavit or statutory declaration when the document was not so sworn or declared or if the accused knows that he is without authority to administer the oath or declaration. It also prohibits the use or offer for use of such documents if the person offering the document knows that the writing was not properly sworn or declared. It is not necessary to prove that the contents of such writings is false, only that it is not what it appears to be, namely a properly sworn or declared document.

The maximum punishment for this indictable offence is two years.

ANNOTATIONS

Para. (a) – The offence contrary to this paragraph requires proof of mens rea and the accused’s mistaken belief as to the formalities requisite to constitute the ceremony of swearing and justify his completing the jurat is a defence to the charge: R. v. Chow (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 143, [1978] 3 W.W.R. 767 (Sask. C.A.).

Para. (b) – The word “uses” in this paragraph simply means “employs for a purpose” and the offence contrary to this paragraph does not require proof that the use of the affidavit had as its purpose the misleading of justice. A use intended to bring about a result, which would adversely affect another’s legal position was clearly within this paragraph. Finally, making use of a photocopy of the sham affidavit was using the original within the meaning of this paragraph: R. v. Stevenson and McLean (1980), 57 C.C.C. 526, 19 C.R. (3d) 74 (Ont. C.A.).

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE / Idem / Idem.

139. (1) Every one who wilfully attempts in any manner to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice in a judicial proceeding,

(a) by indemnifying or agreeing to indemnify a surety, in any way and either in whole or in part, or

(b) where he is a surety, by accepting or agreeing to accept a fee or any form of indemnity whether in whole or in part from or in respect of a person who is released or is to be released from custody,

is guilty of

(c) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or

(d) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who wilfully attempts in any manner other than a manner described in subsection (1) to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(3) Without restricting the generality of subsection (2), every one shall be deemed wilfully to attempt to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice who in a judicial proceeding, existing or proposed,

- (a) dissuades or attempts to dissuade a person by threats, bribes or other corrupt means from giving evidence;
- (b) influences or attempts to influence by threats, bribes or other corrupt means a person in his conduct as a juror; or
- (c) accepts or obtains, agrees to accept or attempts to obtain a bribe or other corrupt consideration to abstain from giving evidence, or to do or to refrain from doing anything as a juror. R.S., c. C-34, s. 127; R.S., c. 2 (2nd Supp.), s. 3; 1972, c. 13, s. 8.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "judicial proceeding" is defined in s. 118. Several provisions of the Criminal Code refer to sureties, see ss. 515, 679, 810, 816, 817. The responsibilities of sureties and procedure for rendering the accused into custody by his sureties are dealt with in ss. 762 to 773. The term "wilfully" does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.). Section 649, which prohibits disclosure of jury proceedings, provides an exemption for the purposes of an investigation of an alleged offence under subsec. (2) of this section in relation to a juror, and for giving evidence in relation to such offence.

Related offences are as follows: s. 129, obstructing peace officer; s. 130, personation of peace officer; s. 131, perjury; s. 136, giving contradictory evidence; s. 137, fabricating evidence; s. 140, public mischief; s. 141, compounding indictable offence; s. 143, advertising reward and immunity. Also, see notes respecting contempt of court under ss. 9 and 10.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction on the charge contrary to subsec. (1) then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Where the Crown proceeds by way of indictment then the accused has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

An accused charged with the offence under subsec. (2) has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2) and release pending trial is governed by s. 515.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183.

SYNOPSIS

Section 139 spells out the elements of the offence of attempting to obstruct justice.

The first group of offences relates to sureties and is found in subsec. (1). It prohibits anyone from indemnifying a surety (or agreeing to do so) for any loss arising from acting as surety ("signing bail") and also prohibits a surety from accepting or agreeing to accept an offer of a fee for so acting. The requisite intention is that the accused wilfully attempted to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice in a judicial proceeding. This offence can be prosecuted by way of summary conviction or by way of indictment, and, in the latter case, is punishable by two years imprisonment.

Subsection (2) creates the offence of attempting to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice in a manner apart from those described in s. 139(1). The actions of the accused must be proven to be wilful. The maximum sentence for this indictable offence is 10 years.

Section 139(3) provides a number of examples of how the offence created by subsec. (2) may be committed in the context of a judicial proceeding, either existing or proposed. This section is merely illustrative not exhaustive.

ANNOTATIONS

Course of justice – In R. v. Hoggarth (1957), 119 C.C.C. 234, 25 C.R. 174 (B.C.C.A.), a conviction for attempting to obstruct the course of justice was quashed. The court did not undertake to define “the course of justice” but held that, as no investigation of a possible crime was under way at the time nor had any charge been laid, there was nothing in the circumstances surrounding the making of the false statement in question that fell within that term.

The expression “the course of justice” in subsec. (2) includes judicial proceedings existing or proposed but is not limited to such proceedings. The offence under this subsection also includes attempts by a person to obstruct, prevent or defeat a prosecution which he contemplates may take place, notwithstanding that no decision to prosecute has been made: R. v. Spezzano (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 87, 76 D.L.R. (3d) 160 (Ont. C.A.).

The term “the course of justice” includes the investigatory stage. The term is, as well, applicable to disciplinary proceedings of the law society. The course of justice includes all the judicial proceedings defined in s. 118. Any decision-making body would come within the phrase “the course of justice” if it was a body which judged; its authority to do so was derived from a statute; and the body, by the terms of its empowering statute, was required to act in a judicial manner: R. v. Wijesinha, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 422, 100 C.C.C. (3d) 410, 42 C.R. (4th) 1.

Mens rea of offence – In R. v. Savinkoff, [1963] 3 C.C.C. 163, 39 C.R. 306 (B.C.C.A.), the accused was charged under this section with attempting to persuade other persons to make statements connected with other offences. There was no proof that the accused knew the statements he was suggesting were false. It was held (2:1) that mens rea was a necessary element requiring proof of the knowledge of the falsity of the statement.

It is no defence that the accused believed that the evidence that he sought to suppress was false evidence: R. v. Walker (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 270, 17 C.R.N.S. 374 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

However, where the accused approached a witness who had testified against his friend and told the witness he should tell the truth, he was acquitted. The court found that his purpose was to protest an injustice, not to obstruct justice: R. v. Belliveau (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 243, 21 N.B.R. (2d) 361 (S.C. App. Div.).

Attempts in any manner (subsec. (2)) – In R. v. Balsdon, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 164, [1967] 2 O.R. 653 (Ont. Co. Ct.), it was held, following the two doctrines nemo tenetur seipsum accusare – no man can be compelled to incriminate himself – and nemo tenetur prodere seipsum – no one is bound to betray himself, that, although attempts at service of warrants of committal following convictions for summary conviction offences is a part of the course of justice, deliberate misidentification of himself by the accused to police officers endeavouring to serve him is not obstruction of justice.

In R. v. Spezzano, supra, the court, without passing on the correctness of R. v. Balsdon, supra, distinguished it on the basis that whatever protection the common law right to remain silent confers on a person, it will not protect him when he not only denies his identity but gives the police a false name in order to protect himself. The court, however, pointed out that it is not every false statement to the police, such as a false denial of guilt, which will be capable of supporting a charge under this provision.

It would seem that subsec. (2) is wide enough to include a threat by an accused to cause bodily harm to the complainant who was present in court, notwithstanding at the time of the threat the accused had been convicted and sentenced for the offence which the complainant had initially reported: R. v. Vermette (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 97, [1983] 4 W.W.R. 707 (Alta. C.A.), affd on other grounds 32 C.C.C. (3d) 519, 57 C.R. (3d) 340, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 577.

A charge under this subsection could be made out if the accused approached a police officer with a request that certain charges not be laid in exchange for a payment to the officer, even if the officer did not in fact attempt to obstruct justice: Rousseau v. The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 21 D.L.R. (4th) 148, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 38 (7:0).

Any attempt to pay compensation in any form to a witness that has, as its purpose, a direct tendency to influence a witness not to give evidence in a judicial proceeding, irrespective of the motive for doing so, is a corrupt attempt to obstruct justice. Similarly, an attempt to pay compensation to the complainant in order to influence the proceeding by, for example, persuading the Crown to withdraw the charge is capable of amounting to an offence. The offence would not, however, cover a bona fide negotiation for the withholding, withdrawal or reduction of a given charge that is conducted with a law officer of the Crown. Nor would honestly approaching a witness who has made a false or mistaken statement and by reasoned arguments supported by material facts, trying to dissuade him from giving perjured or erroneous testimony constitute an offence: R. v. Kotch (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 132 (Alta. C.A.). [Also, note s. 141(2).]

Subsection (2) of this section, although framed in the language of an attempt, in fact creates a substantive offence, the gist of which is the doing of an act which has a tendency to prevent or obstruct the course of justice and which is done for that purpose: R. v. May (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 257 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [1984] 2 S.C.R. viii, 56 N.R. 239n. It is not necessary to establish that the tendency materialized. Thus, an accused who sent a letter from jail requesting his brother to intimidate a witness could be convicted of this offence although the letter was intercepted by the jail authorities and never reached the brother. The acts of the accused went beyond an intention or even expression of an intention: R. v. Graham (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 210 (Ont. C.A.), affd 38 C.C.C. (3d) 574 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

An attempt to dissuade someone from reporting an incident to the police may amount to an obstruction of justice: R. v. Whalen (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 217 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

A lawyer is under a duty not to mislead the court and may be convicted of this offence where he participates in the client's deception by arranging for the client's friend to attend in court to answer a charge against the client, who had previously given the friend's name to the police as his own upon arrest: R. v. Doz (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 200, 52 A.R. 321 (C.A.).

The offence of attempting to obstruct justice requires the specific intention to obstruct justice. Thus, in the case of a charge based on an attempt by the accused to obtain a false affidavit from a client, the accused's honest belief that the affidavit was true would constitute a defence: R. v. Charbonneau (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 49, 46 Q.A.C. 1 (C.A.).

The gravamen of the offence under subsec. (2) is the wilful attempt to obstruct justice and it does not matter that the attempt was not only unsuccessful but could not have succeeded. Thus, it was no defence that the accused attempted to procure a witness to give false evidence on an issue which in law was irrelevant: R. v. Hearn (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 376, 75 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 13 (Nfld. C.A.), affd 53 C.C.C. (3d) 352n, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 1180, 80 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 199.

Witness at preliminary inquiry – Where the procedure under s. 545 has been resorted to by the justice presiding at a preliminary inquiry then a charge will not lie under this section for the same conduct – the witness' refusal to be sworn and testify. However, if the justice did not act under s. 545 or if the conduct were repeated after an initial resort to s. 545, then a charge under this section or of contempt of court would lie: R. v. Mercer (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 347, 65 C.R. (3d) 275, 89 A.R. 24 (C.A.).

Procedure and evidence – Statements by the accused police officers, which were part of a plan to cover up the commission of a criminal offence by one of them, were part of the actus reus of the offence under this section and need not be proved voluntary on a voir dire: R. v. Hanneson (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 467, 71 C.R. (3d) 249, 34 O.A.C. 352 (C.A.).

The words "attempts in any manner" in subsec. (2) include perjury as a means of committing this offence notwithstanding that by charging the accused with this offence rather than the offence under s. 131 the requirement of corroboration (s. 133) is avoided. Under this section, corroboration is not required either at law or as a matter of practice, although the conduct involves an allegation of perjury: R. v. Simon (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 510 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Moore (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 202, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 511 (B.C.C.A.).

PUBLIC MISCHIEF / Punishment.

140. (1) Every one commits public mischief who, with intent to mislead, causes a peace officer to enter on or continue an investigation by

- (a) making a false statement that accuses some other person of having committed an offence;
- (b) doing anything intended to cause some other person to be suspected of having committed an offence that the other person has not committed, or to divert suspicion from himself;
- (c) reporting that an offence has been committed when it has not been committed; or
- (d) reporting or in any other way making it known or causing it to be made known that he or some other person has died when he or that other person has not died.

(2) Every one who commits public mischief

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 128; 1972, c. 13, s. 8; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “statement” is defined in s. 118. The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. Section 585 provides that no count charging the making of a false statement is insufficient by reason only that it does not state the nature of the authority of the tribunal before which the statement was made, or the subject of the inquiry, or the words used, or that it does not expressly negative the truth of the words used. However, s. 587(1)(a) provides for the furnishing of particulars in such cases.

Related offences are as follows: s. 129, obstructing peace officer; s. 130, personation of peace officer; s. 137, fabricating evidence; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 141, compounding indictable offence; s. 143, advertising reward and immunity; s. 403, personation. This offence is to be contrasted to the property offences also referred to as mischief, in s. 430.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Where the Crown proceeds by way of indictment then the accused has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offence of public mischief which involves causing peace officers to begin, or to continue an investigation with the intention of misleading them. The ways in which the offence may be committed are specified in subsec. (1). Among these are falsely accusing another of committing a criminal offence or falsely reporting that an offence has occurred. When public mischief is committed by either of these methods, the false report by the accused is the actus reus of the offence.

This offence is punishable by summary conviction or by way of indictment. If prosecuted by way of indictment, the maximum punishment is five years.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of "offence" – An "offence" referred to in this section is not restricted to only a Criminal Code offence but pertains to any breach of the law whether federal, provincial or otherwise that involves penal sanction: R. v. Howard (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 211, 18 C.R.N.S. 395 (Ont. C.A.).

Attempt to commit offence – On a charge of public mischief the accused may be convicted of an attempt to commit the offence where because the officer did not believe the accused he did not embark upon an investigation and was not misled: R. v. Whalen (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 557 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

Evidence – The statement by the accused to the police reporting the offence is the actus reus of the offence contrary to para. (c) and no voir dire is required to determine the voluntariness of such a statement: R. v. Stapleton (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 231, 26 C.R. (3d) 361, 134 D.L.R. (3d) 239 (Ont. C.A.).

A similar result was reached in considering a statement taken from a young person, it being held that the special conditions for taking of statements as prescribed by s. 56 of the Young Offenders Act were intended to apply only to young persons accused of committing crimes and not to a young person who provided a statement as a victim of the offence. Thus, on a charge under this section based on such a statement, the Crown need not prove compliance with s. 56. As in the case of an adult, the complaint is the actus reus of the offence and admissible without proof of voluntariness: R. v. J.(J.) (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 65 C.R. (3d) 371 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 101 N.R. 231n.

COMPOUNDING INDICTABLE OFFENCE / Exception for diversion agreements.

141. (1) Every one who asks for or obtains or agrees to receive or obtain any valuable consideration for himself or any other person by agreeing to compound or conceal an indictable offence is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) No offence is committed under subsection (1) where valuable consideration is received or obtained or is to be received or obtained under an agreement for compensation or restitution or personal services that is

(a) entered into with the consent of the Attorney General; or

(b) made as part of a program, approved by the Attorney General, to divert persons charged with indictable offences from criminal proceedings. R.S., c. C-34, s. 129; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 19.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "Attorney General" is defined in s. 2. An "indictable offence" would include a Crown option offence by virtue of s. 34 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term "compound" is not defined but may be taken to refer to the element of the common law offence of compounding a felony being an agreement not to prosecute or inform on a person who has committed an offence. See R. v. Burgess (1885), 15 Cox, C.C. 779 (C.A.). The reference to programmes in subsec. (2) presumably refers to restitution orders under s. 726 to 727.8, s. 737(2), a fine option programme under s. 718.1 and alternative measures programmes under s. 4 of the Young Offenders Act.

Related offences are as follows: s. 23, accessory after the fact; s. 137, fabricating evidence; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 140, public mischief; s. 142, corruptly taking reward; s. 143, advertising reward and immunity; s. 346, extortion. In addition it should be noted that courts will on occasion stay proceedings as an abuse of process where it is shown that the criminal proceedings were launched to collect a debt or realize on a civil claim, or following a threat to swear out an information to obtain payment of a debt. See R. v. Leroux (1928), 50 C.C.C. 52 (Ont. C.A.). Also see notes following s. 579.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 141(1) creates an indictable offence applicable if a person asks for, obtains, or agrees to accept any form of valuable consideration in exchange for agreeing to compound or conceal an indictable offence. The maximum sentence for this offence is two years.

Subsection (2) provides two exceptions to the liability which would otherwise result from subsec. (1). Section 141(2)(a) excludes cases in which the valuable consideration is obtained (or will be so in the future) by virtue of an agreement made with the consent of the Attorney General. Section 141(2)(b) provides an exemption covering agreements made as part of a program for the diversion of persons from indictable criminal proceedings. To come within this paragraph, the diversion program must be approved by the Attorney General.

ANNOTATIONS

The Crown need not prove that an indictable offence was actually committed, it being sufficient to prove that the accused believed that an indictable offence had been committed: R. v. H.L. (1987), 57 C.R. (3d) 136 (Que. Ct. Sess.).

CORRUPTLY TAKING REWARD FOR RECOVERY OF GOODS.

142. Every one who corruptly accepts any valuable consideration, directly or indirectly, under pretence or on account of helping any person to recover anything obtained by the commission of an indictable offence is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 130.

CROSS-REFERENCES

An “indictable offence” would include a Crown option offence by virtue of s. 34 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term “corruptly” is not defined in this Part but has been considered by the courts in relation to the secret commission offence in s. 426, where it was held not to mean wickedly or dishonestly, but to refer to an act done mala fides, designed wholly or partially for the purpose of bringing about the effect forbidden by the section: R. v. Brown (1956), 116 C.C.C. 287 (Ont. C.A.).

Related offences are as follows: s. 23, accessory after the fact; s. 137, fabricating evidence; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 140, public mischief; s. 141, compounding indictable offence; s. 143, advertising reward and immunity; s. 346, extortion; ss. 354 and 355, possession of property obtained by crime; s. 462.31, laundering proceeds of crime.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the indictable offence of corruptly accepting valuable consideration for the recovery of goods which were obtained by the commission of an indictable offence. It must be proven that the accused accepted the valuable consideration corruptly (directly or indirectly) and its receipt flowed from the pretence of helping or as the result of actually helping recover the goods. The maximum punishment for this offence is five years.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Butler (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 445 (Ont. Co. Ct.), the trial Judge adopted the definition of the word “corruptly” given by Cussen, J., in R. v. Worthington, [1921] V.L.R. 660 as “an act done by a man knowing that he is doing what is wrong, and doing it with an evil object" and found that in the factual circumstances the accused's acceptance of reward for obtaining the return of stolen goods was corrupt.

ADVERTISING REWARD AND IMMUNITY.

143. Every one who

- (a) publicly advertises a reward for the return of anything that has been stolen or lost, and in the advertisement uses words to indicate that no questions will be asked if it is returned,
  - (b) uses words in a public advertisement to indicate that a reward will be given or paid for anything that has been stolen or lost, without interference with or inquiry about the person who produces it,
  - (c) promises or offers in a public advertisement to return to a person who has advanced money by way of loan on, or has bought, anything that has been stolen or lost, the money so advanced or paid, or any other sum of money for the return of that thing, or
  - (d) prints or publishes any advertisement referred to in paragraph (a), (b) or (c),
- is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 131.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "steal" is defined in s. 2 as theft and accordingly see s. 322.

Related offences are as follows: s. 23, accessory after the fact; s. 139, attempting to obstruct justice; s. 140, public mischief; s. 141, compounding indictable offence; s. 142, corruptly taking reward; s. 346, extortion; ss. 354 and 355, possession of property obtained by crime. In addition, it should be noted that courts will, on occasion, stay proceedings as an abuse of process where it is shown that the criminal proceedings were launched to collect a debt or realize on a civil claim, or following a threat to swear out an information to obtain payment of a debt. See R. v. Leroux (1928), 50 C.C.C. 52 (Ont. C.A.). Also see notes following s. 579.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515 although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the summary conviction offence of publicly advertising for the return of lost or stolen goods with a promise of reward and immunity. Paragraph (a) prohibits public advertisements which offer a reward and state that no questions will be asked if the item is returned. Paragraph (b) prohibits similar advertisements if they state that no inquiry will be made of the person who returns the item, nor will there be efforts to interfere with such persons. Finally, para. (c) creates the offence of publicly offering to indemnify anyone who has advanced money on the security of the lost or stolen thing, or who had purported to buy it, in exchange for the return of the item.

Section 143(d) states that it is an offence to publish or print any of the types of advertisements described above.

Escapes and Rescues

PRISON BREACH.

144. Every one who

- (a) by force or violence breaks a prison with intent to set at liberty himself or any other person confined therein, or
- (b) with intent to escape forcibly breaks out of, or makes any breach in, a cell or other place within a prison in which he is confined, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 132; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “prison” is defined in s. 2. Section 149 enacts rules for sentencing of a person convicted for an escape committed while undergoing imprisonment. A finding of guilt in relation to this offence will, in certain circumstances, require imposition of an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substances under s. 100(1).

The related offence of escaping lawful custody and being unlawfully at large is in s. 145. Other related offences are as follows: s. 146, permitting or assisting escape; s. 147, rescue from lawful custody or officer permitting escape; s. 148, assisting prisoner of war to escape.

Murder of a warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties, is first degree murder by virtue of s. 231(4). This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or for a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. However, by virtue of s. 519, the accused would not be released pursuant to any release order until the accused was not required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out what constitutes prison breach and specifies that it is an indictable offence carrying a maximum sentence of 10 years.

The actus reus of the offence in s. 144(a) is the use of force or violence to break out of a prison. The mental element of this offence is the intention of the accused to set himself or another free.

The actus reus of the offence created in s. 144(b) is the action of forcibly breaking out or making a breach in a cell or any other part of a prison in which the accused is incarcerated. It must be shown that the accused did the act with the intention of escaping.

(8) For the purposes only of the Identification of Criminals Act, a person charged with or convicted of an offence under this section punishable on summary conviction shall be deemed to be charged with or to have been convicted of an indictable offence.

NOTE: Subsection (8) re-enacted by 1992, c. 47, s. 68 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The unproclaimed text, printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “justice” is defined in s. 2. The terms “undertaking” and “recognizance” principally refer to forms of release authorized by Part XVI. In addition, pending appeal in indictable and summary conviction matters, an accused may be released on an undertaking or recognizance pursuant to ss. 679 and 816. The term “summons” refers to a form of process issued under Part XVI, while the terms “promise to appear” and “appearance notice” refer to process issued by a peace officer. Reference should also be made to the following provisions: ss. 494 and 495, warrantless arrest power; s. 510, issue of warrant for failing to comply with term of summons to appear for purposes of Identification of Criminals Act; s. 512, issuing of arrest warrant; s. 524, arrest of accused for misconduct while on a form of release; s. 475, accused absconding during trial; s. 544, accused absconding during preliminary inquiry; s. 598, accused failing to attend for jury trial; Part XXV, procedure for forfeiture of recognizances and for rendering of accused by sureties. Note that by virtue of s. 803(3), where the summary conviction court proceeds to try the accused ex parte then no proceedings may be taken under this section arising out of the failure of the accused to appear for trial except with the consent of the Attorney General.

Section 149 enacts rules for sentencing of a person convicted for an escape committed while undergoing imprisonment. By virtue of s. 149(3), escape includes escaping from lawful custody and without lawful excuse, being at large before expiration of a term of imprisonment. A finding of guilt in relation to this offence may, in certain circumstances, give the court a discretion to impose an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substances under s. 100(2).

The related offence of prison breach is in s. 145. Other related offences are as follows: s. 146, permitting or assisting escape; s. 147, rescue from lawful custody or officer permitting escape; s. 148, assisting prisoner of war to escape; s. 405, acknowledging bail in name of another person.

Murder of a peace officer, warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties, is first degree murder by virtue of s. 231(4). This offence in subsec. (1) may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

The offences in this section are all Crown option offences. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Where the Crown proceeds by way of indictment then the accused has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under ss. 496 and 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. However, note s. 515(6) which puts the burden of proof on the accused to show why he should be released in certain circumstances, including the case where the accused is charged with an offence under subsecs. (2) to (5) of this section, or is charged with an indictable offence while at large after being released in respect of another indictable offence. Further, by virtue of s. 519, the accused would not be released pursuant to any release order until the accused was not required to be detained in custody in respect of any other matter.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offences of escaping, being unlawfully at large, and offences relating to failing to comply with various forms of process or judicial interim release. It also facilitates the prosecution of charges of failing to comply by authorizing the use of certificates to prove some aspects of these offences.

Subsection (1) deals with escapes and being unlawfully at large. Under s. 145(1)(a), it must be proven that the accused was in lawful custody at the time of the escape. Section 145(1)(b) states the elements of the offence of being unlawfully at large inside or outside of Canada before the expiration of the custodial portion of a sentence.

Section 145(2) creates offences pertaining to those who fail to attend court as required by the terms of an order of judicial interim release, or to appear subsequently as required by a court, judge or justice after initially appearing in court.

Subsection (3) creates the offence of failing to comply with a condition in a judicial interim release order.

Subsection (4) creates the offence of failing to comply with a requirement in a summons to attend court or at the specified place for fingerprinting as required by the Identification of Criminals Act.

Subsection (5) spells out the offence of failing to comply with a requirement in a release order entered into before the officer in charge of the station that the accused attend court or at the specified place for fingerprinting as required by the Identification of Criminals Act. This subsection only applies if the appearance notice, promise to appear or recognizance has been confirmed by a justice of the peace.

Subsections (2) to (5) permit the accused to rely upon a lawful excuse, but the onus is upon the accused to establish such excuse. As with other provisions placing a burden upon the accused, this aspect of the section is likely to be attacked as violating ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter. Subsection (6) specifically excludes from what might otherwise be a "lawful excuse" reliance upon a defect in the way in which the substance of the alleged offence is stated in the release documents described in subsec. (5).

The offences created in subsecs. (2) to (5) are punishable by way of summary conviction procedure or by indictment. In the latter event, the maximum punishment is two years.

Section 145(8) provides that for the sole purpose of the Identification of Criminals Act, an accused charged with or convicted of what is a summary conviction offence under this section, shall be deemed to have been charged with or convicted of an indictable offence.

Subsection (9) permits a certificate to be used to prove that an accused charged under s. 145(2), (4) or (5) did fail to attend court or for fingerprints as required. The certificate is to be provided by the clerk of the court or the person who is in charge of the place in which the accused was to have attended for fingerprints. It is proof of the statements contained in it without the need to prove the signature or the official character of the person who appears to have signed it.

Section 145(10) permits the cross-examination of the person who made the certificate in subsec. (9) but leave of the court is required. Subsection (11) provides that unless the accused is given notice of the intention to use a certificate along with a copy of it, a certificate made under subsec. (9) cannot be used as evidence.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) / Meaning of lawful custody – In R. v. Piper, [1965] 3 C.C.C. 135, 51 D.L.R. (2d) 534 (Man. C.A.), the accused was found guilty where he had escaped from the penitentiary confines but was still on penitentiary property.

In R. v. Whitfield, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 129, 9 C.R.N.S. 59 (S.C.C.), it was held (5:2) that arrest is an undivided act that defies separation into “custodial” or “symbolic” arrest.

An arrest stated to be for one described offence cannot be validated by a later reliance upon another offence for which it might have been, but was not, made: R. v. Huff (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 324, 17 A.R. 499 (C.A.).

Where an accused is informed at least of the general nature of the charge for which he was apprehended, his arrest is lawful: R. v. Boughton (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 395, [1975] W.W.D. 79 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Notwithstanding the applicable provincial legislation only permits the arrest of a person “found” to be intoxicated in a public place an accused may be convicted of escaping lawful custody provided he was apparently intoxicated when arrested even if the Judge finds as a fact he was not intoxicated: R. v. Robertson (1978), 42 C.C.C. 78, [1978] 5 W.W.R. 289 (B.C.C.A.).

A conviction under this section was imposed on an accused who was present in Court when a sentence of incarceration was imposed but then left the Court after a recess when the officer in charge briefly left the room. He was in custody within the meaning of the section as he was present when sentence was pronounced and submitted to arrest by asking permission of the officer to do various things, notwithstanding he was never placed in a prisoner’s dock, handcuffed or otherwise physically placed under arrest: R. v. Zajner (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 417 (Ont. C.A.).

An inmate of a transition house who leaves the house with permission of the management but fails to return to prison as required does not commit the offence under para. (a). A person cannot be convicted of escaping custody where his initial physical liberty was legally obtained. In such circumstances his offence, if any, is that created by para. (b): R. v. Folchito (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 253, [1986] R.J.Q. 563 (C.A.).

Unlawfully at large – An inmate, when released on a temporary pass, could be unlawfully at large immediately if at that moment he decided not to return to the institution when required: Re MacCaud and The Queen (1975), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 445 (Ont. H.C.J.).

It is not every breach of a condition of a temporary absence permit which operates to deprive the inmate of a lawful excuse under this subsection, but rather only a wilful breach of a condition which shows an intention by the inmate to withdraw himself from the control, in the sense of the custody, of the correctional authorities even where the permit itself provided that apparent breach of the conditions rendered it null and void and deemed the inmate to be unlawfully at large: R. v. Seymour (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 305 (Ont. C.A.).

Secure and open custody imposed pursuant to the Young Offenders Act constitutes a form of imprisonment. Thus an offender who fails to return after expiry of a day pass may be convicted of the offence under para. (b): R. v. McKay (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 191 (Man. C.A.); R. v. B.D. et al. (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 187, 49 C.R. (3d) 283 (Ont. C.A.). Similarly, R. v. C.A. (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 133 (Sask. C.A.).

Proof of lawful custody – A calendar of sentence is sufficient proof that the accused is in lawful custody: R. v. Ouellette (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 278 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Adams (1978), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 459, 6 C.R. (3d) 257 (B.C.C.A.) two of the three members of the Court held that it is not open to an accused to go behind a warrant of committal valid on its face.

Subsec. (2) – An accused charged with a summary conviction offence and released on an undertaking to appear in Court complies with that undertaking by appearing either personally or by counsel or agent, as permitted by s. 800(2), and where counsel appears on the Court date the accused may not be charged with the offence under this section: R. v. Okanee (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 149, 9 Sask. R. 10 (C.A.).

Subsec. (3) – This is a true criminal offence and mere carelessness or failure to take the precautions that a reasonable person would take will not support a conviction. The Crown must prove that the accused had the requisite mens rea before any issue of lawful excuse arises: R. v. Legere (1995), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 555, 22 O.R. (3d) 89, 77 O.A.C. 265 (C.A.).

It is not a defence that the conviction which gave rise to the undertaking is subsequently set aside. Court orders must be obeyed until set aside or modified regardless of doubts or challenges as to their validity: R. v. Gaudreault (unreported, December 21, 1995, Que. C.A.) [096/031/025-28 pp.].

Subsec. (5) – Mens rea is an element of the offence of failing to appear and accordingly the accused may raise the defence of honest mistake: R. v. Bender (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 496, [1976] W.W.D. 84 (B.C.S.C.).

Thus where an accused honestly forgot the date of his Court appearance he has a defence to the charge even if he forgot due to his own negligence: R. v. Stuart (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 203 (B.C.S.C.). Folld: R. v. Neal (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 92, 136 D.L.R. (3d) 86 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Subsec. (9) – A certificate under this subsection may be evidence not only that the accused failed to appear but that, for example, he was named in an appearance notice which was confirmed by a justice: R. v. Dorigo (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 141 (B.C.S.C.).

PERMITTING OR ASSISTING ESCAPE.

146. Every one who

- (a) permits a person whom he has in lawful custody to escape, by failing to perform a legal duty,
  - (b) conveys or causes to be conveyed into a prison anything, with intent to facilitate the escape of a person imprisoned therein, or
  - (c) directs or procures, under colour of pretended authority, the discharge of a prisoner who is not entitled to be discharged,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 134.

The term "prison" is defined in s. 2.

The related offences of escaping lawful custody and being unlawfully at large are in s. 145. Other related offences are as follows: s. 144, prison breach; s. 147, rescue from lawful custody or officer permitting escape; s. 148, assisting prisoner of war to escape.

Murder of a peace officer, warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties, is first degree murder by virtue of s. 231(4).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

RESCUE OR PERMITTING ESCAPE.*147. Every one who

- (a) rescues any person from lawful custody or assists any person in escaping or attempting to escape from lawful custody,
  - (b) being a peace officer, wilfully permits a person in his lawful custody to escape, or
  - (c) being an officer of or an employee in a prison, wilfully permits a person to escape from lawful custody therein,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 135.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “prison” and “peace officer” are defined in s. 2.

The related offence of escaping lawful custody and being unlawfully at large is in s. 145. Other related offences are as follows: s. 144, prison breach; s. 146, permitting or assisting escape; s. 148, assisting prisoner of war to escape.

Murder of a peace officer, warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties, is first degree murder by virtue of s. 231(4).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 147 sets out three indictable offences of rescuing a person from lawful custody and prohibits actions of peace officers or prison employees which permit a person to escape.

Section 147(a) creates offences of assisting anyone to escape (or attempting to do so) or rescuing anyone from lawful custody.

Section 147(b) applies to peace officers and s. 147(c) to officers or employees of prisons who wilfully permit a person to escape from lawful custody.

The maximum sentence for these offences is five years.

ANNOTATIONS

A prisoner was still “escaping” within the meaning of this section although at the time the accused assisted him, he was in an area of the province which was landlocked and his flight from the authorities could only be transitory: R. v. Stutt; R. v. Claussen (1979), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 53 (B.C.C.A.).

In the absence of evidence to the contrary a police officer’s testimony that he was transporting the prisoner in custody from police jail cells to Court to set a trial date at the time he escaped was sufficient proof that the prisoner was in lawful custody and the Crown was not required to produce the actual warrant under which the prisoner was being held: R. v. Stutt; R. v. Claussen, supra.

ASSISTING PRISONER OF WAR TO ESCAPE.*148. Every one who knowingly and wilfully

- (a) assists a prisoner of war in Canada to escape from a place where he is detained, or
  - (b) assists a prisoner of war, who is permitted to be at large on parole in Canada, to escape from the place where he is at large on parole,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 136.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Related offences include the following: s. 50, assisting enemy alien; s. 54, assisting deserter; s. 55, assisting deserter from R.C.M.P.

Murder of a peace officer, warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties, is first degree murder by virtue of s. 231(4).

A finding of guilt in relation to this offence may, in certain circumstances, give the court a discretion to impose an order prohibiting possession of firearms, ammunition or explosive substances under s. 100(2).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 148 creates the offence of assisting a prisoner of war to escape. Section 148(a) and (b) spell out the details of the prisoner of war's status at the time of the offence. Both offences require that the accused know of the status of the prisoner of war and wilfully assist in the escape. The maximum sentence for this indictable offence is five years imprisonment.

SERVICE OF TERM FOR ESCAPE / Determination of term of imprisonment / Definition of "escape".

149. (1) A person convicted for an escape committed while undergoing imprisonment shall be sentenced to serve the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced for the escape either concurrently with the portion of the term of imprisonment that he was serving at the time of his escape that he had not served or, if the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge by whom he is sentenced for the escape so orders, consecutively, and such imprisonment shall be served

(a) in a penitentiary if the time to be served is two years or more; or

(b) if the time to be served is less than two years,

(i) in a prison, or

(ii) notwithstanding section 731, in a penitentiary if the court, judge, justice or provincial court judge by whom he is sentenced for the escape so orders.

NOTE: Subsection (1)(b)(ii) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 731 with s. 743.1.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), section 139 of the Corrections and Conditional Release Act applies in determining the term of imprisonment that a person who escapes while undergoing imprisonment was serving at the time of his escape.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), "escape" means breaking prison, escaping from lawful custody or, without lawful excuse, being at large before the expiration of a term of imprisonment to which a person has been sentenced. R.S., c. C-34, s. 137; 1972, c. 13, s. 9; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 6; 1992, c. 20, s. 199.

NOTE: Section 149 replaced 1995, c. 22, s. 1 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council). The text, which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

SERVICE OF TERM FOR ESCAPE / Definition of "escape".

149.(1) Notwithstanding section 743.1, a court that convicts a person for an escape committed while undergoing imprisonment may order that the term of imprisonment be served in a penitentiary, even if the time to be served is less than two years.

(2) In this section, "escape" means breaking prison, escaping from lawful custody or, without lawful excuse, being at large before the expiration of a term of imprisonment to which a person has been sentenced.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “justice” and “provincial court judge” are defined in s. 2. “Penitentiary” is defined in s. 2 of the Penitentiary Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-5. The rules enacted in this section refer to the escape (defined in subsec. (3)) offences in ss. 144 and 145(1). For additional cases, relating to the calculation of sentence in cases of escape or where the accused is convicted of further offences while unlawfully at large or on parole, readers are referred to notes under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act in Martin’s Related Criminal Statutes, 1993.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out that a sentence for escape may be ordered to be served concurrently or consecutively to the sentence existing at the time of the escape, and where the sentence will be served. Subsection (3) contains a broad definition of “escape” so that it includes prison breach (s. 144) and escaping or being unlawfully at large (s. 145(1)). Section 149(2) states that s. 20 of the Parole Act is to be applied to calculate the length of the (previous) sentence remaining at the time of the escape (the remanet).

Section 149(1)(a) and (1)(b)(i) restate the usual rule regarding where a sentence will be served, namely that a sentence for escape of less than two years will be served in a reformatory and longer sentences in a penitentiary. However, s. 149(1)(b)(ii) provides an exception and permits the sentencing justice, judge or provincial court judge to require that a sentence of less than two years will be served in a penitentiary. If such an order is made, the remanet will also be served in a penitentiary.

ANNOTATIONS

Place of service of sentence – Where the trial Judge exercises his discretion under subsec. (1)(b)(ii) and orders that “such imprisonment” shall be served in a penitentiary then the entire sentence including the remanet of the sentence to which the accused was subject at the time of the escape must be served in the penitentiary, not just that portion imposed for the offence of escaping custody: Re Carr and The Queen (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1979] 3 W.W.R. 226 (B.C.C.A.).

Manner of service of sentence – Where the judge orders that the sentence for escape be served consecutively, it is to be served consecutively to the remanet of the sentence he was serving at the time and not to a sentence imposed for some offence committed while he was at large: Re Frankum and The Queen (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 477 (B.C.C.A.).

Under this section, a term of imprisonment imposed for escaping custody may be made concurrent to the sentence the accused was serving at the time of the escape or consecutive to such sentence, but not consecutive to a sentence imposed for some further offence. Where the trial judge mistakenly made an order that the escape sentence be consecutive to the sentence for new offences imposed on that day as well as the remanet, then on an application in the nature of certiorari, rather than simply quashing the illegal sentence, the court may carry out the obvious intention of the trial judge and reverse the sequence of sentences so that the escape sentence runs consecutively to the time remaining unserved and the new sentences run consecutive to the escape sentence: R. v. Easton (1989), 8 W.C.B. (2d) 206 (Ont. C.A.), affd [1991] 2 S.C.R. 209.

No credit for time spent unlawfully at large – At common law the time during which an escaped prisoner was unlawfully at large did not count as part of the service by him of the term of imprisonment. Thus even if this section does not apply because the prisoner was not convicted of an escape he is not entitled to credit for the time spent unlawfully at large: Re MacDonald and Deputy A.-G. Can. (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 202 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: Re Dunlop and The Queen (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 380 (B.C.C.A.).

In calculating the term of imprisonment left to be served, an accused who escaped and was subsequently held in custody in the United States is not entitled to any credit for time spent in custody awaiting extradition to Canada: Re Morley and The Queen (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 190, 22 C.R. (3d) 331 sub nom. Morley v. Director Of Stony Mountain Institution (Man. C.A.).

Nor is the accused entitled to credit for time spent in custody in the United States serving a sentence imposed in that jurisdiction: Re Dozois and The Queen (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 171, 22 C.R. (3d) 213 (Ont. C.A.). Folld: Leschenko v. A.-G. Can. et al. (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 522, 44 N.R. 297 (Fed. C.A.).

Part V / SEXUAL OFFENCES, PUBLIC MORALS AND DISORDERLY CONDUCT

Interpretation

DEFINITIONS / "Guardian" / "Public place" / "Theatre".

150. In this Part

"guardian" includes any person who has in law or in fact the custody or control of another person;

"public place" includes any place to which the public have access as of right or by invitation, express or implied;

"theatre" includes any place that is open to the public where entertainments are given, whether or not any charge is made for admission. R.S., c. C-34, s. 138.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section. Despite the heading of this Part, in fact, many of the sexual offences are found in Part VIII and many of the offences dealing with public disorder are found in Part II.

ANNOTATIONS

Public place – As the definitive words preceded by the word "includes" were not intended to be exhaustive and to exclude the ordinary dictionary meaning of those words, private property, frequented by members of the public with no objection by the owner, is a public place: R. v. Lavoie, [1968] 1 C.C.C. 265 (N.B.C.A.).

To constitute a public place it is not necessary that all segments of the public have a right of access thereto and accordingly a beverage room, from which a portion of the public may be excluded by law or by choice, is a public place under this section: Tegstrom v. The Queen, [1971] 1 W.W.R. 147 (Sask. D.C.).

Sexual Offences

CONSENT NO DEFENCE / Exception / Exemption for accused aged twelve or thirteen / Mistake of age / Idem.

150.1 (1) Where an accused is charged with an offence under section 151 or 152 or subsection 153(1), 160(3) or 173(2) or is charged with an offence under section 271, 272 or 273 in respect of a complainant under the age of fourteen years, it is not a defence that the complainant consented to the activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), where an accused is charged with an offence under section 151 or 152, subsection 173(2) or section 271 in respect of a complainant who is twelve years of age or more but under the age of fourteen years, it is not a defence that the complainant consented to the activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge unless the accused

- (a) is twelve years of age or more but under the age of sixteen years;
- (b) is less than two years older than the complainant; and
- (c) is neither in a position of trust or authority towards the complainant nor is a person with whom the complainant is in a relationship of dependency.

(3) No person aged twelve or thirteen years shall be tried for an offence under section 151 or 152 or subsection 173(2) unless the person is in a position of trust or authority towards the complainant or is a person with whom the complainant is in a relationship of dependency.

(4) It is not a defence to a charge under section 151 or 152, subsection 160(3) or 173(2), or section 271, 272 or 273 that the accused believed that the complainant was fourteen years of age or more at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed unless the accused took all reasonable steps to ascertain the age of the complainant.

(5) It is not a defence to a charge under section 153, 159, 170, 171 or 172 or subsection 212(2) or (4) that the accused believed that the complainant was eighteen years of age or more at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed unless the accused took all reasonable steps to ascertain the age of the complainant. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “complainant” is defined in s. 2. The terms “position of trust or authority” and “relationship of dependency” are not defined. The Report of the Committee on Sexual Offences Against Children and Youths [The “Badgley” Report], released in 1984, contained many recommendations concerning the treatment of sexual offences against children and appears to have been the origin of many of the offences now found in this Part. That report, in its Recommendation 9, had suggested a definition of person in position of trust as including parent; step-parent; adoptive parent; foster parent; legal guardian; common-law partner of child’s parent, step-parent, adoptive parent, foster parent, or legal guardian; grandparent; uncle, aunt; boarder in young person’s home; teacher, baby-sitter; group home worker; youth group worker; and employer.

In effect, this section attempts to define the circumstances in which a child may legally consent to sexual activity and the parameters of the “defence” of mistake of fact where the mistake is as to the age of the complainant. As to other notes concerning the mistake defence generally, see notes following s. 19 and, with respect to consent in particular, the notes following s. 265.

Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for any of the offences in ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160, and 170 to 173 and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. That provision, in effect, reverses the common law rule of practice that required the trial judge to direct the jury as to the need for corroboration for most sexual offences, especially those involving children. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160(2), (3), and 170 to 173. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused in proceedings under ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160(2), (3), and 170 to 173. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160(2), (3), and 170 to 173. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence in ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160, or 170 to 173 and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that where an accused is charged with an offence under ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160(2), (3), and 170 to 173 and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen, where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160, and 170 to 173, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under these provisions in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 659 abrogates any ruling requiring a warning about convicting the accused on the evidence of a child. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160(2), (3), and 170 to 173 in which the complainant was under the age of 18 years at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed, a videotape made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant adopts its contents. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with an offence under ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160(2), (3), 170 to 173, or 177 is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides a series of rules which apply to enumerated sections to prevent an accused from relying on the consent of a complainant under a specified age. It also spells out when a mistake by the accused may be a defence.

Subsection (1) provides that the consent of the complainant, who is less than 14 years old, is no defence to the sexual assault offences (ss. 271 to 273) and no defence at all, no matter what the age of the complainant, to the other enumerated offences, such as sexual exploitation (s. 153).

Subsection (2) provides an exception to subsec. (1) and permits the defence of consent to be raised to the offences of sexual interference (s. 151), invitation to sexual touching (s. 152), indecent exposure to a person under 14 (s. 173(2)), or sexual assault (s. 271) if the complainant is at least 12 but less than 14 years old and the additional requirements of the subsection are met. The further conditions which must be met for the exception to apply are as follows: (a) the accused is at least 12 but less than 16; (b) the accused is less than two years older than the complainant; (c) the accused is neither in a position of trust nor is the complainant in a relationship of dependency with the accused.

Subsection (3) prohibits the prosecution of a 12 or 13-year-old unless the accused comes within condition (c) noted above.

Subsections (4) and (5) limit the circumstances under which a mistake of fact regarding the complainant's age will be an excuse. Subsection (4) lists a series of offences for which the excuse of mistake of fact will be limited to circumstances in which the accused believed that the complainant was 14 years or over. Similarly, subsec. (5) lists another series of offences for which a mistake of fact will be permitted, if the accused believed that the complainant was 18 years or over. However, to rely on either subsection, the accused must have taken all reasonable steps to ascertain the age of the complainant.

ANNOTATIONS

Application of Charter of Rights – It has been held that former s. 246.1(2), which also limited the consent defence where the complainant was under fourteen years of age, did not constitute an unconstitutional violation of the equality rights guaranteed by s. 15 of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Bearhead (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 546, 22 C.R.R. 211 (Alta. Q.B.); R. v. Le Gallant (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 291, 54 C.R. (3d) 46, 33 D.L.R. (4th) 444 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Perkins (1987), 59 C.R. (3d) 56, [1987] N.W.T.R. 308 (S.C.); R. v. Halleran (1989), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 177 (Nfld. C.A.). Contra: R. v. Black (1990), 11 W.C.B. (2d) 557 (B.C.S.C.) where it was held that former s. 246.1(2) infringed s. 7 of the Charter and was not a reasonable limit.

Elimination of the defence of consent by subsec. (1) where the complainant is under 14 years of age does not infringe s. 7 of the Charter: R. v. M. (R.S.) (1991), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 223, 10 C.R. (4th) 121 (P.E.I.C.A.).

The removal of the defence of consent to a charge contrary to s. 153 violates neither s. 7 nor s. 15 of the Charter: R. v. Hann (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 355, 15 C.R. (4th) 355, 11 C.R.R. (2d) 140 (Nfld. C.A.).

Trial of child (Subsec. (3)) – It was held, considering a predecessor to subsec. (3) in relation to the former offence of rape, that the section merely enacted a rule of immunity not incapacity and therefore an accused who is over fourteen years of age may be convicted as a party although the principal being under fourteen years of age is immune from prosecution: R. v. Cardinal (1982), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 376, [1983] 1 W.W.R. 689, 42 A.R. 180 (C.A.), affd 18 C.C.C. (3d) 96, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 523, [1985] 6 W.W.R. 385 (7:0).

The fact that subsec. (3) does not extend immunity from prosecution to the offence of sexual assault under s. 271 does not violate an offender's rights under s. 7 of the Charter. Nevertheless, the discretion as to whether the accused should be charged with sexual assault must be exercised in a proper manner and for a proper motive and it would be for the Crown to ensure that a 12- or 13-year-old offender, who did not use force in circumstances which would only amount to an offence under s. 151 or 152, was not charged under s. 271 merely to avoid the immunity provisions of subsec. (3): R. v. V. (K.S.) (1994), 89 C.C.C. (3d) 477, 119 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 290 (Nfld. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 95 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

Mistake as to age – It was held in R. v. Brooks (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 276, [1989] 3 W.W.R. 1, 93 A.R. 1 (C.A.), that the defence of honest belief provided by subsec. (4) should be given retrospective effect so as to give an accused charged with the offence under s. 271, in relation to a complainant under the age of 14 years, the benefit of that subsection, although the offence was committed prior to enactment of this subsection but after proclamation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It would be contrary to the fundamental guarantee in s. 7 to deprive the accused of a defence of reasonable mistake of fact in such circumstances. [Also see note: R. v. Nguyen (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 6 W.W.R. 289, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 906 (5:2) under the Charter, s. 7.]

The accused, in order to rely on the defence of mistake, need only raise a reasonable doubt. The accused must, however, have made an earnest inquiry or there should be some compelling factor that obviates the need for such an inquiry. Thus, the accused must show what steps he took and those steps were all that could be reasonably required of him in the circumstances: R. v. Osborne (1992), 17 C.R. (4th) 350, 102 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 194 (Nfld. C.A.).

Consent defence – The burden is on the accused to prove the consent defence provided by age proximity in subsec. (2)(a): R. v. Thompson (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 142 (Alta. C.A.).

Whether the accused took “all reasonable steps” will depend on the circumstances. In order to rely on this provision, the accused need not necessarily directly ask the victim her age or ask collateral questions that would disclose her age. The age differential between the accused and the victim may be considered in determining whether the steps taken were reasonable and the greater the disparity in ages, the more inquiry will be required: R. v. K.(R.A.) (unreported, February 22, 1996, N.B.C.A.) [096/072/023-6 pp.].

Whether the accused is in a position of trust for the purpose of subsec. 2(c) must be considered with respect to the accused's position toward the complainant. While the position of the accused as viewed by other individuals, such as family members, may be relevant, it is not determinative. It will be an infrequent case in which the accused, who is a young person close in age to the complainant, will have been entrusted with sufficient responsibility to have been considered to have been in a position of trust toward the complainant, although such cases may arise where the accused was the complainant's baby-sitter, camp counsellor, lifeguard or tutor: R. v. L.(D.B.) (1995), 101 C.C.C. (3d) 406, 25 O.R. (3d) 649 (C.A.).

Expert evidence respecting child abuse – Evidence adduced solely for the purpose of bolstering the credibility of a witness is excluded by virtue of the rule against oath-helping: R. v. Kyselka (1962), 133 C.C.C. 103, 37 C.R. 391, [1962] O.W.N. 160 (C.A.). Thus, the opinion of a child witness' teacher that she was a trustworthy witness is inadmissible: R. v. Hill (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 314 (Ont. C.A.). Further the opinion of a psychologist that children rarely lie about sexual abuse is inadmissible: R. v. Kostuck (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 190, 43 Man. R. (2d) 84 (C.A.).

While expert evidence on the ultimate credibility of a witness is not admissible, expert evidence on human conduct and the psychological and physical factors which may lead to certain behaviour relevant to credibility is admissible, provided that the testimony goes beyond the ordinary experience of the trier of fact. Where such evidence is admitted, the jury must be carefully instructed as to its function and duty in making the final decision without being unduly influenced by the expert evidence: R. v. Marquard, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 223, 85 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 25 C.R. (4th) 1 (S.C.C.).

It did not violate the rule against "oath-helping" to ask an expert on child sexual abuse whether, as far as he was aware, the complainant had told him something that was untrue. The expert's evidence was directed to legitimate purposes having nothing to do with whether the complainant was truthful or not. The question and answer was admissible for the purpose of supporting the opinion of the expert expressed on other matters, such as his diagnosis of the complainant's condition and his explanation of her behaviour. His conclusions were based, in large part, on what the complainant had told him and those conclusions would be weakened if not invalidated if the expert did not believe what she had told him. It was therefore relevant to determine whether he believed her or not: R. v. Burns, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 656, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 29 C.R. (4th) 113 sub nom. R. v. B. (R.H.).

In R. v. Beliveau (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (B.C.C.A.), it was held that, while an expert could not be asked whether a child witness was truthful, the expert could give an opinion that certain observed behaviour, demeanour and other facts were consistent with the child having been sexually abused. Similarly R. v. H.(E.L.) (1990), 2 C.R. (4th) 187, 100 N.S.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.). In R. v. J.(F.E.) (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 64, 74 C.R. (3d) 269 (Ont. C.A.), it was held that a psychologist and social worker could give expert evidence to the effect that a letter written by the child complainant, recanting the allegations of sexual abuse by her father, was typical of the recantations commonly seen among children who have been sexually abused when they realize the problems that their revelations have caused. However, the further opinion by the expert, that he had not found one case in which a child was being truthful when recanting, was inadmissible.

Expert evidence from a clinical psychologist, specializing in the treatment of young victims and perpetrators of sexual offences, that several behavioural characteristics noticed in the young victim were similar to those experienced by young victims of sexual offences is admissible on the trial of a charge of sexual assault and such evidence will often prove invaluable: R. v. B.(G.) (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 161, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 3, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 577, 77 C.R. (3d) 327 (5:0).

On the trial of charges of sexual assault by the accused on his stepsons, expert evidence from a sexual abuse therapist was properly admitted concerning the indicia of sexual abuse and, in particular, to explain why the victims continued to associate with the accused, why the child did not immediately complain to the other parent, but did complain to outsiders, and why the memory of the events could improve as the self-protective mechanism of involuntary forgetting is overcome by the child being required to repeat the story on many occasions. This kind of evidence could be helpful to the jury on the issues of credibility by tending to show that the inferences which might well be drawn on the basis of common sense and common experience should not be drawn as a matter of course in cases of sexual abuse. The jury must, however, be warned as to the dangers in utilizing this kind of evidence, especially the danger of giving undue weight to the expert opinion: R. v. C. (R.A.) (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 522, 78 C.R. (3d) 390 (B.C.C.A.).

It is open to the defence to call witnesses who could testify that the complainant should not be believed under oath and to give the basis for their opinion, in particular, that she was known to tell strange tales of sexual assault. However, in light of this evidence, it was open to the Crown to call the evidence of witnesses, that they would rely on the sworn testimony of the complainant, and to call evidence from experts, who had examined the complainant, to explain why she would tell these tales of sexual assaults upon her. This latter testimony explained that these accounts were in themselves symptomatic of sexual assaults upon the complainant. The further opinion by the expert, that only a small percentage of children who complain about sexual abuse are lying, was inadmissible. The trial judge must, in any event, give the jury a careful direction as to the limited use of this evidence: R. v. Taylor (1986), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (Ont. C.A.).

In a case involving alleged physical abuse of a child, the opinion of an expert is admissible as to whether certain injuries were caused accidentally or intentionally; whether it is usual or rare to find injuries of a particular kind in a child of a particular age; the kind and degree of force required to cause the injuries; the age of the injuries; and the consistency or inconsistency of the injuries with explanations given for them. However, it is within the discretion of the trial judge to rule that the evidence be given in a less emotional but just as accurate form, for example, by use of the term “intentional force” rather than “child abuse”. The judge may also require that a conclusory statement be excluded where opinion evidence can be given just as accurately in less conclusory terms, for example, in terms of the degree of likelihood of the injuries being caused in a particular manner, provided that this does not affect the honesty or accuracy of the opinion. Further, in a jury case, the trial judge must give a careful direction to the jury as to the manner in which this evidence must be analyzed and applied by the jury: R. v. Millar (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 71 C.R. (3d) 78, 33 O.A.C. 165 (C.A.).

Before an expert’s opinion is admissible on behalf of the defence to show that the accused by reason of his disposition could not have been the perpetrator of the offence, the trial judge must be satisfied, as a matter of law, that either the perpetrator of the crime or the accused has a distinctive behavioural characteristic such that a comparison of one with the other will be of material assistance in determining innocence or guilt. The court must consider whether the scientific community has developed a standard profile for the offender who commits this type of crime: R. v. Mohan, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 9, 89 C.C.C. (3d) 402, 29 C.R. (4th) 243.

An expert may not testify that, based upon “statement validity analysis”, the allegation by the complainant is credible. Evidence tendered for the specific purpose of bolstering the credibility of a witness is inadmissible and, in any event, this theory has not been shown to be scientifically valid: R. v. Jmieff (1994), 94 C.C.C. (3d) 157, 84 W.A.C. 213 (B.C.C.A.).

Similar fact evidence respecting child abuse – It was held in R. v. D.(L.E.) (1989), 50

C.C.C. (3d) 142, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 111, 71 C.R. (3d) 1 (4:1), that testimony from the complainant, the accused's daughter, as to much more serious acts of sexual assault than those alleged in the charges, was inadmissible. This similar fact evidence bore nearly the entire burden of proving the Crown's case against the accused on the acts charged and its probative value was not sufficient to overcome its prejudicial effect. However, evidence from the complainant of other conduct, similar to the acts charged and more proximate in time, was properly admitted. Where similar fact evidence is admitted, the jury must be specifically warned that it is not to rely on the evidence as proof that the accused is the sort of person who would commit the offence charged and, on that basis, infer that the accused is in fact guilty of the offence charged.

In R. v. B.(C.R.) (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 76 C.R. (3d) 1, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 717 (5:2) it was held that, on the trial of charges of sexual assault of the accused's natural daughter, evidence was admissible of sexual assaults by the accused upon the daughter of a woman with whom he had lived several years before. While there were differences between the conduct alleged by the complainant and by the similar fact witness it was open to the trial judge to conclude that the probative value of the similar fact evidence with respect to the credibility of the complainant outweighed its prejudicial effect.

On a charge of manslaughter involving the death of an infant, evidence was admissible of other injuries, suffered by the child in the weeks prior to his death, where there was evidence from which the jury could find that these other injuries were intentionally inflicted by the accused: R. v. Millar (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 71 C.R. (3d) 78, 33 O.A.C. 165 (C.A.).

Credibility of children – While the court must carefully assess the credibility of child witnesses the standard of a reasonable adult is not necessarily appropriate in assessing the credibility of young children. Young children may not be able to recount precise details and communicate the when and where of an event with exactitude, but this does not mean that they have misconceived what happened to them or who did it: R. v. B.(G.), supra.

There have been major changes in recent years with respect to the treatment of evidence of children. While, in a proper case, a child's evidence may be treated with caution, there is no assumption that children's evidence is always less reliable than the evidence of adults. Thus, if a court proceeds to discount a child's evidence automatically, without regard to the circumstances of the particular case, it will have fallen into error. It is also wrong to apply adult tests for credibility to the evidence of children. This does not mean that the evidence of children should not be subject to the same standard of proof as evidence of adult witnesses in criminal cases, but only that the evidence of children must not be approached from the perspective of rigid stereotypes but on the basis of common sense, taking into account the strengths and weaknesses which characterize the evidence offered in the particular case. The credibility of every witness of whatever age must be assessed by reference to criteria appropriate to her mental development, understanding and ability to communicate. In general, however, where an adult is testifying as to events which occurred when she was a child, her credibility should be assessed according to criteria applicable to her as an adult witness bearing in mind that the presence of inconsistencies, particularly as to peripheral matters such as time and location, should be considered in the context of the age of the witness at the time of the events to which she was testifying: R. v. W.(R) (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 134, 137 N.R. 214 (S.C.C.).

Hearsay exception – It is open to the courts to create new hearsay exceptions where the circumstances meet the requirements for necessity, meaning "reasonably necessary", and reliability. In the case of out of court statements by children, necessity may be created where the child is found not to be competent to testify or where there is expert evidence that testimony in court might be traumatic for the child or harm the child. The requirement of necessity will probably mean that, in most cases, children will be called to give viva voce evidence. As regards the reliability requirement, the court would have to take into consideration many facts such as timing, demeanour, personality of the child, the intelligence and understanding of the child and the absence of any reason to expect fabrication. The trial judge might also attach conditions to the admission of the evidence in order to safeguard the interests of the accused. This might include the right to cross-examine the child, where the judge thinks it is possible and fair in all the circumstances: R. v. Khan (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 92, 79 C.R. (3d) 1, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 531 (5:0).

In a case where the child testifies, her hearsay statement will be admissible if reasonably necessary and if there are indicia of reliability present. Reasonable necessity in this context refers to the need to obtain an accurate and frank rendition of the child's version of events pertaining to the alleged assault: Khan v. College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 10, 94 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 9 O.R. (3d) 641 (C.A.).

In R. v. A. (S.) (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 522, 17 C.R. (4th) 233, 11 O.R. (3d) 16 (C.A.) the court set out guidelines to assist the trial judge in directing the jury as to the use to be made of a hearsay complaint. The court recommended that the jury be told they must determine whether the statement was made and, if it was, its contents; that the statement cannot be placed on the same footing as a statement made by a witness in the course of her testimony since out-of-court statements made by persons who do not testify, offered for the truth of their contents, are subject to frailties which warrant a cautious approach; and that the weight to be given to the statement will be affected by the other evidence which may support or undermine the reliability of the statement.

SEXUAL INTERFERENCE.

151. Every person who, for a sexual purpose, touches, directly or indirectly, with a part of the body or with an object, any part of the body of a person under the age of fourteen years is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child. The term "sexual purpose" is not defined. The defences of consent and mistaken belief as to the age of the complainant are defined in s. 150.1. Under s. 150.1(3), a young offender aged 12 or 13 years may not be tried for an offence under subsec. (2) unless he is in a position of trust or authority. A person convicted of this offence, who is found to be loitering in or near a school ground, playground, public park or bathing area, is liable to be convicted of the vagrancy offence under s. 179. Section 170 creates an offence for a parent or guardian to procure a person under the age of 18 years for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code. Section 171 creates an offence for a householder and other similarly situated persons to permit a person under the age of 18 years to resort to premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to either the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) or to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant adopts its contents. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the offence of sexual interference with a person under 14 years and spells out the sentence for it. The offence may be committed by touching the complainant's body, directly or indirectly, with either a part of the accused's body or an object. It must be proven that the accused had a sexual purpose for the touching. This offence is punishable by way of summary conviction or by way of indictment. In the latter case, it is punishable by a maximum sentence of 10 years.

ANNOTATIONS

An accused who intends sexual interaction of any kind with a child and with that intent makes contact with the body of a child, "touches" the child within the meaning of this section, even where the sexual interaction is suggested by the child: R. v. Sears (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 62 (Man. C.A.).

Setting the age limit at 14 years is clearly reasonable and does not violate the Charter: R. G. (R. F.) (1992), 17 W.C.B. (2d) 188 (Alta. C.A.).

INVITATION TO SEXUAL TOUCHING.

152. Every person who, for a sexual purpose, invites, counsels or incites a person under the age of fourteen years to touch, directly or indirectly, with a part of the body or with an object, the body of any person, including the body of the person who so invites, counsels or incites and the body of the person under the age of fourteen years, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 1.

Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. cution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

SYNOPSIS

Section 152 provides for the offence of inviting, counselling or inciting a person under 14 years of age to touch, directly or indirectly, any person's body. The touching may be with a part of the body or with an object. The person inviting the touching must do so for a sexual purpose. The section applies regardless of whether the accused invites the touching of his or herself or another person or incites the person under 14 to touch their own body. Upon conviction, the maximum punishment is 10 years on indictment or the charge may be proceeded with by summary conviction.

ANNOTATIONS

This offence does not require proof of actual physical contact between body parts or an invitation to engage in that level of contact. This section covers not only actual touching but "indirect" touching and thus includes an invitation by the accused to the complainant to hold a tissue onto which the accused ejaculated: R. v. Fong (1994), 92 C.C.C. (3d) 171 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 94 C.C.C. (3d) 171.

SEXUAL EXPLOITATION / Definition of "young person".

153. (1) Every person who is in a position of trust or authority towards a young person or is a person with whom the young person is in a relationship of dependency and who

- (a) for a sexual purpose, touches, directly or indirectly, with a part of the body or with an object, any part of the body of the young person, or
- (b) for a sexual purpose, invites, counsels or incites a young person to touch, directly or indirectly, with a part of the body or with an object, the body of any person, including the body of the person who so invites, counsels or incites and the body of the young person, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) In this section, "young person" means a person fourteen years of age or more but under the age of eighteen years. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child or young person. The term "counsels" is defined in s. 22 and in fact includes "incite". The term "sexual purpose" is not defined. The terms "position of trust or authority" and "relationship of dependency" are not defined. The Report of the Committee on Sexual Offences Against Children and Youths [The "Badgley" Report], released in 1984, contained many recommendations concerning the treatment of sexual offences against children and appears to have been the origin of many of the offences now found in this Part. That report, in its Recommendation 9, had suggested a definition of person in position of trust as including parent; step-parent; adoptive parent; foster parent; legal guardian; common-law partner of child's parent, step-parent, adoptive parent, foster parent, or legal guardian; grandparent; uncle, aunt; boarder in young person's home; teacher; baby-sitter, group home worker; youth group worker; and employer. The defences of consent and mistaken belief as to the age of the complainant are defined in s. 150.1. A person convicted of this offence, who is found to be loitering in or near a school ground, playground, public park or bathing area, is liable to be convicted of the vagrancy offence under s. 179. Section 170 creates an offence for a parent or guardian to procure a person under the age of 18 years for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code. Section 171 creates an offence for a householder and other similarly situated persons to permit a person under the age of 18 years to resort to premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of the offence in this section, may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with an offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant, or any such witness, not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion, respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant nor under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant adopts its contents. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the hybrid offence of sexual exploitation of a young person. Section 153(2) provides a definition of “young person”, namely a person between 14 and 17 years old inclusive. The offence is predicated upon either the accused being in a position of trust toward the young complainant or the young person being in a relationship of dependency with the accused. If either relationship exists and the accused commits acts amounting to either sexual interference (s. 151) or invitation to sexual touching (s. 152) then the offence is committed. (Note that it must be shown that the accused had a sexual purpose.) The maximum sentence upon conviction for the indictable offence of sexual exploitation is five years.

ANNOTATIONS

Sexual assault, as defined by s. 271, is not an included offence to the offence created by this section: R. v. Nelson (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 150 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Unlike sexual assault, as defined by s. 271, the offence created by this section is a specific intent offence: R. v. Nelson, supra.

The combined effect of this section and s. 150.1(1) does not result in violation of the equality provisions of s. 15 of the Charter, although some professions, such as teachers, are treated differently since the defence that the complainant consented is denied them. Nor does the denial of the consent defence violate s. 7 of the Charter: R. v. Hann (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 355, 15 C.R. (4th) 355, 11 C.R.R. (2d) 140 (Nfld. C.A.).

Although the accused was physically bigger than the complainant and ran the arcade where the complainant was employed, it was not shown that the accused was in a position of trust or authority or that the young person was in a relationship of dependency: R. v. Caskenette (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 439, 43 W.A.C. 217 (B.C.C.A.).

It was a question of fact whether the accused was in a position of trust or authority towards the 17 year old daughter of his common law wife and whether she was in a relationship of dependency although they lived in the same house. The relationship of trust or authority on the part of the man or dependency on the part of the complainant could not be conclusively presumed to exist as a matter of law: R. v. J. (R.H.) (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 354, 27 C.R. (4th) 40, 60 W.A.C. 272 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 29 C.R. (4th) 400n, 88 W.A.C. 160n.

The term "dependency" is to be read ejusdem generis with two other categories of trust or authority and contemplates a relationship in which there is a de facto reliance by a young person on a figure who has assumed a position of power, such as trust or authority over the young person along non-traditional lines. The disempowering condition of dependency must exist independently of a sexual relationship: R. v. Galbraith (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 76, 30 C.R. (4th) 230 sub nom. R. v. G.(C.), 18 O.R. (3d) 247 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 92 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

INCEST / Punishment / Defence / Definition of "brother" and "sister".

155. (1) Every one commits incest who, knowing that another person is by blood relationship his or her parent, child, brother, sister, grandparent or grandchild, as the case may be, has sexual intercourse with that person.

(2) Every one who commits incest is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(3) No accused shall be determined by a court to be guilty of an offence under this section if the accused was under restraint, duress or fear of the person with whom the accused had the sexual intercourse at the time the sexual intercourse occurred.

(4) In this section, "brother" and "sister", respectively, include half-brother and half-sister. R.S., c. C-34, s. 150; 1972, c. 13, s. 10; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 21.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Section 4(5) sets out a definition for sexual intercourse.

The accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515. Section 170 creates an offence for a parent or guardian to procure a person under the age of 18 years for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code. Section 171 creates an offence for a householder and other similarly situated persons to permit a person under the age of 18 years to resort to premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code.

A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to the mandatory prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under 18 years of age at the time of the alleged offence and adopts the contents of the videotape while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

ANNOTATIONS

This provision does not violate s. 7 of the Charter. In addition, the denial of the defence of consent does not violate s. 7; R. v. F.(R.P.) (unreported, February 21, 1996, N.S.C.A.) [096/074/018-24 pp.].

ANAL INTERCOURSE / Exception / Idem.

159. (1) Every person who engages in an act of anal intercourse is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to any act engaged in, in private, between

- (a) husband and wife, or
- (b) any two persons, each of whom is eighteen years of age or more, both of whom consent to the act.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2),

- (a) an act shall be deemed not to have been engaged in in private if it is engaged in in a public place or if more than two persons take part or are present; and
- (b) a person shall be deemed not to consent to an act
  - (i) if the consent is extorted by force, threats or fear of bodily harm or is obtained by false and fraudulent misrepresentations respecting the nature and quality of the act, or
  - (ii) if the court is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that that person could not have consented to the act by reason of mental disability. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child or young person. The defence of mistake as to age is set out in s. 150.1(5). The term "public place" is defined in s. 150. The term "mental disability" is not defined although there is a definition of "feeble-minded person" in s. 2. Section 170 creates an offence for a parent or guardian to procure a person under the age of 18 years for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code. Section 171 creates an offence for a householder and other similarly situated persons to permit a person under the age of 18 years to resort to premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to the mandatory prohibition order under s. 100(1) or the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under 18 years of age at the time of the alleged offence and adopts the contents of the videotape while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

Section 159 creates the offence of anal intercourse and also sets out a number of exemptions from its application. Section 159(1) sets out the prohibition against anal intercourse and provides for prosecution by way of summary conviction procedure or by indictment. In the latter case the maximum sentence is 10 years.

Section 159(2) provides an exemption from liability if the acts were done in private, with the mutual consent of those involved, by either husband and wife or by two persons both of whom are at least 18 years old.

Section 159(3) limits the scope of the exceptions in subsec. (2) in two ways. First, the meaning of “private” excludes acts done in a public place, or with more than two persons present. Second, s. 159(3)(b) limits what is meant by “consent”. The accused cannot rely upon consent if it is proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the other person was unable to consent due to mental disability. In addition, consent is rendered invalid if it was obtained by force, threats, fear or fraud.

ANNOTATIONS

Burden of proof of exception – It was held in R. v. Volk (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 395, 24 C.R.N.S. 166, [1973] 6 W.W.R. 29 (Alta. C.A.), and Duchesne v. The Queen (1976), 36 C.R.N.S. 365 (Que. C.A.), in relation to the predecessor to subsec. (2), that the burden of proof of this exception was upon the accused. This conclusion was reached by relying upon s. 794(2) which, however, would appear applicable only to summary conviction proceedings and both of those cases concerned the former indictable offence of gross indecency. It may be that these cases must, in any event, be reassessed in light of s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In R. v. Khadikin (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 154 (B.C.S.C.), it was held that the exception did not on its face offend s. 11(d) and, in the circumstances of the case, it was not necessary to consider the constitutionality of s. 794(2).

Public place – In R. v. P., [1968] 3 C.C.C. 129 (Man. C.A.), which involved a charge of gross indecency prior to the enactment of this section the majority was of the view that the act was committed in private where although a third person was present he was in a drunken stupor and was totally unaware of and incapable of observing the act and notwithstanding the police officers arriving at the accused’s residence were able to observe the act through a window.

A locked cubicle in a subway washroom into which the public could see is a public place: R. v. Hogg (1970), 15 C.R.N.S. 106 (Ont. C.A.); as is an alcove used by the staff of a public beach even where the act is committed late at night, the alcove being open and accessible to people: R. v. Goguen (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 570, [1977] 5 W.W.R. 430 (B.C.C.A.) where it was also held that the definition of “public place” set out in s. 138

[now s. 150] was not exhaustive and the court may resort to the ordinary meaning of those words.

Application of the Charter of Rights – It was held in R. v. M.(C.) (1995), 98 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 41 C.R. (4th) 134, 23 O.R. (3d) 629 (C.A.) that this section discriminates on the basis of age contrary to s. 15 of the Charter and is therefore of no force and effect.

BESTIALITY / Compelling the commission of bestiality / Bestiality in presence of or by child.

160. (1) Every person who commits bestiality is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every person who compels another to commit bestiality is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), every person who, in the presence of a person under the age of fourteen years, commits bestiality or who incites a person under the age of fourteen years to commit bestiality is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The term "incites" is within the definition of "counsels" in s. 22(3). A person convicted of the offence under subsec. (2) or (3), who is found to be loitering in or near a school ground, playground, public park or bathing area, is liable to be convicted of the vagrancy offence under s. 179. Section 170 creates an offence for a parent or guardian to procure a person under the age of 18 years for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code. Section 171 creates an offence for a householder and other similarly situated persons to permit a person under the age of 18 years to resort to premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person, found guilty of the offence in this section, may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to either the mandatory prohibition order under s. 100(1) or the discretionary prohibition order prescribed by s. 100(2) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. Where the accused is convicted or given a discharge for the offence under subsec. (2) or (3) in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age.

Section 150.1(4) deals with the defence of mistake of age for the offence under subsec. (3).

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting the offences in subsec. (2) and (3). Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under subsec. (2) and (3). Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under subsec. (2) and (3). Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under subsec. (2) or (3), a videotape, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under 18 years of age at the time of alleged offence and adopts the contents of the videotape while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

ANNOTATIONS

The offence of bestiality may be committed although the accused and the animal are of the same gender. Further, this offence being one of “general intent” drunkenness is no defence to either the full offence or an attempt: R. v. Triller (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 411 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

161. (old provision) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 4.]

ORDER OF PROHIBITION / Duration of prohibition / Court may vary order/Offence.

161. (1) Where an offender is convicted, or is discharged on the conditions prescribed in a probation order under section 736, of an offence under section 151, 152, 155 or 159, subsection 160(2) or (3) or section 170, 171, 271, 272 or 273, in respect of a person who is under the age of fourteen years, the court that sentences the offender or directs that the accused be discharged, as the case may be, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for that offence or any other condition prescribed in the order of discharge, shall consider making and may make, subject to the conditions or exemptions that the court directs, an order prohibiting the offender from

- (a) attending a public park or public swimming area where persons under the age of fourteen years are present or can reasonably be expected to be present, or a daycare centre, schoolground, playground or community centre; or
- (b) seeking, obtaining or continuing any employment, whether or not the employment is remunerated, or becoming or being a volunteer in a capacity, that involves being in a position of trust or authority towards persons under the age of fourteen years.

(2) The prohibition may be for life or for any shorter duration that the court considers desirable and, in the case of a prohibition that is not for life, the prohibition begins on the later of

- (a) the date on which the order is made; and
- (b) where the offender is sentenced to a term of imprisonment, the date on which the offender is released from imprisonment for the offence, including release on parole, mandatory supervision or statutory release.

(3) A court that makes an order of prohibition or, where the court is for any reason unable to act, another court of equivalent jurisdiction in the same province, may, on application of the offender or the prosecutor, require the offender to appear before it at any time and, after hearing the parties, that court may vary the conditions prescribed in the order if, in the opinion of the court, the variation is desirable because of changed circumstances after the conditions were prescribed.

(4) Every person who is bound by an order of prohibition and who does not comply with the order is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. 1993, c. 45, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. 1-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child.

By virtue of s. 20(11) of the Young Offenders Act, an order cannot be made under this section with respect to a young offender. Under s. 810.1, a person may apply to a provincial court judge for an order requiring the defendant to enter into a recognizance including conditions resembling the conditions which can be imposed as part of a prohibition order under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This provision permits the court to make an order prohibiting the offender from attending near certain public places and other facilities where persons under 14 years of age may be present and from obtaining employment which may involve the offender being in a position of trust or authority over persons under 14 years of age. The order may be made where the offender is found guilty of a specified sexual offence and the complainant was under 14 years of age. The order may be for life or some shorter period and its terms may be varied upon application of the offender or the prosecutor. Failure to comply with the prohibition order is a Crown option offence. It would seem that this section will now be resorted to rather than s. 179(b) which has been held to be unconstitutional by the British Columbia Court of Appeal.

  - (c) offers to sell, advertises or publishes an advertisement of, or has for sale or disposal, any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a method of causing abortion or miscarriage; or
  - (d) advertises or publishes an advertisement of any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a method for restoring sexual virility or curing venereal diseases or diseases of the generative organs.
- (3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section if the public good was served by the acts that are alleged to constitute the offence and if the acts alleged did not extend beyond what served the public good.
- (4) For the purposes of this section, it is a question of law whether an act served the public good and whether there is evidence that the act alleged went beyond what served the public good, but it is a question of fact whether the acts did or did not extend beyond what served the public good.
- (5) For the purposes of this section, the motives of an accused are irrelevant.
- (6) [Repealed. 1993, c. 46, s. 1.]
- (7) In this section, “crime comic” means a magazine, periodical or book that exclusively or substantially comprises matter depicting pictorially
- (a) the commission of crimes, real or fictitious; or
  - (b) events connected with the commission of crimes, real or fictitious, whether occurring before or after the commission of the crime.
- (8) For the purposes of this Act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene. R.S., c. C-34, s. 159; 1993, c. 46, s. 1.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined by s. 4(3). The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 169. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 [although note the maximum fine for a corporation is determined by s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. This offence is an enterprise crime offence for the purposes of Part XII.2 and the offence in subsec. (1)(a) may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 and a warrant for video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5). Section 584 deals with the sufficiency of an indictment in relation to obscene written material and s. 587(1)(d) provides for the ordering of particulars in such cases.

Section 164 enacts an alternative procedure, “in rem” proceedings, for determination of whether or not a publication is obscene or a crime comic. Where an order has been made under s. 164 then no proceedings may be taken under this section except with the consent of the Attorney General. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. Section 165 makes it an offence to refuse to supply publications to a person because he refuses to purchase or acquire publications which he believes to be obscene or a crime comic. Section 166 makes it an offence to publish certain material calculated to injure public morals or in relation to marital and similar proceedings. Section 167 makes it an offence to take part in immoral theatrical performances. Section 168 makes it an offence to use the mail for the purpose of transmitting obscene material. Wilfully doing an indecent act is an offence under s. 173. Public nudity is an offence under s. 174. Exposing an indecent exhibition is an offence under s. 175(1)(b). Child pornography is dealt with in s. 163.1.

SYNOPSIS

Section 163 makes it an offence to produce, publish or distribute obscene things or crime comics.

Section 163(1)(a) is very broadly worded to prohibit all phases of the making, printing, publication, distribution and circulation, and the possession of obscene things, with the intention of doing any of the prohibited activities. The prohibited class of obscene things is expansive, covering written material, pictures, models, records or "any other thing whatsoever". Section 163(8) provides the sole definition of what is deemed to be obscene. It states that if a dominant characteristic of the publication is the undue exploitation of sex, or the combination of sex and at least one of crime, horror, cruelty or violence. The acts described within the section have received a broad interpretation, as reflected, for example, by a decision stating that the display of such objects in plain view within a store amounts to publication.

Section 163(1)(b), which deals with crime comics, prohibits many aspects of the publication process including the distribution and sale of crime comics, or their possession for such purposes. Section 163(7) defines what constitutes a crime comic.

Section 163(5) makes the accused's motives irrelevant. Subsection (6) purports to state that it is no defence that the accused was ignorant of the nature or presence of obscene content of the thing or of the crime comic. However, decisions made under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms have held that this subsection is unconstitutional and have established that it is a defence if the accused made an honest and reasonable mistake of fact. A mistake of law, which causes the accused to believe that the material he or she knows the nature or presence of is not obscene or a crime comic, is not a defence.

Section 163(2) makes it an offence to knowingly and without lawful justification or excuse engage in any of the acts listed in this subsection, which relate to obscenity, indecent objects, drugs and other things used to induce (or said to be useful to induce) abortions or miscarriages, and a number of other specified sex related materials.

Section 163(3) provides a defence if the accused establishes that the acts which make out the offence under this section served the public good, and extended no further than was required to achieve that objective. Subsection (4) states that whether an act served the public good, and whether there is any evidence that the act extended beyond what was required to achieve that end, are questions of law. That means that in a jury trial these issues would be determined by the trial judge. However, the subsection also provides that if it is determined that there is some evidence, the decision as to whether the act actually extended beyond what was needed to achieve the public good is a question of fact and will, therefore, be determined by the trier of fact.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) / Elements of offence generally / Distinction between subsecs. (1) and (2)—There is a difference between selling or having in possession for the purpose of selling contrary to subsec. (2) and distributing contrary to subsec. (1): Fraser et al. v. The Queen, [1967] 2 C.C.C. 42, 59 D.L.R. (2d) 240 (S.C.C.) (5:0).

In R. v. Dorosz (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 203, 14 C.R.N.S. 357 (Ont. C.A.), the evidence upon conviction of possession of obscene matter for the purpose of distribution was simply the display for sale in a variety store of certain obscene publications. It was held (2:1) that Parliament had drawn a line in the chain from production to consumption of such material by virtue of mutually exclusive subsecs. (1) and (2), with the result that although the omission of proof of knowledge of obscenity is directed against the maker, circulator and distributor, that element must be proven against the person through whose hands the publication must finally pass before public consumption. Furthermore, it was the unanimous view of the Court that in any event the retail store clerk is not a distributor. Also see R. v. Sudbury News Service Ltd. (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 18 O.R. (2d) 428 (C.A.).

Meaning of “circulates” and “distributes” – A private showing of obscene films in the accused’s home does not constitute circulation: R. v. Rioux, [1970] 3 C.C.C. 149, 8 C.R.N.S. 21 (S.C.C.).

While the mere renting of video movie cassettes may not constitute the offence under this paragraph, the offence was made out where the accused copied tapes for rental to other persons: R. v. Harris and Lighthouse Video Centres Ltd. (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 57 C.R. (3d) 356 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused December 7, 1987.

Mens rea and mistake of fact – The rental of video movie cassettes comes within the meaning of distribution or circulation in this subsection: R. v. Video Moviestop (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 87, 36 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 321 (Nfld. S.C. T.D.). Contra: R. v. Household-ers T.V. and Appliances Ltd. et al. (1984), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 561 (Ont. Co. Ct.), affd 20 C.C.C. (3d) 571 (C.A.).

While an intent to publish is not an element of all the offences created by this subsection, such as the offence of making, where the crown has framed its information to allege making an obscene publication, the allegation of publication cannot be said to be mere surplusage and the accused was entitled to be discharged where there was no evidence of publication or intent to publish: Hawshaw v. The Queen (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 51 C.R. (3d) 289, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 668 (7:0).

In R. v. Metro News Ltd. (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 35, 53 C.R. (3d) 289, 32 D.L.R. (4th) 321 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C., D.L.R. loc. cit., while the court held that subsec. (6) was unconstitutional as it had the effect of making the offences under this subsection absolute liability offences, nevertheless this holding did not have the effect of requiring the crown to prove mens rea. Rather, the act of distributing matter which is in fact obscene prima facie imports the offence, but it is open to an accused to avoid criminal liability by raising a reasonable doubt that he acted under an honest and reasonable belief in a state of facts which, if it had been as he believed them to be, would make his act innocent. However an accused’s belief that the magazine did not exceed the community standards of tolerance and was not obscene did not constitute a reasonable mistake of fact nor give rise to a defence of due diligence. Whether a publication unduly exploits sex under subsec. (8) or whether the allegedly obscene matter exceeded the community’s standard of tolerance constitutes a value judgment to which the doctrine of mistake of fact is inapplicable. An accused’s belief that the publication was not legally obscene is not a defence.

Where a distributor delegates to an advisory committee the decision whether or not a publication is obscene, the knowledge of the committee as to the contents of the publication is imputed to the distributor: R. v. Regina News Ltd. (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 170, 62 Sask. R. (C.A.).

Subsec. (2) / Meaning of “knowingly” – The offence of “knowingly” selling obscene material requires proof of knowledge with respect to all aspects of the actus reus. It is not sufficient that the accused was aware that the dominant characteristic of the material was the exploitation of sex as the sale of such material is lawful. The Crown must show that the seller of the obscene material was aware of the relevant facts that made the material obscene. In the case of pornographic films and videos, it cannot easily be inferred that those selling the materials know their contents. While it may be inferred that the retailer is aware that the materials are erotic or pornographic and deal with the exploitation of sex, selling films dealing with the exploitation of sex is not illegal unless the material is obscene. Not only must the dominant characteristic of the material be the exploitation of sex, but the exploitation of sex must be undue. To prove knowledge, the Crown must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused knew that the materials being sold have the qualities or contain the specific scenes which render such material obscene in law. This does not require proof that the retailer actually viewed the tapes. Knowledge can be proven by circumstantial evidence. In addition, in proper circumstances, the Crown can rely upon the principles of willful blindness. Where the accused knew of the presence of the ingredients of the subject-matter which rendered the exploitation of sex undue and thus obscene, the fact that the material had been approved by the provincial film review board does not constitute a lawful justification or excuse nor negative the necessary mens rea: R. v. Jorgensen, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 55, 102 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 43 C.R. (4th) 137.

Expose to public view – An obscene film was not exposed to public view within the meaning of this subsection where it was only shown to friends and relatives of the groom attending a private “stag party”. The hall in which the film was shown was, at the time, not open to the public, but rather, was used for a private gathering. In this respect, the definition of “private” in the Oxford English Dictionary as “. . . kept or removed from public view . . . not within the cognizance of people generally . . . not open to the public; intended only for the use of particular and privileged persons” accurately described the circumstances in which the film was shown: R. v. Harrison (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 26, [1973] 4 W.W.R. 439 (Alta. Dist. Ct.).

On the other hand, where an obscene film was shown not only to invited guests but to others who merely paid an admission charge then there was an exposure to public view: R. v. Vigue, 13 C.C.C. (2d) 381, 24 C.R.N.S. 210, [1973] 6 W.W.R. 573 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

Disgusting object, indecent show (para. b) – The offence created by para. (b) of exhibiting an indecent show is not so vague as to be an unconstitutional infringement of freedom of expression as guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The test to be applied in determining indecency is that of the community standard of tolerance. A relevant consideration in applying that test is the nature of the audience, the issue being whether the show is inappropriate according to Canadian standards of tolerance because of the context in which it takes place: R. v. Pelletier (1985), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 77, 49 C.R. (3d) 253, [1986] R.J.Q. 595 (C.A.).

The word “disgusting” was held to have a known dictionary as well as judicial meaning and, therefore, not to violate the due process guarantee under the Canadian Bill of Rights: R. v. Isaacs' Gallery Ltd. (1975), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 570 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [1975] 1 S.C.R. ix, 5 N.R. 122.

The offence of exhibiting a disgusting object is unconstitutionally vague and violates ss. 2(b) and 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and is of no force and effect: R. v. Glassman and Bogoy (1986), 53 C.R. (3d) 164 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

Note: Also see notes under ss. 174 and 175.

Subsec. (3) (public good) – Where, although the book has certain literary merit particularly for the more sophisticated reader, it was available for the general public to whom the book was neither symbolism nor a psychological study the accused cannot rely on the defence of public good: R. v. Delorme (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 350, 21 C.R.N.S. 305 (Que. C.A.) (2:1).

In R. v. American News Co. Ltd. (1957), 118 C.C.C. 152, 25 C.R. 374 (Ont. C.A.), Laidlaw J.A. adopted as a definition of the words “public good” a formula used in Stephen’s Digest of Criminal Law, namely, “necessary or advantageous to religion or morality to the administration of justice, the pursuit of science, literature or art, or other objects of general interest”.

Subsec. (6) – This subsection is of no force and effect by reason of its inconsistency with s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Metro News Ltd. (1986), 29 C.C.C. (3d) 35, 53 C.R. (3d) 289, 32 D.L.R. (4th) 321 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C., D.L.R. loc. cit.; R. v. St. John News Co. Ltd. (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 234, 16 D.L.R. (4th) 248 (N.B.Q.B.). Contra: R. v. Red Hot Video Ltd. (1984), 11

C.C.C. (3d) 389, 38 C.R. (3d) 275 (B.C.Co.Ct.), affd on other grounds 18 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 45 C.R. (3d) 36 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [1985] 2 S.C.R. x.

Subsec. (8) [definition of obscenity] / Test for obscenity – In Towne Cinema Theatres Ltd. v. The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 45 C.R. (3d) 1, [1985] 4 W.W.R. 1 (S.C.C.) (7:0) the Court considered the community standards test embodied in this section as it related to a film which had been shown in a commercial theatre with the approval of the provincial censor board. While several of the members of the Court gave reasons, there was agreement among the majority of the Court that the community standard test is a test of tolerance – not what Canadians think is right for themselves to see but what Canadians would not abide other Canadians seeing because it would be beyond the contemporary Canadian standards of tolerance to allow them to see it.

In R. v. Butler (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 11 C.R. (4th) 137, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 452 the court laid down a new comprehensive interpretation of subsec. (8). It would appear that this test is to be applied in two stages. The first stage involves a determination of whether the particular material involves the undue exploitation of sex. The second stage requires application of a test of “internal necessities”. For the purposes of this definition, the court referred to three categories of pornography: (1) explicit sex with violence; (2) explicit sex without violence but which subjects people to treatment that is degrading or dehumanizing; and (3) explicit sex without violence that is neither degrading nor dehumanizing. Violence in this context includes both actual physical violence and threats of physical violence. In applying the definition to the three categories, the courts must determine what the community would tolerate others being exposed to on the basis of the degree of harm that may flow from such exposure. Harm in this context means that it predisposes persons to act in an anti-social manner as, for example, the physical or mental mistreatment of women by men or possibly the reverse. Anti-social conduct for this purpose is conduct which society formally recognizes as incompatible with its proper functioning. The stronger the inference of risk of harm, the lesser the likelihood of tolerance. Material falling in the first category will almost always constitute the undue exploitation of sex. Explicit sex which is degrading or dehumanizing may be undue if the risk of harm is substantial. Explicit sex that is not violent and neither degrading nor dehumanizing is generally tolerated and will not fall within the definition unless it employs children in its production. If material is not obscene under this framework, it does not become so by reason of the person to whom it is or may be shown or exposed nor by reason of the place or manner in which it is shown. Even if the work contains sexually explicit material that, by itself, would constitute the undue exploitation of sex, the portrayal of sex must then be viewed in context to determine whether that is the dominant theme of the work as a whole [the “internal necessities” test]. In other words, is undue exploitation of sex the main object of the work or is this portrayal of sex essential to a wider artistic, literary, or other similar purpose? Again, the community standards test applies at this stage, the court having to determine whether the sexually explicit material, when viewed in the context of the whole work, would be tolerated by the community as a whole. Since artistic expression rests at the heart of freedom of expression values, any doubt in this regard must be resolved in favour of freedom of expression.

Videotapes which merely display a large number of explicit sexual acts in a non-violent consensual manner, although devoid of any loving or affectionate relationship or any plot of meaningful value, are not necessarily degrading or dehumanizing. Further, even if the material could be found to be degrading or dehumanizing, it will not necessarily be found to be obscene. The material must also create a substantial risk of harm to society. Like any element of criminal allegation, it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt and that proof must be found in the evidence adduced at trial. It does not follow from proof of portrayal of sexually explicit acts in a degrading or dehumanizing manner that the films are harmful and therefore obscene. It is open to the court to find that the harm component of the offence is not established. Where the participants appear as fully willing participants occupying substantially equal roles in a setting devoid of violence, bondage or bestiality or sex associated with crime, horror, cruelty, coercion or children, the risk of societal harm may not be evident. Further evidence may be required to prove that exposure to the impugned material will create a substantial risk of an identifiable harm that may cause persons to act in a manner inimical to the proper functioning of society. The question is essentially one of degree but the onus remains on the crown to prove that the offence is made out: R. v. Hawkins (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 246, 26 C.R. (4th) 75, 15 O.R. (3d) 549 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 66 O.A.C. 46.

Effect of audience to which publication directed – The audience viewing a publication is not relevant in determining whether the publication is obscene. Thus, the fact that articles were for sale in a store restricted to adults did not prevent a finding that the articles were obscene: Germain v. The Queen (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 21 D.L.R. (4th) 296 (S.C.C.) (9:0); R. v. Butler, supra.

Application of subsection to articles other than publications – It was held in Hawshaw v. The Queen (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 51 C.R. (3d) 289, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 668 (7:0) that this subsection sets out the sole test for obscenity in charges under the Criminal Code whether based on publication or not, thus clearing up the issue left open in several earlier cases such as Dechow v. The Queen (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 22, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 951, 76 D.L.R. (3d) 1 and Germain v. The Queen, supra.

Proof of community standards – The Crown is not required to adduce expert evidence as to community standards. In a case involving an alleged obscene motion picture, the trial judge must consider the evidence, adduced by the defence from the chairman of the provincial censor board, as it may have been indicative of community standards of tolerance: Towne Cinema Theatres Ltd. v. The Queen, supra; R. v. Butler, supra.

The basis upon which the provincial film classification director approved or disapproved of a film for public showing is evidence which the jury may consider in determining the issue of obscenity (Robertson, J.A., dissenting upon this specific point) but his lawful approval of the film cannot amount to justification or excuse on the part of the accused. However the Court was of the unanimous view that evidence of the criteria employed by the film classification director in determining his classification of the film was admissible as relevant to show the standard of the community with respect to the acceptance of the film for display to the public: R. v. McFall (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 181 (B.C.C.A.). Similarly R. v. Hawkins, supra. Also see R. v. Jorgensen, supra.

When judging novels, the opinions of literary persons are most helpful as they assist the trier of fact in relating the offending passages to the entire work and in deciding whether, taking the novel as a whole, the exploitation of sex is a dominant characteristic at all or whether, in the light of its theme and literary merit, the work is tolerable. Similar evidence is valuable in respect of works of art. Opinion evidence respecting community standards of tolerance is less helpful, since it relates to something which is probably incapable of scientific proof and may be based on little more than the personal views of the witness. In the final analysis, it is for the trier of fact to determine what is the prevailing standard of tolerance: R. v. Penthouse International Ltd. (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 111, 96 D.L.R. (3d) 735, 23 O.R. (2d) 786 (C.A.).

Application of Charter of Rights – The prohibition on obscene material as defined by subsec. (8) infringes freedom of expression but constitutes a reasonable limit prescribed by law within the meaning of s. 1: R. v. Butler, supra.

163.1 (1) In this section, "child pornography" means

- (a) a photographic, film, video or other visual representation, whether or not it was made by electronic or mechanical means,
    - (i) that shows a person who is or is depicted as being under the age of eighteen years and is engaged in or is depicted as engaged in explicit sexual activity, or
    - (ii) the dominant characteristic of which is the depiction, for a sexual purpose, of a sexual organ or the anal region of a person under the age of eighteen years; or
  - (b) any written material or visual representation that advocates or counsels sexual activity with a person under the age of eighteen years that would be an offence under this Act.
- (2) Every person who makes, prints, publishes or possesses for the purpose of publication any child pornography is guilty of
- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; or
  - (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (3) Every person who imports, distributes, sells or possesses for the purpose of distribution or sale any child pornography is guilty of

- (6) Where the accused is charged with an offence under subsection (2), (3) or (4), the court shall find the accused not guilty if the representation or written material that is alleged to constitute child pornography has artistic merit or an educational, scientific or medical purpose.
- (7) Subsections 163(3) to (5) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, with respect to an offence under subsection (2), (3) or (4), 1993, c. 46. s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Possession is defined by s. 4(3). For notes on procedure on arrest and trial for this offence, see the notes under s. 163.

Section 164 enacts an alternative procedure, “in rem” proceedings, for determination of whether or not the representation or written material is child pornography. The offences in this section are enterprise crime offences for the purposes of Part XII.2 and may be the basis for obtaining an authorization to intercept private communications or a warrant for video surveillance.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates various offences relating to child pornography which is defined in subsec. (1). To determine whether the material offends para. (b) of the definition, resort will have to be made to the various sexual offences of the Code: ss. 151, 152, 153, 155, 159, 160, 170, 171, 172, and 271 to 273. Subsections (2) and (3) correspond to the similar offences under s. 163 and notes under that section should be referred to in determining whether the material has, for example, been published. Subsection (4) creates an offence of simple possession of child pornography. Subsection (5) allows for a limited defence of reasonable mistake of fact as to the age of the persons depicted. Subsection (6) explicitly recognizes a defence of artistic merit or educational, scientific or medical purposes. A similar defence had been recognized by the courts under s. 163, although it was not expressly provided for. Pursuant to subsec. (7), the defence of public good in s. 163(3) is incorporated by reference. For notes on that defence, see s. 163.

ANNOTATIONS

Application of Charter of Rights – Although this section infringes the guarantee to freedom of expression in s. 2(b) of the Charter, it constitutes a reasonable limit and is therefore valid: Ontario (Attorney General) v. Langer (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 290, 123 D.L.R. (4th) 289, 40 C.R. (4th) 204 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 100 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 126 D.L.R. (4th) vii.

Artistic merit defence – As with the definition of obscenity under s. 163, the determination of artistic merit in the context of child pornography under this section must include consideration of contemporary standards of community tolerance. Determination of artistic merit must be made on an objective basis. Thus, the creator of the work must not only have had an artistic purpose, but also have produced something with actual artistic merit: Ontario (Attorney General) v. Langer, supra.

- (a) any publication, copies of which are kept for sale or distribution in premises within the jurisdiction of the court, is obscene or a crime comic, within the meaning of section 163, or
- (b) any representation or written material, copies of which are kept in premises within the jurisdiction of the court, is child pornography within the meaning of section 163.1, shall issue a warrant authorizing seizure of the copies.

(2) Within seven days of the issue of the warrant under subsection (1), the judge shall issue a summons to the occupier of the premises requiring him to appear before the court and show cause why the matter seized should not be forfeited to Her Majesty.

(3) The owner and the maker of the matter seized under subsection (1), and alleged to be obscene, a crime comic or child pornography, may appear and be represented in the proceedings in order to oppose the making of an order for the forfeiture of the matter.

(4) If the court is satisfied that the publication, representation or written material referred to in subsection (1) is obscene, a crime comic or child pornography, it shall make an order declaring the matter forfeited to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the proceedings take place, for disposal as the Attorney General may direct.

(5) If the court is not satisfied that the publication, representation or written material referred to in subsection (1) is obscene, a crime comic or child pornography, it shall order that the matter be restored to the person from whom it was seized forthwith after the time for final appeal has expired.

(6) An appeal lies from an order made under subsection (4) or (5) by any person who appeared in the proceedings

- (a) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of law alone,
  - (b) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of fact alone, or
  - (c) on any ground of appeal that involves a question of mixed law and fact,
- as if it were an appeal against conviction or against a judgment or verdict of acquittal, as the case may be, on a question of law alone under Part XXI and sections 673 to 696 apply with such modifications as the circumstances require.

(7) Where an order has been made under this section by a judge in a province with respect to one or more copies of a publication, representation or written material, no proceedings shall be instituted or continued in that province under section 163 or 163.1 with respect to those or other copies of the same publication, representation or written material without the consent of the Attorney General.

(8) In this section,
“court” means

- (a) in the Province of Quebec, the Court of Quebec, the municipal court of Montreal and the municipal court of Quebec,
- (a.1) in the Province of Ontario, the Ontario Court (General Division),
- (b) in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Court of Queen’s Bench,
- (c) in the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, the Trial Division of the Supreme Court,
- (c.1) [Repealed. 1992, c. 51, s. 34.]
- (d) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the Supreme Court;

NOTE: Definition “court” amended 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999) by re-enacting para. (d). The text of para. (d), which is not yet in force and therefor printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (d) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, the Supreme Court;

“crime comic” has the same meaning as it has in section 163;

“judge” means a judge of a court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 160; 1974-75-76, c. 48, s. 25; 1978-79, c. 11, s. 10; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (2nd Supp.), s. 10; c. 40 (4th Supp.), s. 2; 1990, c. 16, s. 3; 1990, c. 17, s. 9; 1992, c. 1, s. 58; 1992, c. 51, s. 34; 1993, c. 46, s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The definition of obscenity is in s. 163(8) and of child pornography in s. 163.1(1). Attorney General is defined in s. 2. An ordinary search warrant to search for evidence of the obscenity and child pornography offences under other sections of the Criminal Code may be obtained under ss. 487 and 487.1 [Re Video Movies Ltd. and The Queen (1984), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 351 (N.B.Q.B.)]. The procedure in this section relates only to the in rem proceedings.

SYNOPSIS

This provision authorizes special search and seizure powers in relation to obscene publications, crime comics and child pornography and for the restoration or forfeiture of seized items.

Section 164(1) permits a judge to issue a warrant to seize crime comics, obscene publications and child pornography located at a place within the jurisdiction of the judge. The procedure is like that usually employed in the issuance of warrants. It requires that after receiving information on oath the judge is to be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe there are copies of any publication kept for sale or distribution at the place to be searched. Subsection (8) provides definitions of the terms “judge”, “court”, and “crime comic” for the purposes of this section.

Section 164(2) commences the in rem forfeiture proceedings the details of which are set out in the rest of this section. The judge shall issue a summons within seven days of the issuance of the search warrant, to the occupier of the searched premises, requiring that person to show cause why the items should not be forfeited. Despite the wording of this subsection it has been determined that the onus remains on the Crown.

Section 164(3) permits the owner and author of the seized items to be represented in the forfeiture proceedings and oppose the proposed forfeiture.

Section 164(4) provides that if the court is satisfied that the seized items are either obscene or crime comics it shall make an order of forfeiture, and the Attorney General will direct the disposal of the items. However, if the court is not satisfied that the items come within the prohibited categories then the items shall be restored to the person from whom they were seized (subsec. (5)). An order under this subsection will not be made until the time for launching an appeal has passed. Subsection (6) provides for a right of appeal to any one who appeared in the proceedings as if it was an indictable appeal under Part XXI with such modifications as are required. The grounds of appeal are the broadest possible, ranging from questions of fact to questions of law, or a mixture of the two. The incorporation of the sections relating to indictable appeals specified in this subsection also incorporates an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, but only on the usual ground, i.e., a question of law, and not the broader grounds permitted in the initial level of appeal.

Section 164(7) provides that where a judge has made an order of restoration or forfeiture under this section no prosecution under s. 163 (which prohibits possessing obscene items or crime comics for certain purposes) may be brought in relation to the same publication unless the Attorney General consents.

ANNOTATIONS

Sufficiency of warrant – The warrant under this subsection must specify the publications and the phrase “and others” following certain titles will be severed from the warrant as being too indefinite: Re Laborde and The Queen (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 86, [1972] 4 W.W.R. 290 sub nom. Laborde v. Bendas (Sask. Q.B.).

For the purposes of this section a video tape is not a “publication”: Re Video Movies Ltd. and The Queen, supra. Contra: R. v. Nicols (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 555, 43 C.R. (3d) 54 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Procedure on in rem proceedings – The summons must be returnable before the Court and not a Judge in Chambers: Belding v. The Queen (1976), 37 C.R.N.S. 229, 16 N.B.R. (2d) 8 (S.C. App. Div.).

Despite the wording of this subsection calling for the owner to “show cause” why the matter should not be forfeited, the burden of proof is on the Crown to show that the material is obscene and the ordinary rules of evidence apply: R. v. Penthouse Magazine (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 376 (Ont. Co. Ct.). [An appeal by the owner to the Ont. C.A. was dismissed 46 C.C.C. (2d) 111 without reference to these issues.] Similarly, R. v. H. H. Marshall Ltd. (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 197, 51 N.S.R. (2d) 629 (S.C. App. Div.).

The burden on the Crown is to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the publication is obscene: R. v. Benjamin News (Montreal) Reg'd et al. (1978), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 399, 6 C.R. (3d) 281 (Que. C.A.).

The Superior Court has an inherent jurisdiction to quash a warrant issued under this section, where no show cause hearing has ever been held, even where the warrant is originally issued, as in Prince Edward Island, by another Judge of the Superior Court: Re Shama's Clover Farm et al. and The Queen (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 119, 40 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 271 (P.E.I.S.C.).

Appeal procedure – This subsection only provides for an appeal to an appellate court and does not apply to a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada: Provincial News Co. et al. v. The Queen (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 53 D.L.R. (3d) 402, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 89 (3:2).

Application of the Charter of Rights – The requirement in this section that the judge “shall” issue a warrant if the prerequisites are satisfied violates s. 8 of the Charter. However, rather than holding the provision to be of no force and effect, the section should be read down to provide that the judge “may” issue the warrant: Ontario (Attorney General) v. Langer (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 290, 123 D.L.R. (4th) 289, 40 C.R. (4th) 204 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 100 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 126 D.L.R. (4th) vii.

TIED SALE.

165. Every one commits an offence who refuses to sell or supply to any other person copies of any publication for the reason only that the other person refuses to purchase or acquire from him copies of any other publication that the other person is apprehensive may be obscene or a crime comic. R.S., c. C-34, s. 161.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The definitions of obscenity and crime comic are in s. 163. The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 169. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 [although, note the maximum fine for a corporation is determined by s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section prohibits tying the sale or supply of a publication to the purchase or acquisition of any other publication under particular circumstances.

The key to the section is that the seller/supplier refuses to provide another publication to the person based solely on the refusal of the would-be recipient to also purchase or receive a publication which that person is apprehensive may be either obscene or a crime comic.

IMMORAL THEATRICAL PERFORMANCE / Person taking part.

167. (1) Every one commits an offence who, being the lessee, manager, agent or person in charge of a theatre, presents or gives or allows to be presented or given therein an immoral, indecent or obscene performance, entertainment or representation.

(2) Every one commits an offence who takes part or appears as an actor, a performer or an assistant in any capacity, in an immoral, indecent or obscene performance, entertainment or representation in a theatre. R.S., c. C-34, s. 163.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “theatre” is defined in s. 150. The definition of obscenity is in s. 163(8). In addition to the obscenity offences in s. 163, related offences are: s. 173, wilfully doing an indecent act; s. 174, public nudity; s. 175(1)(b), exposing an indecent exhibition.

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 169. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 [although, note the maximum fine for a corporation is determined by s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 167 makes it an offence to either take part in an immoral, indecent or obscene performance, or to permit such a performance in a theatre.

Section 167(1) prohibits the lessee, manager, agent, or person in charge of the theatre, to give any of the forms of permission or acquiescence listed in the subsection for such a performance. Section 167(2) creates liability for those performing or assisting in such a performance. The determination of what is immoral, indecent or obscene is to be made with reference to Canadian contemporary community standards.

ANNOTATIONS

Relationship to public nudity offence – The fact that Parliament has made it an offence to be nude in a public place under s. 174 is irrelevant to a charge under this section. A performance is not rendered “immoral” solely because it is performed in the nude: Johnson v. The Queen (1973), 13 C.C.C. (2d) 402, 40 D.L.R. (3d) 215 (6:3) (S.C.C.).

Application of obscenity definition – The definition of “obscenity” in s. 163(8) applies to a charge under this section of presenting an obscene entertainment where the entertainment is a movie and thus a “publication” within the meaning of s. 163(8): Towne Cinema Theatres Ltd. v. The Queen (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 193 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

In Re Nova Scotia Board of Censors et al. and McNeil (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 316, 84 D.L.R. (3d) 1, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 662 (5:4) provincial legislation establishing a board of censors with powers to prohibit the use or exhibition of films was held to be intra vires the province notwithstanding it was reasonable to assume that prohibition of films was based on moral grounds. The Court noted however that notwithstanding a film had been passed by the Board a charge under this section could still be made out.

Proof of offence – A manager cannot avoid criminal liability by alleging that he was not present for the very performance that was the subject of the charge. He has the opportunity, right and obligation to supervise the performances given in his theatre and the Crown need only prove that he allowed it to be performed: R. v. Campbell (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 130 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

While proof that the performance took place in a theatre as defined in s. 150 is an essential element of the Crown’s case the Crown’s case will not fail where it fails to prove that the performance took place in the premises named in the indictment where there is no suggestion the accused were in any way misled or prejudiced: R. v. MacLean and MacLean; R. v. Hilsinger (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 318 (Ont. C.A.).

The test for whether the performance is immoral is the community standard of tolerance which requires the Judge to have regard to all the circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged offence, including evidence as to the performer’s purpose: R. v. MacLean and MacLean (No. 2) (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 412 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused loc. cit.

So-called “lap dancing” constitutes an indecent performance within the meaning of this section. Conduct which is not indecent in private may become indecent by reason of the surrounding circumstances and context in which it takes place. The test to be applied is the “community standard of tolerance”: R. v. Mara (unreported, February 9, 1996, Ont. C.A.) [096/050/041-28 pp.].

MAILING OBSCENE MATTER.

168. Every one commits an offence who makes use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting or delivering anything that is obscene, indecent, immoral or scurrilous, but this section does not apply to a person who makes use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting or delivering anything mentioned in subsection 166(4). R.S., c. C-34, s. 164.

Editor's Note: We understand that s. 168 will be amended by future legislation to correct the reference to s. 166 which has been repealed.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The punishment for this offence is set out in s. 169. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 [although, note the maximum fine for a corporation is determined by s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. With respect to territorial jurisdiction of a mail in the course of the door-to-door delivery of the mail, see s. 476(e). As to definition of "mail", see s. 2 of the Canada Post Corporation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-10.

ANNOTATIONS

A private letter intended only for the recipient may fall under this section: R. v. Lambert (1965), 47 C.R. 12, 53 W.W.R. 186 (B.C.S.C.).

Where the matter involved is a magazine or newspaper, it is not necessary that the entire publication is found to be indecent, immoral or scurrilous. As with other offences under this Part the determination of what is immoral or indecent is judged by an objective standard, namely the community standard of tolerance of indecency or immorality. Evidence of such standards while sometimes helpful is not required: R. v. Popert et al. (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 505, 19 C.R. (3d) 393 (Ont. C.A.), affg 51 C.C.C. (2d) 485 sub nom. R. v. Pink Triangle Press et al. (Ont. Co. Ct.).

PUNISHMENT.

169. Every one who commits an offence under section 163, 165, 166, 167 or 168 is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 165.

Editor's Note: We understand that s. 169 will be amended by future legislation to correct the reference to s. 166 which has been repealed.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on the offences set out in this section then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of the offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 [although, note the maximum fine for a corporation is determined by s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

PARENT OR GUARDIAN PROCURING SEXUAL ACTIVITY.

170. Every parent or guardian of a person under the age of eighteen years who procures that person for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by this Act with a person other than the parent or guardian is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, if the person procured for that purpose is under the age of fourteen years, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years if the person so procured is fourteen years of age or more but under the age of eighteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 166; R.S.C. 1985 c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "guardian" is defined in s. 150. "Procures" is part of the definition of "counsels" in s. 22(3). Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. c. I-21. The defence of mistake as to age is set out in s. 150.1(5). Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child or young person. Sexual activity prohibited by this Act would refer to, inter alia, the offences in ss. 151 to 153, 155, 159, 160, the various forms of sexual assault in ss. 217 to 273 and may also refer to the prostitution offences in ss. 210 to 213. Where the accused is found guilty of this offence in respect of a person who is under 14 years of age then the court has the discretion to impose an order of prohibition under s. 161 prohibiting the accused from attending certain public areas and facilities or taking certain employment which will bring him into contact with persons under 14 years of age.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant nor under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape made, within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant adopts its contents. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years. Note that s. 2 defines "complainant" to mean the victim of the offence.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

Section 170 makes it an indictable offence for every parent or guardian of a person under the age of 18 to procure that person for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by the Code with a person other than the parent or guardian. The punishment for the offence varies with the age of the young person the accused procures. If the young person is under 14 the maximum sentence is five years. If the person procured is 14 or over but under 18 the maximum punishment available under this section is two years.

HOUSEHOLDER PERMITTING SEXUAL ACTIVITY.

171. Every owner, occupier or manager of premises or other person who has control of premises or assists in the management or control of premises who knowingly permits a person under the age of eighteen years to resort to or to be in or on the premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual activity prohibited by this Act is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, if the person in question is under the age of fourteen years, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years if the person in question is fourteen years of age or more but under the age of eighteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 167; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 5.

SYNOPSIS

This section is aimed at a householder who permits the premises to be used for sexual activities involving persons under the age of 18.

The class of accused is described as the owner, occupier, manager or other person with control over the premises, or a person who assists in its management and control. It is an indictable offence for an accused who comes within one of these categories of persons to knowingly permit a person under 18 to be in, or to resort to the relevant premises for the purpose of engaging in any sexual act prohibited by the Criminal Code.

The sentence provision is a sliding scale based on the age of the young person involved in the illicit sexual activity. The maximum sentence if the young person is under 14 is five years, but is decreased to two years if the young person is 14 or over but under 18.

CORRUPTING CHILDREN / Limitation / Definition of "child" / Who may institute prosecutions.

172. (1) Every one who, in the home of a child, participates in adultery or sexual immorality or indulges in habitual drunkenness or any other form of vice, and thereby endangers the morals of the child or renders the home an unfit place for the child to be in, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 6.]

(3) For the purposes of this section, "child" means a person who is or appears to be under the age of eighteen years.

(4) No proceedings shall be commenced under subsection (1) without the consent of the Attorney General, unless they are instituted by or at the instance of a recognized society for the protection of children or by an officer of a juvenile court. R.S., c. C-34, s. 168; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 6.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Attorney General is defined in s. 2. The term "officer of a juvenile court" is not defined and presumably referred to an officer of the "juvenile court" as defined in s. 2(1) of the former Juvenile Delinquents Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. J-3. This section was not amended when that Act was repealed and the Young Offenders Act proclaimed. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child. The defence of mistake as to age is set out in s. 150.1(5).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial of the offence described in subsec. (1) pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant or under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape, made within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant adopts its contents. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years. Note that s. 2 defines “complainant” to mean the victim of the offence.

As to cases concerning admissibility of evidence in child abuse cases, see notes under s. 150.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to indulge in behaviour, in a child's home, which corrupts children. Children are defined in s. 172(3) as being under or apparently under the age of 18. The prohibited activities listed in the section are expansively defined by adultery, sexual immorality, habitual drunkenness, or any other form of vice. However, it must be shown that the result of this behaviour is to endanger the morals of a child or to make the house unfit for a child to live in. It does not appear to be necessary that the accused intend that the conduct indulged in will have this result, only that the accused intended to behave in the proscribed way and certain results flowed from those actions. Conviction for this offence makes the accused liable to imprisonment for two years.

Prosecution under this section may only be undertaken with the Attorney General's consent, unless the prosecution is by a recognized society for the protection of children (such as a Children's Aid Society) or by an officer of a juvenile court.

ANNOTATIONS

In one of the few cases decided under this section the mother of the child and her common law husband were convicted where they had photographed the 11-year-old child in sexually suggestive poses. The only intent required to be proved is the intent to do those acts which if found by the Court to be sexually immoral lead to the result that the morals of the child are endangered. The Crown need not prove that the accused intended such a result: R. v. E and F (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 287 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Disorderly Conduct

INDECENT ACTS / Exposure.

- 173. (1) Every one who wilfully does an indecent act
 (a) in a public place in the presence of one or more persons, or
 (b) in any place, with intent thereby to insult or offend any person,
 is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every person who, in any place, for a sexual purpose, exposes his or her genital organs to a person who is under the age of fourteen years is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 169; R.S.C. 1985, c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "public place" is defined in s. 150. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. c. I-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child or young person. The defence of mistake as to the age of the victim is set out in s. 150.1(4). A limited defence of consent to the subsec. (2) offence is set out in s. 150.1(2). Under s. 150.1(3) a young offender aged 12 or 13 years may not be tried for an offence under subsec. (2) unless he is in a position of trust or authority. A person convicted of the offence under subsec. (2), who is found to be loitering in or near a school ground, playground, public park or bathing area, is liable to be convicted of the vagrancy offence under s. 179.

The trial of these offences is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions: Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for this offence and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Section 275 provides that the rule relating to evidence of recent complaint is abrogated respecting this section. Sections 276 to 276.4 enact special rules limiting the circumstances in which the complainant may be questioned, with respect to his or her prior sexual conduct with persons other than the accused, in proceedings under this section. Section 277 provides that evidence of sexual reputation is inadmissible in proceedings under this section. Section 486(1) and (2) provide that the judge may make an order excluding all or any members of the public where such order is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice. Where the accused is charged with an offence under this section and the application by the accused or the prosecutor for the exclusion order is dismissed then the judge shall state the reason for not making the order. Section 486(2.1) provides that, where an accused is charged with this offence and the complainant is, at the time of the trial or preliminary inquiry, under the age of 18 years, the judge may order that the complainant testify outside the court room or behind a screen where such procedure is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of. Section 486(4) provides that, in proceedings under this section, the judge shall inform the complainant and any witness under 18 years of age that an order may be made under s. 486(3) directing that the identity of the complainant or any such witness not be disclosed in any publication or broadcast. Where the complainant, witness under the age of 18 years or the prosecutor (defined in s. 2) applies for the order then it is mandatory. Section 486(3) also gives the judge a discretion respecting non-publication orders in proceedings under this section in other circumstances, as where the witness may not be the complainant nor under 18 years of age. Section 715.1 provides that, in proceedings under this section, a videotape made, within a reasonable time after the alleged offence, in which the complainant describes the acts complained of, is admissible in evidence if the complainant was under 18 years of age at the time of the alleged offence and adopts its contents while testifying. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years. Note that s. 2 defines "complainant" to mean the victim of the offence.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence punishable by summary conviction to engage in indecent acts or to expose oneself in certain circumstances.

Section 173(1) creates the offence of committing an indecent act. Section 173(1)(a) requires that the indecent act be done in a public place in the presence of one or more other persons. It has been held that if the place is one in which the public could witness the acts complained of, then it is public for the purposes of this section. It is no defence that the accused did not know that the acts could be seen by others. Section 173(1)(b) makes it an offence to do an indecent act with the intention of insulting or offending another person. It has been held, in some cases, that if accused's acts were intended only as a joke, the requisite criminal intent was not made out.

Both paragraphs in subsec. (1) require proof that the accused acted wilfully.

Section 173(2) makes it an offence to expose one's genitals to a person under the age of 14, wherever the act occurs if the accused does so for a sexual purpose.

ANNOTATIONS

Proof of intent – A presumption of intent to do the indecent act wilfully arises where it is seen by another person: R. v. Parsons, [1963] 3 C.C.C. 92, 39 C.R. 353 (B.C.S.C.). Fold R. v. Dalen (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 228 (Sask. Dist. Ct.).

In R. v. Sloan (1994), 89 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 30 C.R. (4th) 156, 18 O.R. (3d) 143 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 91 C.C.C. (3d) vi the members of the court disagreed as to the elements of the offence. Galligan J.A. was of the view that the gravamen of the offence is the wilful commission of an indecent act in the presence of one or more persons and where there was no intention on the part of the accused to perform a sexual act in the presence of any person other than her “client” the surreptitious surveillance by police cannot turn what is essentially an act done in private into one which takes place in public. Goodman J.A. held that it was not necessary to determine whether the term “wilfully” applies both to the doing of the act and to the requirement that the act be done in the presence of one or more persons since the motor vehicle in the circumstances of this case was not a public place. The mere fact that a vehicle is parked in a lot to which the public has access is not in itself sufficient to make that vehicle a public place, considering that the vehicle was parked late at night at the edge of the lot considerable distance from any other vehicle and where the activity could only be discerned by someone looking into the vehicle from a short distance. Since the place in which the act was done in this case was a private place, subsec. (1)(a) did not apply. Osborne J.A. dissenting held that the Crown need only prove that the indecent act was done wilfully and since the act was done in a car parked in a public place the offence was made out.

Requirement of moral turpitude – Nudity in public is a separate offence and does not amount to an indecent act which for conviction requires a more active incident coupled with greater moral turpitude than nudity in public: R. v. Beaupre (1971), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 320 (B.C.S.C.).

In order for the act to be indecent there must be moral turpitude in some degree. An accused who, as a joke, ran through a football stadium while naked was acquitted of a charge under this section: R. v. Springer (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 56, 31 C.R.N.S. 48 (Sask. Dist. Ct.).

Similarly, the accused was acquitted where he briefly exposed his bare buttocks in an attempt to be humorous: R. v. Hecker (1980), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 66 (Y. Terr. Ct.).

Public place – In R. v. McEwen, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 85 (Sask. Prov. Ct.) the Court, distinguishing Hutt v. The Queen (1978), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 418, 1 C.R. (3d) 164, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 476, held that an accused did an indecent act in a “public place” where he exposed his private parts to pedestrians at a crosswalk although he was inside his own car at the time. Similarly, R. v. Figliuzzi (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 144, 21 C.R. (3d) 326 (Alta. Q.B.); R. v. Wise (1982), 67 C.C.C. (2d) 231, [1982] 4 W.W.R. 658 (B.C. Co. Ct.). Also see note on R. v. Sloan, supra.

An accused standing on his own front porch and exposing himself to the public may be convicted of the offence under para. (a). In the context of this subsection “public place” must be given a broad interpretation to include a doorway of a private house which, however, is exposed to public view: R. v. Buhay (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 30 (Man. C.A.).

The requirement in subsec. (1)(a) that the act be performed in the presence of one or more persons is not made out where the act is merely observed by an unmonitored video camera nor by the fact that there was another participant in the act: R. v. Follett (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 435, 120 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 230 (Nfld. S.C.), affd 98 C.C.C. (3d) 493 (Nfld. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 101 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 42 C.R. (4th) 408n.

NUDITY / Nude / Consent of Attorney General.

174. (1) Every one who, without lawful excuse,

(a) is nude in a public place, or

(b) is nude and exposed to public view while on private property, whether or not the property is his own,

is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) For the purposes of this section, a person is nude who is so clad as to offend against public decency or order.

(3) No proceedings shall be commenced under this section without the consent of the Attorney General. R.S., c. C-34, s. 170.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "public place" is defined in s. 150. Attorney General is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. Related offences are: s. 163(2)(b), publicly exhibiting an indecent show; s. 167, immoral theatrical performance; s. 173, wilfully doing an indecent act; s. 175(1)(b), exposing an indecent exhibition.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section prohibits nudity in a public place, or a place which is exposed to the public, even if the accused is on private property. The accused may rely upon a lawful excuse for the behaviour.

Section 174(2) expands the usual definition of nudity to include being clothed so as to offend against public decency or order. In the absence of any greater specificity as to what offends public decency the courts have resorted to the standard used for obscenity, namely, contemporary Canadian standards of tolerance.

By virtue of subsec. (3), no one may be prosecuted for this summary conviction offence unless the Attorney General consents.

ANNOTATIONS

Application of provision – Where the accused is completely naked in a public place without lawful excuse the offence under this section is committed whether or not the nudity offends against public decency or order. Subsection (2) covers the situation where the accused is partially clothed, by creating the legal fiction that such a person is "nude" when clad as to offend public decency or order, but this subsection does not import the requirement of proof of offence against public decency or order where the accused is totally naked: R. v. Verrette (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 273, 85 D.L.R. (3d) 1, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 838 (9:0).

Notwithstanding the provision in s. 167 of the Code for the separate offence of appearing in an immoral or indecent performance in a theatre, an accused may be charged under this section since "public place" includes a theatre: R. v. McCutcheon (1977), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 1 C.R. (3d) 39 (Que. C.A.).

This offence is not aimed at conduct such as swimming nude at an isolated beach, even where the accused misjudges the loneliness of the beach: R. v. Benolkin et al. (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 206 (Sask. Q.B.).

The mere fact that a female dancer is nude does not mean that her performance cannot be legitimate entertainment and therefore constitute a lawful excuse. The trial judge must, however, make this factual assessment in each case and a finding by the trial judge that the accused's dancing offended against public decency and order does not determine the issue of lawful excuse: R. v. Zikman (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 430, 37 O.A.C. 277 (C.A.).

Offending against public decency or order (subsec. (2)) – The requirement of offence against public decency or order in subsec. (2) applies where the accused is partially, albeit lightly, dressed as where she wears only a transparent veil since such person is not “nude” in the dictionary sense of wearing no clothes: R. v. McCutcheon (1977), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 1 C.R. (3d) 39 (Que. C.A.). [Note: this case was decided before R. v. Verrette, supra, and portions of it must therefore be read subject to that case.]

Although the accused is partially clad so that subsec. (2) applies, the Crown need not adduce evidence as to what offends public decency. Rather, the trial Judge may make the finding that the manner of dress did offend public decency without such evidence: R. v. Sidey (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 257 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused, a dancer in a tavern, was not so clad as to offend public decency where the evidence leads to the conclusion that the average adult in the community would tolerate such a performance at the time and place where it was staged: R. v. Gray (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 353 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The test of public decency in subsec. (2) is one of the community standard of tolerance to and for the actions of the accused in the circumstances in which they occur: R. v. Giambalvo (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 324, 39 O.R. (2d) 588 (C.A.).

Attorney General's consent (subsec. 3) – In exercising his power under subsec. (3) the Attorney-General is under no duty that can be enforced by the Courts to act fairly and is not required to afford the accused a hearing before deciding whether or not to consent to the prosecution: Re Warren and The Queen (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 65, 22 C.R. (3d) 58 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The consent required by subsec. (3) may be endorsed on the face of the information and if done in that manner need not recite particulars of the charge: Re R. and Willard (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 350 (Ont. H.C.J.).

CAUSING DISTURBANCE, INDECENT EXHIBITION, LOITERING, ETC. / Evidence of peace officer.

175. (1) Every one who

- (a) not being in a dwelling-house, causes a disturbance in or near a public place,
  - (i) by fighting, screaming, shouting, swearing, singing or using insulting or obscene language,
  - (ii) by being drunk, or
  - (iii) by impeding or molesting other persons,
- (b) openly exposes or exhibits an indecent exhibition in a public place,
- (c) loiters in a public place and in any way obstructs persons who are in that place, or
- (d) disturbs the peace and quiet of the occupants of a dwelling-house by discharging firearms or by other disorderly conduct in a public place or who, not being an occupant of a dwelling-house comprised in a particular building or structure, disturbs the peace and quiet of the occupants of a dwelling-house comprised in the building or structure by discharging firearms or by other disorderly conduct in any part of a building or structure to which, at the time of such conduct, the occupants of two or more dwelling-houses comprised in the building or structure have access as of right or by invitation, express or implied, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) In the absence of other evidence, or by way of corroboration of other evidence, a summary conviction court may infer from the evidence of a peace officer relating to the conduct of a person or persons, whether ascertained or not, that a disturbance described in paragraph (1)(a) or (d) was caused or occurred. R.S., c. C-34, s. 171; 1972, c. 13, s. 11; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 9.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "dwelling house" and "peace officer" are defined in s. 2, "public place" in s. 150. Section 84 contains a definition of "firearm" for Part III which, however, may be a useful reference for this section. Related offences are: ss. 63 to 69, offences in relation to unlawful and riotous assemblies; s. 163(2)(b), exhibiting an indecent show; s. 167, indecent theatrical performances; s. 173, wilfully doing indecent act; s. 174, public nudity; s. 179, vagrancy; s. 180, common nuisance. Sections 30 and 31 authorize the use of force to prevent a breach of the peace and arrest for breach of the peace. The offence of discharging a firearm with intent is in s. 244.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates summary conviction offences in relation to a variety of activities which cause a disturbance, including fighting, exposing an indecent exhibition, loitering and other public-nuisance activities.

Under s. 175(1)(a) it must be shown that the accused did one of the listed acts, that the accused was not in a dwelling-house and that the accused's acts resulted in a disturbance. The resulting disturbance must be at or near a public place. Paragraphs (b) and (c) contain straightforward prohibitions against certain types of actions in public. Paragraph (d) prohibits certain types of conduct which disrupt persons in a dwelling-house. First, liability may be shown by proving that the accused discharged a firearm, or engaged in other disorderly conduct in a public place which resulted in disturbing the peace and quiet of those occupying a dwelling-house. Second, liability may be shown by proving that the accused, who was not an occupant of the dwelling-house, disturbed the peace and quiet of those in the dwelling by discharging a firearm or engaging in other disorderly conduct within any part of the building or structure comprising the dwelling. An additional element for this second type of liability is the necessity to prove that the occupants of two or more units of the dwelling had a right or invitation to have access to that portion of the structure within which the accused created the disturbance. An example of the latter situation would be a disturbance created in the garage of an apartment building.

To facilitate the proof of these offences s. 175(2) permits the trial court to draw an inference, from the evidence of a peace officer who may testify as to the reactions of the members of the public who observed the accused's conduct, as proof that a disturbance did result from the accused's acts. Such evidence is permitted even if the peace officer did not know the identity of the members of the public whose reactions he observed.

ANNOTATIONS

Causing disturbance (Subsec. (1)(a)) / Proof of disturbance—Paragraph (1)(a)(i) requires proof of an externally manifested disturbance of the public peace, in the sense of interference with the ordinary or customary use of the premises by the public. There may be direct evidence of such an effect or interference, or it may be inferred by the evidence of a police officer as to the conduct of a person or persons under subsec. (2). The disturbance may consist of the impugned act itself, as in the case of a fight, interfering with the peaceful use of a barroom, or it may flow as a consequence of the impugned act, as where shouting and swearing produce a scuffle. An interference with the ordinary and customary conduct in or near the public place may consist of something as small as being distracted from one's work, but this interference must be present and must be externally manifested. The disturbance must be one which may reasonably have been foreseen in the particular circumstances of time and place: R. v. Lohnes (1992), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 10 C.R. (4th) 125, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 167.

One may be convicted of an attempt to cause a disturbance: R. v. Kennedy (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 263, 21 C.R.N.S. 251 (Ont. C.A.).

"Swear" should be given its modern meaning of "to use bad or profane or obscene language" and is not limited to invoking the Deity or something sacred in condemnation of a person or object: R. v. Clothier (1975), 13 N.S.R. (2d) 141 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.). Contra: Enns v. The Queen (1968), 5 C.R.N.S. 115, 66 W.W.R. 318 (Sask. Dist. Ct.).

In R. v. Berry (1980), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 99 (Ont. C.A.) the Court overruled R. v. Goddard (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 396, 14 C.R.N.S. 179, [1971] 3 O.R. 517 (H.C.J.) and held that the offence under subsec. (1)(a)(iii) "by impeding" does not require proof of an affray, riot or unlawful assembly. The word "disturbance" is to be given its ordinary dictionary meaning.

It would seem that speaking normally into an electronic megaphone can constitute shouting within the meaning of para. (a)(i): R. v. Reed (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 204 (B.C.C.A.).

Exposing or exhibiting indecent exhibition (Para. (1)(b)) – The words "openly" and "exhibits" in para (1)(b) should be given meanings consistent with Parliament's intention in enacting the entire section, that is, to prevent acts which disturb the peace or interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of the street. Thus "openly" may be defined as "in an open manner without concealment so that all may see, hear or take cognizance in public" and "exhibit" may be defined as "to submit or to expose to view, to show, to display": R. v. Bagu (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 355 (Ont. Prov. Ct.).

Loitering (Para. (1)(c)) – The offence in para. (1)(c) is directed at a nuisance. To constitute the offence there must be evidence of obstruction in the sense of rendering impassable or difficult of passage. As well, the ordinary meaning of "loiter" is to hang idly about a place and does not embrace purposeful activity such as the conduct of a prostitute attempting to attract customers in circumstances falling short of soliciting as defined in s. 213: R. v. Munroe (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 217, 34 C.R. (3d) 268 (Ont. C.A.). Similarly, R. v. Gauvin (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 229 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused November 13, 1984.

Meaning of "dwelling-house" – A beer parlour in a hotel is not part of a "dwelling-house" for the purposes of subsec. (1)(a). It is only those parts of the hotel kept or occupied as a residence which fall within the definition of dwelling-house in s. 2: R. v. Garnot (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 355 (B.C.S.C.).

Although the patients' rooms in a hospital may constitute dwelling places, the television rooms and hallways to which the public have access are public places within the meaning of para. (1)(a): R. v. Campbell (1980), 22 C.R. (3d) 219 (Alta. Q.B.).

Constitutional considerations – The offence of causing a disturbance by swearing, although an infringement of freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter, is a reasonable limit on that freedom and the provision is therefore valid: R. v. Lawrence (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 495, [1992] 5 W.W.R. 659, 3 Alta. L.R. (3d) 293 (Q.B.), affd without reference to the point (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 159, 9 Alta. L.R. (3d) 347 (C.A.).

OBSTRUCTING OR VIOLENCE TO OR ARREST OF OFFICIATING CLERGYMAN / Disturbing religious worship or certain meetings / Idem.

176. (1) Every one who

- (a) by threats or force, unlawfully obstructs or prevents or endeavours to obstruct or prevent a clergyman or minister from celebrating divine service or performing any other function in connection with his calling, or
- (b) knowing that a clergyman or minister is about to perform, is on his way to perform or is returning from the performance of any of the duties or functions mentioned in paragraph (a)
  - (i) assaults or offers any violence to him, or
  - (ii) arrests him on a civil process, or under the pretence of executing a civil process, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who wilfully disturbs or interrupts an assemblage of persons met for religious worship or for a moral, social or benevolent purpose is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Every one who, at or near a meeting referred to in subsection (2), wilfully does anything that disturbs the order or solemnity of the meeting is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 172.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has an election as to mode of trial of the offence described in subsec. (1) pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498. The trial of the offences in subssecs. (2) and (3) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence to interfere with religious services or worship and provides for punishment upon conviction for these offences.

Section 176(1) creates the indictable offence of obstructing or preventing a clergyman or minister from performing religious services or other religious functions. Subsection 1(a) prohibits the use of threats or force to attempt to achieve this aim.

Section 176(1)(b) creates a similar offence. The elements consist of doing one of the acts listed in sub-para. (i) or (ii), together with proof that the accused intended to do the act alleged and that the accused knew that the clergyman or minister was on the way to or from, or was about to perform religious duties. The maximum sentence for this offence is two years' imprisonment.

Subsections (2) and (3) create summary conviction offences involving intentional disruption of religious worship or meetings assembled for one of the purposes stated in subsec. (2). To prove the offence, it must be shown that the accused wilfully did actions which were disruptive or which were productive of disorder or interruption, and not merely that the acts caused upset among the assembled.

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional issues – This section does not violate the guarantee to freedom of speech and religion in s. 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Reed (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 153 (B.C. Co. Ct.), affd 10 C.C.C. (3d) 573 (C.A.) and R. v. Reed (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 180 (B.C.C.A.). [It should be noted that while the question of the inconsistency of subsec. (3) with the guarantees to religious freedom in the Bill of Rights and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was raised in Skoke-Graham et al. v. The Queen, infra, the court having entered an acquittal on other grounds declined to deal with these issues.]

The offence created by subsec. (3) is intra vires Parliament being validly enacted under the criminal law power: Skoke-Graham et al. v. The Queen (1985), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 44 C.R. (3d) 289, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 106 (6:0).

Subsec. (2) – Where members of a congregation have assembled at the place of worship for Sunday service they have “met for religious worship” within the meaning of subsec. (2) although the service has not yet begun and an accused who at that time is using a loud hailer outside the place to condemn the beliefs of the worshippers may be convicted of the offence described in that subsection: R. v. Reed, supra.

Subsec. (3) – The offence under subsec. (3) requires proof of some activity in the nature of a disorder. The conduct must either be disorderly in itself or productive of disorder. It is not sufficient that the accused’s conduct produced annoyance, anxiety or emotional upset among the members of the assemblage meeting for religious worship, where the impugned acts, here kneeling to accept communion in violation of a diocesan directive, are brief, essentially passive and peaceful in nature and voluntarily desisted from upon request: Skoke-Graham et al. v. The Queen, supra.

Two people are an assemblage of persons within the meaning of subsec. (2) and a meeting for the purpose of subsec. (3) occurs when people meet for religious worship and includes the period prior to the formal ceremony: R. v. Reed (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 80 W.A.C. 180, 24 C.R.R. (2d) 163 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused per S.C.C. bull. 3/3/93, p. 459-60.

While brief temporary annoyance would not be sufficient, the requisite element of “disturbs” is made out by deliberate continued annoyance constituting obstruction or partial obstruction of entrance to the place of worship: R. v. Reed, supra.

TRESPASSING AT NIGHT.

177. Every one who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on him, loiters or prowls at night on the property of another person near a dwelling-house situated on that property is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 173.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “dwelling-house” and “night” are defined in s. 2. While the term “property” is also defined in s. 2, the very broad definition in that provision appears unsuited to the context of this offence. Under s. 494(2), a property owner or person in lawful possession of property and anyone authorized by such person may arrest, without warrant, a person whom he finds committing a criminal offence on or in relation to that property. Reference should also be made to ss. 40 to 42 relating to use of force in defence of dwelling-house and other real property.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

ANNOTATIONS

This section creates two offences of prowling and loitering. The essence of loitering is the conduct of someone who is wandering about apparently without precise destination and is conduct which essentially has nothing reprehensible about it, if it does not take place on private property where the loiterer has no business. Prowling, on the other hand, involves some notion of evil. The prowler does not act without a purpose: R. v. Cloutier (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 149 (Que. C.A.). Also see: R. v. McLean (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 277, 75 W.W.R. 157 (Alta. Mag. Ct.).

“Prowls” means to traverse stealthily in the sense of furtively, secretly, clandestinely or moving by imperceptible degrees. The Crown need not prove that the accused was looking for an opportunity to carry out an unlawful purpose. It is not a lawful excuse within the meaning of this section that the accused was trying to conceal himself following commission of a criminal offence: R. v. Willis (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 184 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

This section does not create an unconstitutional reverse onus provision inconsistent with the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Tassou (1984), 16 C.C.C. (3d) 567 (Alta. Prov. Ct.).

OFFENSIVE VOLATILE SUBSTANCE.

178. Every one other than a peace officer engaged in the discharge of his duty who has in his possession in a public place or who deposits, throws or injects or causes to be deposited, thrown or injected in, into or near any place,

- (a) an offensive volatile substance that is likely to alarm, inconvenience, discommode or cause discomfort to any person or to cause damage to property, or
- (b) a stink or stench bomb or device from which any substance mentioned in paragraph (a) is or is capable of being liberated, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 174.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "peace officer" is defined in s. 2, "public place" in s. 150 and possession is defined in s. 4(3).

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

The related offence of common nuisance is in s. 180.

VAGRANCY / Punishment.

179. (1) Every one commits vagrancy who

- (a) supports himself in whole or in part by gaming or crime and has no lawful profession or calling by which to maintain himself; or
- (b) having at any time been convicted of an offence under section 151, 152 or 153, subsection 160(3) or 173(2) or section 271, 272 or 273, or of an offence under a provision referred to in paragraph (b) of the definition "serious personal injury offence" in section 687 of the Criminal Code, chapter C-34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, as it read before January 4, 1983, is found loitering in or near a school ground, playground, public park or bathing area.

(2) Every one who commits vagrancy is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 175; 1972, c. 13, s. 12; 1984, c. 40, s. 20; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 22; c. 19 (3rd Supp.), s. 8.

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Gaming" is not defined in this section but presumably refers to the offences described by Part VII.

Section 687 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34, as it read prior to January 4, 1983 defined "serious personal injury offence" as follows:

"(b) an offence mentioned in section 144 (rape) or 145 (attempted rape) or an offence or attempt to commit an offence mentioned in section 146 (sexual intercourse with a female under fourteen or between fourteen and sixteen), 149 (indecent assault on a female), 156 (indecent assault on a male) or 157 (gross indecency)"

Now also see s. 161 which makes it an offence to violate a prohibition order made against a sex offender.

The trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the summary conviction offence of vagrancy.

Section 179(1)(a) states that a person is guilty of vagrancy if that person has no visible, lawful means of support and the accused supports himself in part, or entirely, by gaming or crime.

Section 179(1)(b) states that a person is guilty of vagrancy if that person has been convicted of one of the offences specified in the paragraph and is found loitering in one of the listed public places. Loitering connotes hanging around for no valid purpose. It need not be shown that the accused had any particular intention beyond loitering in the prohibited location nor that the accused did any other act beyond being present.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsection (1)(b) of this section violates s. 7 of the Charter and is of no force and effect: R. v. Heywood, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 761, 94 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 34 C.R. (4th) 133.

Nuisances

COMMON NUISANCE / Definition.

180. (1) Every one who commits a common nuisance and thereby

(a) endangers the lives, safety or health of the public, or

(b) causes physical injury to any person,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) For the purposes of this section, every one commits a common nuisance who does an unlawful act or fails to discharge a legal duty and thereby

(a) endangers the lives, safety, health, property or comfort of the public; or

(b) obstructs the public in the exercise or enjoyment of any right that is common to all the subjects of Her Majesty in Canada. R.S., c. C-34, s. 176.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences may be found in Part XI [wilful and forbidden act in relation to property]. Also note the intimidation offence in s. 423, explosive offences and duty in handling explosives in ss. 79 to 82, offences in relation to aircraft in ss. 76 to 78, sabotage in s. 52, careless handling of firearm in s. 86, duty to provide necessities in s. 215 and duty of person undertaking dangerous acts in ss. 216, 217.

SYNOPSIS

The section creates the indictable offence of creating a common nuisance.

Subsection (2) sets out what constitutes a common nuisance. Firstly, it must be proven that the accused either did an unlawful act or failed to discharge a legal duty. Secondly, it must be proven that the accused's act or omission resulted in one of the ill-effects described in s. 180(2)(a) or (b).

The offence created in subsec. (1) requires that, in addition to establishing proof that a common nuisance occurred, it must be shown that the nuisance resulted in the harm described in paragraphs 180(1)(a) or (b). The maximum sentence for this offence is two years' imprisonment. As there is a substantial overlap between the two subsections, the "additional" elements set out in subsec. (1) may be satisfied by the same evidence that brought the accused within the definition of common nuisance under subsec. (2).

ANNOTATIONS

A common nuisance must be directed to the public generally and a conviction under this section cannot be supported where the acts were directed to three individuals: R. v. Schula (1956), 115 C.C.C. 382, 23 C.R. 403 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Section 216 imposed a legal duty on the accused, who knew he was infected with the AIDS virus, to not donate blood to the Red Cross and breach of this duty may found a conviction under this section: R. v. Thornton, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 445, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 530, 21 C.R. (4th) 215 (9:0).

SPREADING FALSE NEWS.

181. Every one who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows is false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 177.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence has recently been used as an alternative to the hate propaganda provisions of the Code. Those provisions may be found in ss. 318 and 319.

ANNOTATIONS

This section violates the guarantee to freedom of expression under s. 2(b) of the Charter and is of no force and effect: R. v. Zundel (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 16 C.R. (4th) 1, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 731.

DEAD BODY.

182. Every one who

- (a) neglects, without lawful excuse, to perform any duty that is imposed on him by law or that he undertakes with reference to the burial of a dead human body or human remains, or
- (b) improperly or indecently interferes with or offers any indignity to a dead human body or human remains, whether buried or not,

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 178.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The duty imposed by law, referred to in this section, presumably refers to provincial legislation which governs the burial of human remains.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A related offence is found in s. 243 which makes it an offence to dispose of the dead body of a child with intent to conceal the fact that its mother has been delivered of it.

SYNOPSIS

This rarely used section creates two indictable offences relating to the neglect or improper interference with a dead body. The first offence is neglecting to perform a duty imposed by law or which the accused agrees to undertake in connection with burying a dead person.

The prosecution must prove that the accused did not have a lawful excuse for such neglect of the body.

The second offence is committed when an accused treats a dead body, buried or not, improperly, indecently or improperly interferes with it. Both offences under this section require proof that the accused knew that the body was dead. The maximum sentence is five years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

Para. (b) – Although it would be a defence to this charge if the accused did not know that the body was dead if on the facts as he believed them he was acting lawfully and innocently, such a defence is not open to an accused who believing the person is alive is attempting to have intercourse with the body because if, as he thought, the woman was alive he was raping her there being no suggestion he thought he had her consent to the act: R. v. Ladue, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 264, 45 C.R. 287 (Y.T.C.A.).

A physical interference with the human remains is not a necessary element of the offence under para. (b) and it applies to offering indignities to monuments that mark human remains because to offer indignities to such monuments is to offer indignities to the remains themselves: R. v. Moyer, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 899, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 32 C.R. (4th) 232.

“private communication” means any oral communication, or any telecommunication, that is made by an originator who is in Canada or is intended by the originator to be received by a person who is in Canada and that is made under circumstances in which it is reasonable for the originator to expect that it will not be intercepted by any person other than the person intended by the originator to receive it, and includes any radio-based telephone communication that is treated electronically or otherwise for the purpose of preventing intelligible reception by any person other than the person intended by the originator to receive it;

“public switched telephone network” means a telecommunication facility the primary purpose of which is to provide a land line-based telephone service to the public for compensation;

“radio-based telephone communication” means any radiocommunication within the meaning of the Radiocommunication Act that is made over apparatus that is used primarily for connection to a public switched telephone network;

“sell” includes offer for sale, expose for sale, have in possession for sale or distribute or advertise for sale;

“solicitor” means, in the Province of Quebec, an advocate or notary and, in any other province, a barrister or solicitor. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 7; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 10; 1984, c. 21, s. 76; 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 7(2)(a), 23; R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (2nd Supp.), s. 213; R.S.C. 1985, c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 13; c. 29 (4th Supp.), s. 17; c. 42 (4th Supp.), s. 1; 1991, c. 28, s. 12; 1992, c. 27, s. 90; 1993, c. 7, s. 5; 1993, c. 25, s. 94; 1993, c. 40, s. 1; 1993, c. 46, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section. The term “telecommunication” is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. c. I-21 as “any transmission, emission or reception of signs, signals, writing, images or sounds or intelligence of any nature by wire, radio, visual or other electromagnetic system”. “Radio” is also defined in s. 35. Note that s. 3 provides that a description in parenthesis after a section number is inserted for convenience of reference only and is no part of the provision.

Related offences may be found in s. 326, theft of telecommunication service and s. 327, unlawful possession of device to obtain telecommunication facility.

This Part is just one aspect of a more or less comprehensive scheme for regulating surreptitious use of electronic devices by agents of the state. Also see s. 487.01 which provides for a general warrant which would cover surreptitious electronic surveillance, s. 492.1 which regulates the use of tracking devices and s. 492.2 which regulates the use of telephone number recorders. In addition, provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this Part.

The interception of private communications by the state constitutes a search or seizure for the purposes of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, therefore, in addition to the notes in this Part, see notes under s. 8 of the Charter.

At the time this Part was enacted, certain amendments to other federal statutes were made, in particular to the Crown Liability Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50. Reference should also be made to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-23, which provides authority for authorizations in national security matters.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides definitions which are used throughout Part VI of the Criminal Code dealing with intercepted private communications. The definition of "offence" contained in this section is pivotal because the offences contained in this list are the only offences which may form the basis of an application for an authorization to intercept private communications and a warrant for video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

ANNOTATIONS

"Intercept" [Also see notes under s. 189(1), "Intercepted".] – Surreptitious electronic surveillance constitutes a search or seizure within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Duarte (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 240, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30, 71 O.R. (2d) 575n.

The term "intercept", at least as used in s. 189, which deals with the admissibility of evidence, must be interpreted in context and in accordance with its primary dictionary meaning as an interference between the place of origination and the place of destination of the communication. Thus, there is no interception where the originator was simply mistaken as to the identity of the person to whom he was talking: R. v. McQueen (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 262, [1975] 6 W.W.R. 604 (Alta. S.C.).

This part has no application to a communication which is merely overheard by a third party without the use of any mechanical or other device: R. v. Beckner (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 356 (Ont. C.A.). Contra: R. v. Boutilier and Melnick (1976), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 77 D.L.R. (3d) 291 (N.S.S.C.).

"Private communication" – For the purposes of this definition the "originator" of the private communication is the person who makes the remarks or series of remarks which the Crown seeks to adduce in evidence. Thus, if a person with a reasonable expectation of privacy, speaking in an electronically intercepted conversation, makes statements which the Crown seeks to use against him he has the protection of this Part: R. v. Goldman (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 13 C.R. (3d) 228 (S.C.C.) (8:1).

An obscene or threatening phone call is a private communication even where it is that call which forms the substance of the charge: R. v. Dunn (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 538, 33 C.R.N.S. 299 (N.S. Co. Ct.).

A telephone call to a police switchboard in which the accused threatened the life of a member of that force is not a private communication. It would not be reasonable to expect that such a communication would not be listened to or recorded by a person other than the switchboard operator: R. v. Monaghan (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 286, 22 C.R. (3d) (Ont. C.A.), affd 16 C.C.C. (3d) 576, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 176, 57 N.R. 76n (7:0).

To a similar effect is R. v. Lubovac (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 551 (Alta. C.A.), where it was held that pager messages were not private communications, since the pager simply broadcast a message to those who may happen to hear or overhear it. It was also held that retrieval, by the police, of messages left by the accused's accomplice at a computer message centre was not a violation of s. 8 of the Charter. The police had obtained a number from an informer which enabled them to retrieve any messages which had been left by the accomplice. The informer had, in turn, been given the number from the accomplice. The accomplice had no reasonable expectation that his messages would be sent out or received in confidence. Also see R. v. Nin (1985), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 89 (Que. Ct. Sess.).

However, a communication over a cellular telephone is protected by the guarantee to protection against unreasonable search or seizure in s. 8 of the Charter. The issue under s. 8 is not whether there is a reasonable possibility that someone other than the intended recipient may overhear the conversation but whether it is reasonable for a person to expect that the police will not intercept and record his conversations over a cellular telephone without first obtaining a judicial authorization: R. v. Solomon (1993), 85 C.C.C. (3d) 496, [1993] R.J.Q. 1983 (Mun. Ct.).

It was held in R. v. Cheung (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 441 (B.C.S.C.), that, at least in 1990, conversations over a cellular telephone were private communications. While a person sending or receiving a call on a cellular telephone did face some risk of being overheard by someone who just happened to meet the combination of factors which matched a scanner to a call, the chance of someone, who set out to intercept the calls of a particular individual by scanner, to succeed in that venture was very small.

Use of a dial number recorder does not involve interception of a private communication. Communication in this section contemplates an exchange of information between persons: R. v. Fegan (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 356, 21 C.R. (4th) 65, 13 O.R. (3d) 88 (C.A.) Contra: R. v. Kutsak (1993), 108 Sask. R. 241 (Q.B.). [Note that a warrant may now be obtained to install a dial number recorder pursuant to s. 492.2]

CONSENT TO INTERCEPTION.

183.1 Where a private communication is originated by more than one person or is intended by the originator thereof to be received by more than one person, a consent to the interception thereof by any one of those persons is sufficient consent for the purposes of any provision of this Part. 1993, c. 40, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Consent to interception is relevant to s. 184 which creates the offence of interception of private communications and ss. 184.1 and 184.2 which authorize interception of private communications where one of the parties consents to the interception.

Interception of Communications

INTERCEPTION / Saving provision.

184. (1) Every one who, by means of any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, wilfully intercepts a private communication is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to

- (a) a person who has the consent to intercept, express or implied, of the originator of the private communication or of the person intended by the originator thereof to receive it;
- (b) a person who intercepts a private communication in accordance with an authorization or pursuant to section 184.4 or any person who in good faith aids in any way another person who the aiding person believes on reasonable grounds is acting with an authorization or pursuant to section 184.4;
- (c) a person engaged in providing a telephone, telegraph or other communication service to the public who intercepts a private communication,
  - (i) if the interception is necessary for the purpose of providing the service,
  - (ii) in the course of service observing or random monitoring necessary for the purpose of mechanical or service quality control checks, or
  - (iii) if the interception is necessary to protect the person's rights or property directly related to providing such service; or
- (d) an officer or servant of Her Majesty in right of Canada who engages in radio frequency spectrum management, in respect of a private communication intercepted by that officer or servant for the purpose of identifying, isolating or preventing an unauthorized or interfering use of a frequency or of a transmission. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1993, c. 40, s. 3.

(3) [Repealed. 1993, c. 40, s. 3.]

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device", "intercept", "private communication" and "authorization" are defined in s. 183. The term "radio" is defined in s. 35 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. c. I-21. The term "wilfully" does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

Consent to interception is given an expanded meaning in s. 183.1.

This provision is fundamental to the scheme enacted by this Part. It makes unlawful the interception of private communications by the devices defined in s. 183, subject to certain narrow exceptions in subsec. (2). Those exceptions are interceptions pursuant to a normal "60-day" authorization obtained under s. 186, interceptions under the emergency "36-hour" authorization obtained under s. 188, unauthorized interceptions in exceptional circumstances as set out in s. 184.4 and consent interceptions. The other exceptions listed essentially concern interceptions incidental to the providing of the telephone service. An important incentive to compliance with the law, in addition to the penalties under this section, is that if the interception is not lawfully made by agents of the state then it is probably a violation of s. 8 of the Charter and therefore subject to exclusion under s. 24(2) of the Charter.

Separate offences have been created for interception of cellular telephone communications under ss. 184.5 and 193.1.

It is an offence under s. 191 to unlawfully have possession of any device designed primarily for the surreptitious interception of private communications. Under s. 193, it is an offence to unlawfully disclose an intercepted private communication.

Pursuant to s. 192, any device, by means of which the offence under this section was committed, may be ordered forfeited. As well, pursuant to s. 194, the court that convicts the accused of the offence under this section may make an order for punitive damages. The offence in this section can itself be the basis for an authorization to intercept private communications, by virtue of the definition of "offence" in s. 183. Under s. 195(3), the annual reports of the Solicitor General and Attorneys General are to set out the number of prosecutions under this section of officers or servants of the Crown.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence, subject to a number of exceptions, to intercept private communications by means of a specified device, and provides for punishment upon conviction for this offence.

Subsection (1) creates the indictable offence of unlawful interception. The device used to intercept the private communication must be one listed in this section, as elaborated in the definition of such devices found in s. 183. The communication must be private, and this term is also defined in s. 183. The communication, must be intercepted, a defined term in s. 183. The act of the accused must be done wilfully, but no specific purpose beyond the interception need be shown. A person convicted under this subsection is liable to imprisonment for five years.

Subsection (2) provides a number of exceptions to subsec. (1). Subsection (2)(a) states that subsec. (1) does not apply if one obtains the consent of either the originator or the intended recipient of the communication. The consent may be explicit or implied. Subsection (3) provides that if more than one person is the originator or is intended to receive the communication, the consent of one of the parties will be sufficient for this purpose.

Section 184(2)(b) creates an exception to liability under subsec. (1) if the communication was intercepted in accordance with an authorization or pursuant to s. 184.4. It also exempts a person acting in good faith who assists another in the interception in any way, if that person believes, on reasonable grounds, that the person doing the interception is acting in accordance with an authorization.

Section 184(2)(c) and (d) permit certain types of interceptions required to provide or maintain the service, or quality control of a communication service or which are otherwise necessarily incidental to managing radio frequencies, if the interception is made by one of the specified categories of worker.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (2)(a) – The consent contemplated by this section is one which is voluntary in the sense that it is free from coercion and made knowingly in that the consensor must be aware of what he is doing and aware of the significance of his act and the use which the police may be able to make of the consent. However, the test employed in determining the admissibility of a confession made by an accused to a person in authority has no application. If the consent which the person gives is the one he intended and given as a result of his own decision and not under external coercion the fact that his motives for so doing are selfish and even reprehensible will not vitiate it. Coercion in this context means the use of intimidating conduct or force or threats of force by the police, but coercion does not arise merely because the consent is given as a result of promised or expected leniency or immunity from prosecution: R. v. Goldman (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 13 C.R. (3d) 228 (S.C.C.) (8:1).

A consent given by a police informer is valid and renders the interception lawful notwithstanding that the informer testifies at trial that he expected to be paid for his co-operation: R. v. Playford (1984), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 454 (Ont. H.C.J.) revd on other grounds 40 C.C.C. (3d) 142, 61 C.R. (3d) 101 (Ont. C.A.).

The Charter does not apply, where the interception was made by Bell Canada on its own in an attempt to identify the person who was using its services to make obscene and harassing telephone calls to its subscribers. Bell Canada was not an agent of the state: R. v. Fegan (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 356, 21 C.R. (4th) 65, 13 O.R. (3d) 88 (C.A.).

An accused has standing to raise the violation of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by reason of a consent interception between an alleged co-conspirator and an undercover police officer. The accused was entitled to have the evidence of this communication excluded pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter if to admit the evidence would bring the administration of justice into disrepute: R. v. Montoute (1991), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 113 A.R. 95 (C.A.).

In using a dial number recorder, Bell Canada was not intercepting a “private communication”. In any event, such conduct undertaken in an attempt to identify a person making obscene and harassing telephone calls, was lawful within the meaning of this paragraph, Bell Canada being the intended recipient of the signal caused by the originator in dialing a particular telephone number: R. v. Fegan, supra. Contra: R. v. Kutsak (1993), 108 Sask. R. 241 (Q.B.). [Note: An authorization to use a dial number recorder may now be obtained under s. 492.2.]

Subsec. (2)(c) – In using a dial number recorder, Bell Canada was not intercepting a “private communication”. In any event, such conduct, undertaken in an attempt to identify a person making obscene and harassing telephone calls, was lawful within the meaning of this paragraph, being necessary to protect the person’s rights or property directly related to providing the telephone service within the meaning of subpara. (iii). The term “person” can refer to both the subscribers and Bell Canada: R. v. Fegan, supra. Contra: R. v. Kutsak, supra.

INTERCEPTION TO PREVENT BODILY HARM / Admissibility of intercepted communication / Destruction of recordings and transcripts / Definition of “agent of the state”.

184.1 (1) An agent of the state may intercept, by means of any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, a private communication if

(a) either the originator of the private communication or the person intended by the originator to receive it has consented to the interception;

- (b) the agent of the state believes on reasonable grounds that there is a risk of bodily harm to the person who consented to the interception; and
  - (c) the purpose of the interception is to prevent the bodily harm.
- (2) The contents of a private communication that is obtained from an interception pursuant to subsection (1) are inadmissible as evidence except for the purpose of proceedings in which actual, attempted or threatened bodily harm is alleged, including proceedings in respect of an application for an authorization under this Part or in respect of a search warrant or a warrant for the arrest of any person.
- (3) The agent of the state who intercepts a private communication pursuant to subsection (1) shall, as soon as is practicable in the circumstances, destroy any recording of the private communication that is obtained from an interception pursuant to subsection (1), any full or partial transcript of the recording and any notes made by that agent of the private communication if nothing in that private communication suggests that bodily harm, attempted bodily harm or threatened bodily harm has occurred or is likely to occur.
- (4) For the purposes of this section, “agent of the state” means
- (a) a peace officer; and
  - (b) a person acting under the authority of, or in cooperation with, a peace officer.
- 1993, c. 40, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Consent to interception is given an expanded meaning in s. 183.1. Although “bodily harm” is not defined in this Part, reference might be made to the definition in s. 267. The terms “electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device”, “intercept”, “private communication” are defined in s. 183. The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2.

Since the interception under this section is made with consent of one of the parties, no offence is committed under s. 184. The purpose of this section is to make lawful, interceptions by agents of the state even though the interception is made without court authorization. Since the exception is relatively narrowly drawn, the expectation would be that the evidence would not be rendered inadmissible by ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Charter. In normal circumstances, the police would be required to obtain an authorization under s. 184.2. In the limited circumstances where evidence which was obtained under this section is sought to be admitted at a trial, the Crown must comply with the provisions of s. 189.

SYNOPSIS

This section permits interception of private communications by agents of the state [defined in subsec. (2)], although there is no court authorization. The section is narrowly focused and applies only where a party to the communication consents to the interception, the agent of the state believes on reasonable grounds that there is a risk of bodily harm to the person who consented, and the purpose of the interception is to prevent bodily harm. Thus, unlike the normal authorization provisions such as s. 186, the purpose of this section is not to obtain evidence. Thus, any evidence which is obtained is only admissible in certain limited circumstances set out in subsec. (2). Any recordings or notes which do not meet the requirements of subsec. (2) are to be destroyed.

INTERCEPTION WITH CONSENT / Application for authorization / Judge to be satisfied / Content and limitation of authorization.

184.2 (1) A person may intercept, by means of any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, a private communication where either the originator of the private communication or the person intended by the originator to receive it has consented to the interception and an authorization has been obtained pursuant to subsection (3).

(2) An application for an authorization under this section shall be made by a peace officer, or a public officer who has been appointed or designated to administer or enforce any federal or provincial law and whose duties include the enforcement of this or any other Act of Parliament, ex parte and in writing to a provincial court judge, a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit, which may be sworn on the information and belief of that peace officer or public officer or of any other peace officer or public officer, deposing to the following matters:

- (a) that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence against this or any other Act of Parliament has been or will be committed;
- (b) the particulars of the offence;
- (c) the name of the person who has consented to the interception;
- (d) the period for which the authorization is requested; and
- (e) in the case of an application for an authorization where an authorization has previously been granted under this section or section 186, the particulars of the authorization.

(3) An authorization may be given under this section if the judge to whom the application is made is satisfied that

- (a) there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence against this or any other Act of Parliament has been or will be committed;
- (b) either the originator of the private communication or the person intended by the originator to receive it has consented to the interception; and
- (c) there are reasonable grounds to believe that information concerning the offence referred to in paragraph (a) will be obtained through the interception sought.

(4) An authorization given under this section shall

- (a) state the offence in respect of which private communications may be intercepted;
- (b) state the type of private communication that may be intercepted;
- (c) state the identity of the persons, if known, whose private communications are to be intercepted, generally describe the place at which private communications may be intercepted, if a general description of that place can be given, and generally describe the manner of interception that may be used;
- (d) contain the terms and conditions that the judge considers advisable in the public interest; and
- (e) be valid for the period, not exceeding sixty days, set out therein. 1993, c. 40, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Consent to interception is given an expanded meaning in s. 183.1. The terms “electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device”, “intercept”, “private communication” are defined in s. 183. The terms “peace officer” and “public officer” “provincial court judge” and “superior court judge” are defined in s. 2.

Since the interception under this section is made with consent of one of the parties and under an authorization, no offence is committed under s. 184. The purpose of this section is to deal with the implications of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Duarte (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 240, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30, 74 C.R. (3d) 281 which had held that a consent interception by agents of the state, although not unlawful under s. 184, was still a violation of s. 8 of the Charter, unless there was prior judicial authorization. Where evidence which was obtained through execution of the authorization is sought to be admitted at a trial, the Crown must comply with the provisions of s. 189.

Note that provision is made for obtaining the authorization through means of telecommunication under s. 184.3 in much the same way that a telewarrant may be obtained for seizure of things by search warrant. By virtue of s. 187, the material used on the application is to be kept secret and only disclosed in the circumstances set out in that section. The authorization may be executed anywhere in Canada in accordance with s. 188.1. Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section permits the police to obtain a court authorization where one of the parties to the communication consents to the interception. Because one of the parties has consented, the requirements for obtaining the authorization are not as strict as for obtaining an authorization for surreptitious interceptions under ss. 185 and 186. The grounds for obtaining the authorization under this section more closely resemble the grounds for obtaining an ordinary search warrant under s. 487 and the authorization may be obtained for any federal offence, not just those specified in s. 183. Subsection (4) sets out the terms of the authorization and provides inter alia that the authorization be valid only for a period not exceeding 60 days.

ANNOTATIONS

Prior to the enactment of this section, the Supreme Court held that interception of private communications without a court authorization, even if with the consent of one of the parties to the communication, was an unreasonable search and seizure under s. 8 of the Charter: R. v. Duarte (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 74 C.R. (3d) 281, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30.

APPLICATION BY MEANS OF TELECOMMUNICATION / Application / Recording / Oath / Alternative to oath / Authorization / Giving authorization / Giving authorization where telecommunication produces writing.

184.3 (1) Notwithstanding section 184.2, an application for an authorization under subsection 184.2(2) may be made ex parte to a provincial court judge, a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552, by telephone or other means of telecommunication, if it would be impracticable in the circumstances for the applicant to appear personally before a judge.

(2) An application for an authorization made under this section shall be on oath and shall be accompanied by a statement that includes the matters referred to in paragraphs 184.2(2)(a) to (e) and that states the circumstances that make it impracticable for the applicant to appear personally before a judge.

(3) The judge shall record, in writing or otherwise, the application for an authorization made under this section and, on determination of the application, shall cause the writing or recording to be placed in the packet referred to in subsection 187(1) and sealed in that packet, and a recording sealed in a packet shall be treated as if it were a document for the purposes of section 187.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (2), an oath may be administered by telephone or other means of telecommunication.

(5) An applicant who uses a means of telecommunication that produces a writing may, instead of swearing an oath for the purposes of subsection (2), make a statement in writing stating that all matters contained in the application are true to the knowledge or belief of the applicant and such a statement shall be deemed to be a statement made under oath.

(6) Where the judge to whom an application is made under this section is satisfied that the circumstances referred to in paragraphs 184.2(3)(a) to (c) exist and that the circumstances referred to in subsection (2) make it impracticable for the applicant to appear personally before a judge, the judge may, on such terms and conditions, if any, as are considered advisable, given an authorization by telephone or other means of telecommunication for a period of up to thirty-six hours.

(7) Where a judge gives an authorization by telephone or other means of telecommunication, other than a means of telecommunication that produces a writing,

- (a) the judge shall complete and sign the authorization in writing, noting on its face the time, date and place at which it is given;
- (b) the applicant shall, on the direction of the judge, complete a facsimile of the authorization in writing, noting on its face the name of the judge who gave it and the time, date and place at which it was given; and
- (c) the judge shall, as soon as is practicable after the authorization has been given, cause the authorization to be placed in the packet referred to in subsection 187(1) and sealed in that packet.

(8) Where a judge gives an authorization by a means of telecommunication that produces a writing, the judge shall

- (a) complete and sign the authorization in writing, noting on its face the time, date and place at which it is given;
- (b) transmit the authorization by the means of telecommunication to the applicant, and the copy received by the applicant shall be deemed to be a facsimile referred to in paragraph (7)(b); and
- (c) as soon as is practicable after the authorization has been given, cause the authorization to be placed in the packet referred to in subsection 187(1) and sealed in that packet. 1993, c. 40, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

This section supplements s. 184.2 and allows for the obtaining of an authorization to intercept private communications with the consent of one of the parties by means of telecommunications. The procedure is similar to the telewarrant procedure in s. 487.1 and thus see notes under that section. The material used in the application is to be kept secret in accordance with the provisions of s. 187. Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section.

INTERCEPTION IN EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES.

184.4 A peace officer may intercept, by means of any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, a private communication where

- (a) the peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that the urgency of the situation is such that an authorization could not, with reasonable diligence, be obtained under any other provision of this Part;
- (b) the peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that such an interception is immediately necessary to prevent an unlawful act that would cause serious harm to any person or to property; and
- (c) either the originator of the private communication or the person intended by the originator to receive it is the person who would perform the act that is likely to cause the harm or is the victim, or intended victim, of the harm. 1993, c. 40, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device”, “intercept”, “private communication” are defined in s. 183. The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. An interception under this section is not unlawful by virtue of s. 184. The Crown must give notice of evidence obtained pursuant to this section in accordance with s. 189.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes warrantless interception of private communications in exigent circumstances where an authorization could not be obtained with reasonable diligence, there are reasonable grounds to believe that the interception is necessary to prevent an unlawful act that would cause serious harm and one of the parties to the communication is the person who would commit the unlawful act or is the intended victim.

INTERCEPTION OF RADIO-BASED TELEPHONE COMMUNICATIONS / Other provisions to apply.

184.5 (1) Every person who intercepts, by means of any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, maliciously or for gain, a radio-based telephone communication, if the originator of the communication or the person intended by the originator of the communication to receive it is in Canada, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) Section 183.1, subsection 184(2) and sections 184.1 to 190 and 194 to 196 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to interceptions of radio-based telephone communications referred to in subsection (1). 1993, c. 40, s. 4.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device", "intercept", and "radio-based telephone communication" are defined in s. 183. Under s. 193.1 it is an offence to disclose the contents of radio-based telephone communications subject to certain exceptions.

SYNOPSIS

This section helps to fill the gap created by several cases which had held under the predecessor legislation that cellular telephone conversations were not private communications. This section now creates an offence to intercept such communications where the interception was made for gain or maliciously. Subsection (2) then integrates such communications with the rest of this Part of the Code, allowing for the obtaining of authorizations and warrantless interceptions in the same way as for private communications.

ONE APPLICATION FOR AUTHORIZATION SUFFICIENT.

184.6 For greater certainty, an application for an authorization under this Part may be made with respect to both private communications and radio-based telephone communications at the same time. 1993, c. 40, s. 4.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes clear that applications may be made at the same time for authorization to intercept private communications and radio-based telephone [i.e. cellular] communications. Such authorizations might be obtained under s. 184.2 where one of the parties consent or under s. 186 where there is no consent by any of the parties. It is unclear whether the authorization to intercept both types of communications can be contained in the same document, although there is no apparent reason why it could not. One limitation on the scope of this section is that the ordinary s. 186 authorization cannot be obtained through the telewarrant procedure in s. 184.3.

APPLICATION FOR AUTHORIZATION / Extension of period for notification / Where extension to be granted / Where extension not granted.

185. (1) An application for an authorization to be given under section 186 shall be made ex parte and in writing to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552 and shall be signed by the Attorney General of the province in which the application is made or the Solicitor General of Canada or an agent specially designated in writing for the purposes of this section by

(a) the Solicitor General of Canada personally, if the offence under investigation is one in respect of which proceedings, if any, may be instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada, or

(b) the Attorney General of a province personally, in any other case, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit, which may be sworn on the information and belief of a peace officer or public officer deposing to the following matters:

(c) the facts relied upon to justify the belief that an authorization should be given together with particulars of the offence,

(d) the type of private communication proposed to be intercepted,

(e) the names, addresses and occupations, if known, of all persons, the interception of whose private communications there are reasonable grounds to believe may assist the investigation of the offence, a general description of the nature and location of the place, if known, at which private communications are proposed to be intercepted and a general description of the manner of interception proposed to be used,

(f) the number of instances, if any, on which an application has been made under this section in relation to the offence and a person named in the affidavit pursuant to paragraph (e) and on which the application was withdrawn or no authorization was given, the date on which each application was made and the name of the judge to whom each application was made,

(g) the period for which the authorization is requested, and

(h) whether other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed or why it appears they are unlikely to succeed or that the urgency of the matter is such that it would be impractical to carry out the investigation of the offence using only other investigative procedures.

(2) An application for an authorization may be accompanied by an application, personally signed by the Attorney General of the province in which the application for the authorization is made or the Solicitor General of Canada if the application for the authorization is made by him or on his behalf, to substitute for the period mentioned in subsection 196(1) such longer period not exceeding three years as is set out in the application.

(3) Where an application for an authorization is accompanied by an application referred to in subsection (2), the judge to whom the applications are made shall first consider the application referred to in subsection (2) and where, on the basis of the affidavit in support of the application for the authorization and any other affidavit evidence submitted in support of the application referred to in subsection (2), the judge is of the opinion that the interests of justice warrant the granting of such application, he shall fix a period, not exceeding three years, in substitution for the period mentioned in subsection 196(1).

(4) Where the judge to whom an application for an authorization and an application referred to in subsection (2) are made refuses to fix a period in substitution for the period mentioned in subsection 196(1) or where the judge fixes a period in substitution therefor that is less than the period set out in the application referred to in subsection (2), the person appearing before the judge on the application for the authorization may withdraw the application for the authorization and thereupon the judge shall not proceed to consider the application for the authorization or to give the authorization and shall return to the person appearing before him on the application for the authorization both applications and all other material pertaining thereto. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 8; 1993, c. 40, s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "superior court of criminal jurisdiction", "peace officer" and "public officer" are defined in s. 2. The terms "offence", and "private communication" are defined in s. 183. While the term "authorization" is defined in s. 183 to include an authorization under s. 186 and 188, it seems from the context that this section concerns an application for an authorization granted under s. 186. Prerequisites for applications for renewals of authorizations are set out in s. 186(6) and for emergency "36-hour" authorizations in s. 188. However, certain of the prerequisites in this section will be imported to the application under s. 188, in view of the lack of detail in the latter section. In addition, constitutional imperatives may require that some of the conditions in this section be imported into s. 188. By virtue of s. 187, the documents relating to an application under this section are confidential and placed in a sealed packet, which is kept in the custody of the court and not opened except pursuant to a judge's order or for the purpose of dealing with an application for a renewal. Other related provisions are as follows: s. 184, offence to unlawfully intercept private communications; s. 189, admissibility of evidence obtained through interceptions; s. 191, unlawful possession of devices for surreptitious interception; s. 193, unlawful disclosure of intercepted private communication; s. 194, provision for damages for unlawful interceptions; s. 195, report by Solicitor General of Canada and provincial Attorney General concerning applications for authorizations under this section.

Also see sections which provide for obtaining the following authorizations: s. 184.2 (consent interceptions); s. 487.01 (general warrant including video surveillance); s. 492.1 (tracking device); s. 492.2 (dial number recorder).

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the procedure and criteria for granting authorization to intercept private communications, and permits extensions of the period within which notice must be given to the person whose communications are intercepted (see s. 196(1)).

The introductory words in 185(1) set out certain procedural matters which apply to an application for an authorization. It provides that the application shall be made ex parte and in writing. The only judges who may grant such authorizations are of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in s. 552. Only the Attorney General, the Solicitor General or their agents specially designated in writing for the purpose may sign such applications. Section 185(1)(a) and (b) set out the offences, in respect of which the Solicitor General or the Attorney General may make such designations.

The written application must be accompanied by an affidavit, which may be sworn on information and belief by a peace officer or public officer. Section 185(1)(c) to (h) specifies the information the affidavit must contain.

Section 185(1)(c) dictates that the affidavit set out the facts which the application is based upon, including the particulars of the offence. Section 185(1)(d) requires that the affidavit state the type of private communication to be intercepted.

Section 185(1)(e) requires that the affidavit contain the following information: the identity of the known persons whose private communications are to be intercepted, a general description of the nature and location of the place, if known, where the private communications are to be intercepted and a general description of the proposed manner of interception. Note that, unlike the previous two requirements which must be satisfied only if known, the description of the manner of the interception must be given. The person whose private communications are to be intercepted is generally referred to as the object of the interception.

Section 185(1)(f) provides for the affidavit to give the history of any prior applications, including the details of any unsuccessful applications or applications which were withdrawn. Section 185(1)(g) states that the period for which the authorization is sought must be set out in the affidavit.

The final requirement is that the affidavit must state if other investigative procedures have been tried and failed or why they appear unlikely to succeed or why the matter is so urgent that it is impractical to pursue other means of investigation.

Section 185(2) to (5) provides that the notice period within which the object of the interception is to be notified (s. 196(1)) may be extended on application of the Attorney General or Solicitor General. It permits a judge issuing an authorization to grant such an extension. Section 185(2) requires that either the Attorney General or Solicitor General must personally sign the application for this extension. The extension may be for up to three years. Subsection (3) requires that the judge considering the application for the authorization must first consider the application to extend notice under subsec. (2). The test to be applied by the judge, in granting the extension of notice, is that the interests of justice warrant the granting of it. However, subsec. (4) provides that, if the judge declines to grant the application under subsection (2), the applicant for the authorization may withdraw it, in which event the judge shall not consider the application for an authorization and must return all materials relating to the application for the extension of the notice period under subsec. (2) and to the application for authorization to the applicant.

By virtue of s. 487.01(5), this section applies to general warrants to do video surveillance.

ANNOTATIONS

Jurisdiction of judge – As offences under the Narcotic Control Act are ones in respect of which proceedings may be validly instituted at the instance of the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of the Attorney-General of Canada (in view of R. v. Hauser (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 481, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 984, 8 C.R. (3d) 89) an agent designated by the Solicitor-General of Canada may apply for an authorization in respect of such offences: Cordes v. The Queen (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 46, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 1062, 10 C.R. (3d) 186 (7:0).

Since the definition of Attorney-General of Canada in s. 2, supra, is in respect inter alia to both proceedings under other Federal Acts and a conspiracy under this Act to commit an offence under another Federal Act, only the provincial Attorney-General has the power under para. (b) to designate an agent for applications in connection with the Criminal Code offences enumerated under this Part: R. v. Hancock and Proulx (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 544, 36 C.R.N.S. 102 (B.C.C.A.).

The grounds for the application (subsec. (1)(c)) – The prerequisite for the granting of the authorization, as set out in s. 186(1)(a), that the granting of the authorization be in the best interest of the administration of justice imports as a minimum requirement, consistent with s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that the judge be satisfied that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a particular offence or a conspiracy, attempt or incitement to commit it has been, or is being committed and that the authorization sought will afford evidence of that offence: R. v. Duarte (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 240, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30, 71 O.R. (2d) 575n.

The failure of the officer to swear that he had reasonable and probable grounds to support his belief was not a fatal defect. What is required is disclosure of the facts relied upon to justify the belief that an authorization should be granted: R. v. Bicknell (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 545 (B.C.C.A.).

Type of communication to be intercepted (subsec. (1)(c)) – The affidavit must comply frankly, fully and fairly with the provisions of this section and the authorities must not try to conceal their true intention from the authorizing judge. In R. v. Gill (1980), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 169, 18 C.R. (3d) 390, 118 D.L.R. (3d) 618 (B.C.C.A.), it was held that the affidavit by “obfuscation” concealed or failed to reveal the clear intention of the police to intercept the face-to-face oral communications between certain persons who were to be placed in the same gaol cell and as a consequence failed to comply with subsec. (1)(c) and (e).

Identification of “known” persons (subsec. (1)(e)) – A person is known within the meaning of subsec. (1)(e), if the police know of the existence of such person and have reasonable and probable grounds to believe that interception of her communications may assist. If the person meets both of those requirements then interception of her private communications cannot be lawfully made under a “basket clause” for unknown persons: R. v. Chesson (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 65 C.R. (3d) 193, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 148 (4:0).

In the subsequent case of R. v. Duarte, supra, the court accepted that the prerequisite that the granting of the authorization be in the best interest of the administration of justice in s. 186(1)(a) imported as a minimum requirement, consistent with s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that the judge be satisfied that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that an offence has been or is being committed and that the authorization sought will afford evidence of that offence. Care should therefore be taken in the drafting of the affidavit to ensure that, in simply following the wording of para. (1)(e), the authorities do not adopt too low a test in setting out the grounds required by subsec. (1)(c) upon which the authorization may be granted.

An application may be made to intercept, pursuant to a "basket clause", private communications of persons who are both unknown and unidentified at the time of the application: R. v. Samson (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 194, 36 C.R. (3d) 126, 44 O.R. (2d) 205 (Ont. C.A.).

Necessity requirement (subsec. (1)(h)) – In R. v. Garofoli (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 64 C.R. (3d) 193 (Ont. C.A.), rev'd on other grounds (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317 (S.C.C.) the court adopted, as a guide to the interpretation of this paragraph and the requirement in s. 186(1)(b), the decision in People v. Baris, 500 N.Y.S. 2d 572 (A.D. 4 Dept., 1986), interpreting the similar requirement in Title III. In the latter case, it was noted that the police do not have to exhaust all possible steps before requesting a warrant to intercept private communications and wiretapping does not have to be the "last resort". The judge must, however, be apprised of the nature, progress and difficulties in the investigation to insure that wiretapping is more than just a "useful tool". Thus, it was held in R. v. Morrison (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 72 C.R. (3d) 332, 34 O.A.C. 50 (C.A.), that the trial judge properly held that the test was not whether use of wiretapping was a "last resort".

Mere conclusory statements of police officers, unsupported by facts, are not sufficient to meet the necessity requirement. The type of alternative investigatory techniques available will, however, depend on the nature of the offence. Relevant will be, for example, the place of the person in a drug distribution hierarchy and whether he has insulated himself from contact with strangers and the caution exercised by the subjects of the investigation: R. v. Garofoli, supra.

Whether or not the authorities, in order to meet the test of subsec. (1)(b), must show that all other investigative procedures have been utterly exhausted and that interception of private communications is a last resort, the court must at least be apprised of the nature, progress and difficulties in the investigation to ensure that interception of private communications is more than just a useful tool: R. v. Smyk (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 63, 88 Man. R. (2d) 303, 51 W.A.C. 303 (C.A.).

The fact that the police have enough information to lay a charge is not a bar to obtaining an authorization where there are grounds for permitting the investigation to continue by means of intercepted communications as where there is a reasonable expectation that evidence of a further offence might also be obtained: R. v. Paulson (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 344, 94 W.A.C. 217 (B.C.C.A.).

Prior authorizations (subsec. (1)(f)) / [Also see cases noted under s. 186(6).] – On an application for a subsequent authorization in the same investigation there must be full and frank disclosure, but the requirements set out in s. 186(6) need not be complied with: R. v. Moore; R. v. Bogdanich (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 21 C.R. (4th) 387, 45 W.A.C. 253 (B.C.C.A.), aff'd 95 C.C.C. (3d) 288.

JUDGE TO BE SATISFIED / Where authorization not to be given / Terms and conditions / Content and limitation of authorization / Persons designated / Renewal of authorization / Renewal.

186. (1) An authorization under this section may be given if the judge to whom the application is made is satisfied

- (a) that it would be in the best interests of the administration of justice to do so; and
  - (b) that other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed, other investigative procedures are unlikely to succeed or the urgency of the matter is such that it would be impractical to carry out the investigation of the offence using only other investigative procedures.
- (2) No authorization may be given to intercept a private communication at the office or residence of a solicitor, or at any other place ordinarily used by a solicitor and by other solicitors for the purpose of consultation with clients, unless the judge to whom the application is made is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the solicitor, any other solicitor practising with him, any person employed by him or any other such solicitor or a member of the solicitor's household has been or is about to become a party to an offence.
- (3) Where an authorization is given in relation to the interception of private communications at a place described in subsection (2), the judge by whom the authorization is given shall include therein such terms and conditions as he considers advisable to protect privileged communications between solicitors and clients.
- (4) An authorization shall
- (a) state the offence in respect of which private communications may be intercepted;
  - (b) state the type of private communication that may be intercepted;
  - (c) state the identity of the persons, if known, whose private communications are to be intercepted, generally describe the place at which private communications may be intercepted, if a general description of that place can be given, and generally describe the manner of interception that may be used;
  - (d) contain such terms and conditions as the judge considers advisable in the public interest; and
  - (e) be valid for the period, not exceeding sixty days, set out therein.
- (5) The Solicitor General of Canada or the Attorney General, as the case may be, may designate a person or persons who may intercept private communications under authorizations.
- (6) Renewals of an authorization may be given by a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552 on receipt by him of an ex parte application in writing signed by the Attorney General of the province in which the application is made or the Solicitor General of Canada or an agent specially designated in writing for the purposes of section 185 by the Solicitor General of Canada or the Attorney General, as the case may be, accompanied by an affidavit of a peace officer or public officer deposing to the following matters:
- (a) the reason and period for which the renewal is required,
  - (b) full particulars, together with times and dates, when interceptions, if any, were made or attempted under the authorization, and any information that has been obtained by any interception, and
  - (c) the number of instances, if any, on which, to the knowledge and belief of the deponent, an application has been made under this subsection in relation to the same authorization and on which the application was withdrawn or no renewal was given, the date on which each application was made and the name of the judge to whom each such application was made,
- and supported by such other information as the judge may require.
- (7) A renewal of an authorization may be given if the judge to whom the application is made is satisfied that any of the circumstances described in subsection (1) still obtain, but no renewal shall be for a period exceeding sixty days. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 9; 1993, c. 40, s. 6.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The reference to “judge” is a judge referred to in s. 185, being a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in s. 552. The terms “solicitor”, “intercept”, “private communication” and “offence” are defined in s. 183. Attorney General is defined in s. 2. Procedure for obtaining an emergency “36-hour” authorization is set out in s. 188. The documents used on an application are confidential and must be dealt with in accordance with s. 187. Other related provisions are as follows: s. 184, offence to unlawfully intercept private communications [i.e., inter alia, not in accordance with an authorization]; s. 189, admissibility of evidence obtained through interceptions; s. 191, unlawful possession of devices for surreptitious interception; s. 193, unlawful disclosure of intercepted private communication; s. 194, provision for damages for unlawful interceptions; s. 195, reports by Solicitor General of Canada and provincial Attorney General concerning applications for authorizations under this section.

As to the impact of the Charter on the admissibility of evidence, also see notes under s. 189.

Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section. The interception of “consent” interceptions may be authorized under s. 184.2. Also see s. 487.01 which makes this section applicable to obtaining a general warrant to conduct surreptitious video surveillance, s. 492.1 which regulates the use of tracking devices and s. 492.2 which regulates the use of telephone number recorders.

Authorizations may be executed anywhere in Canada in accordance with s. 188.1.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the criteria which a judge is to apply when considering whether to grant a request for an authorization to intercept private communications. It also sets out what must be contained in an authorization, and who may intercept private communications pursuant to an authorization. In addition, it provides for the renewal of an authorization.

Subsection (1) provides two conditions which must be met before a judge may issue an authorization. The first condition is that the interception must be in the best interests of the administration of justice. In addition, s. 186(1)(b) requires that the judge be satisfied of the necessity of this means of investigation. This requirement parallels the contents of the affidavit in support of the application as set out in s. 185(1)(h).

Subsections (2) and (3) impose strict limits on when an authorization may be given in connection with the home or office of a solicitor or any other place ordinarily used by solicitors for the purpose of consulting with their clients. Before such an authorization may be issued, the judge must be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the solicitor, or any of the other categories of people specified in subsec. (2) (generally those who have a close personal or business tie to the lawyer), has been or is about to be a party to an offence. As with all references to “offence” in this Part, it is limited to those offences listed in s. 183. Subsection (3) provides that, if such an authorization is granted, the judge must impose terms and conditions to protect privileged conversations between solicitors and clients. A typical condition which is imposed is that such authorizations be “live monitored”, i.e., listened to by an officer whenever communications are intercepted to ensure that no solicitor-client communications are unintentionally intercepted.

Subsection (4) sets out the terms which must appear in all authorizations and also provides a general power, in s. 186(4)(d), to impose other terms and conditions which the judge considers advisable in the public interest. Section 186(4)(a) requires that the offence in respect of which the authorization is given be stated. Section 186(4)(b) mandates that the type of private communication that may be intercepted be stated. Section 186(4)(c) parallels the requirements for the affidavit in support of the application set out in s. 185(1)(e) which deal with the identity of the persons whose communications are to be intercepted and a description of the place and manner of the interception. The final condition which must appear in the authorization is the period for which it is valid, not exceeding 60 days.

Section 186(5) permits the Solicitor General or the Attorney General to designate who may make the authorized intercept.

Subsection (6) deals with renewal of authorizations. The procedure set out for renewals parallels that in s. 185 dealing with initial applications, including that they be made ex parte and be supported by an affidavit. Section 186(6)(c) parallels s. 185(1)(f). The additional requirements relate to full disclosure of the reasons for the renewal and the interceptions made to date under the original authorization. In addition, the applicant must provide whatever other information the judge hearing the application may require. The criteria to be applied in deciding whether to grant a renewal are set out in subsec. (7). If the conditions set out in subsec. (1) still obtain, the judge may grant the renewal for no more than 60 days.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(a) – Surreptitious electronic surveillance constitutes a search or seizure within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Duarte (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 240, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30, 71 O.R. (2d) 575n.

In R. v. Duarte, supra, the court accepted that the prerequisite that the granting of the authorization be in the best interest of the administration of justice imported as a minimum requirement, consistent with s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that the judge be satisfied that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that an offence has been, or is being, committed and that the authorization sought will afford evidence of that offence.

Hearsay statements of an informer may provide reasonable and probable grounds to justify the granting of an authorization to intercept private communications. A tip from an informer by itself, however, is insufficient to establish reasonable and probable grounds. The reliability of the tip is to be assessed by recourse to the totality of the circumstances. The court will look to a variety of factors including the degree of detail of the tip, the informer's source of knowledge, and any indicia of the informer's reliability such as past performance or confirmation from other investigative sources. The results of the interception cannot, however, ex post facto provide evidence of the reliability of the information: R. v. Garofoli (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

Subsec. (1)(b) – See notes under heading Necessity requirement (subsec. (1)(h)) in s. 185.

Subsec. (2), (3) / Interception of solicitor-client communications – In seeking to admit private communications intercepted pursuant to an authorization there is no burden on the Crown to prove this subsection has not been breached: R. v. Lyons et al. (1979), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 113 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

A police cell block where lawyers were permitted to consult with their clients was nevertheless held not to be a place ordinarily used by a solicitor for the purpose of consultation with clients. Use of the cells in this manner constituted an unusual or extraordinary use: R. v. Johnny and Billy (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 33 (B.C.S.C.), affd 5 C.C.C. (3d) 538, 149 D.L.R. (3d) 710 (C.A.).

Subsec. (3) – This subsection does not require that the Judge impose conditions if he does not consider them advisable: R. v. Chambers (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 132, 37 C.R. (3d) 128 (B.C.C.A.), affd 26 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 52 C.R. (3d) 394, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 29.

Subsec. (4) / Contents of authorization / The offence (para. (a)) – The purpose of this requirement is to demonstrate, on the face of the authorization, that the judge has exercised his jurisdiction within the limits described in s. 183 and thus a simple generic statement of the offence, in this case "murder" and "conspiracy to commit murder", is sufficient: R. v. Mathurin (1978), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 263 (Que. C.A.).

Basket clause (para. (c)) – In a case involving consideration of the former s. 178.13(2)(c) it was held that an authorization providing for the interception of the private communications of a certain named person and that "such interceptions" may be made at certain addresses does not authorize the interception of the communications of other unnamed persons at those addresses. It was clear from the wording of the clause that it was not intended to operate as a "basket clause" so as to authorize the interception of conversations of unknown persons at those addresses: R. v. Douglas (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 395 (Ont. C.A.).

An authorization simply authorizing the interception of conversations of certain named persons and "other persons as yet unknown who may become identified within the time limit of this authorization" did not sufficiently comply with the former s. 178.13(2) in so far as it purported to authorize the interception of private communications of unknown persons. Nor was this defect cured by inclusion in the authorization of the standard clause authorizing the installation of electromagnetic and other devices. This clause was not a description of the manner of interception within the meaning of that subsection: R. v. Badovinac (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 65 (Ont. C.A.).

A "basket clause" must identify the class of persons who are to be intercepted and may not simply delegate that function to the police by identifying the unknown persons who may be intercepted as persons of whom there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the interception of their private communications may assist the investigation of any of the offences named in the order. This wording, virtually identical to s. 185(1)(e) simply vests a discretion in the police to determine who may be intercepted: R. v. Paterson, Ackworth and Kovach (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 137, 44 C.R. (3d) 150 (Ont. C.A.), affd 39 C.C.C. (3d) 575, 60 C.R. (3d) 107 N.R. 316 (S.C.C.) 7:0.

To be named in the authorization as a known person, the existence of that person must be known to the police and must be one the interception of whose private communications there are reasonable grounds to believe may assist the investigation of the offence. If at the time the police apply for an authorization a person meets these criteria she will be a known person and therefore if her communications are to be admitted, she must be named in the authorization as a target for interception: R. v. Chesson (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 65 C.R. (3d) 193, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 148 (4:0).

Place of interception (para. (c)) – A clause in an authorization purporting to authorize the interception of a named person's communications without any limitation as to place is invalid: R. v. Riich et al. (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 289, 37 A.R. 614 (C.A.) affd 16 C.C.C. (3d) 191n, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 333 sub nom. R. v. Brese et al. (7:0). Similarly, Grabowski v. The Queen (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 22 D.L.R. (4th) 725 (S.C.C.) (7:0) where it was held that a clause was invalid which authorized interception of the private communications of named persons and unknown persons provided for by the "basket clause" at any place where such persons could be found. As it stood, the authorization contained no limitations as to persons or place or interception. However, the authorization was severable and the offending clause relating to interception at unspecified locations could be excluded.

A clause in an authorization may validly provide for interception of private communications at places resorted to by the named targets. Inclusion of such a clause does not, per se, infringe s. 8 of the Charter. The judge can properly find that there are reasonable and probable grounds for believing that evidence will be obtained as to the commission of the offence with respect to certain classes of places. Further, there is no requirement that the authorization include the most specific description possible, and thus a general resort to a clause was sufficient to include pay telephones resorted to by the targets. However, in some circumstances interceptions at pay telephones may violate s. 8. Thus, in this case, although prior to seeking the first of several authorizations, it was known to the police that the named targets resorted to public telephones, there was nothing in the authorizations to indicate that such telephones were to be wire-tapped nor that the slightest consideration was given to protection of the public interest by imposing conditions as contemplated by para. (d). At a minimum, where it is intended to intercept pay telephones pursuant to a resort to a clause, the authorization should provide that conversations at a public telephone not be intercepted unless there are reasonable and probable grounds for believing that the target was using the telephone at the time that the device was activated: R. v. Thompson (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 225, [1990] 6 W.W.R. 481 (S.C.C.) (4:2).

An automobile is a “place” within the meaning of this subsection: R. v. Papalia (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 65 C.R. (3d) 226, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 137 (4:0).

Description of manner of interception (para. (c)) – It was held in Re Glesby et al. and The Queen (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 332, 135 D.L.R. (3d) 524 (Man. Q.B.), affd 70 C.C.C. (2d) 148, [1982] 5 W.W.R. 351, sub nom. Re Diamond and The Queen (C.A.) that an authorization complied with the present subsec. (2)(c) as to generally describing the manner of interception where it authorized the police to “intercept or cause to be intercepted private communications as hereunder specified and for such purposes to take all steps as are reasonably necessary to install, make use of, monitor and remove any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical and other device as may be required to implement this authorization”.

An authorization complies with the requirement in para. (c) as to description of the manner of interception although that description authorizes the use of any electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device which in the opinion of the police is required to investigate the offence: R. v. Lawrence (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 192n, 63 C.R. (3d) 398, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 619.

Surreptitious entry – It is implied in the authorization that the police officer may make a surreptitious entry into private premises to install a device such as a radio transmitter where such entry is necessary to implement the authorization and the authorizing judge has not included in the authorization any limitations on or prohibition of such entry. However, the judge in the exercise of his supervisory jurisdiction should designate the procedures, devices and conditions which are necessary in the public interest: Lyons et al. v. The Queen (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 417, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 1, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 633 (4:2); Reference re an Application for an Authorization (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 466, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 193, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 697 (4:2).

However, the guarantee to protection against unreasonable search and seizure in s. 8 of the Charter requires that, with respect to private residences, the authorizing judge should consider what conditions, if any, are required in the public interest. In order to ensure that the authorizing judge has at least considered these matters, the authorization should, at minimum, refer specifically to each place that is a private residence and designate the type of devices that may be employed. In the absence of express mention of a private residence in the authorization, and hence this minimal protection, the safeguards provided by the judicial role are illusory. Surreptitious entry of a private dwelling which has not been specifically mentioned in the authorization is unreasonable and contrary to s. 8 of the Charter. Evidence obtained pursuant to such an entry may be excluded under s. 24(2) of the Charter: R. v. Thompson, supra.

Other terms and conditions (para. (d)) – Failure to include a clause in an authorization imposing a duty on police to minimize interception of irrelevant conversations is not a violation of the guarantee to protection against unreasonable search or seizure in s. 8 of the Charter: R. v. Garofoli (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

Period of time (para. (e)) – The authorization to comply with para. (e) may state merely that it is valid for a period not exceeding a certain number of days commencing on a specified date. It need not set out a specific number of identifiable days to be valid: R. v.

Murphy and Holme (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 152 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 43 N.R. 450n.

A statement in the preamble of the authorization to the effect that interception was to be by "electronic" means was an adequate description of the manner of interception: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 113 (Ont. C.A.).

Severance – An authorization is severable and an offending clause relating to interception at unspecified locations, a clause which was never resorted to, may be severed and the balance of the authorization upheld: Grabowski v. The Queen, supra.

Where, however, the good and bad parts of the authorization are so interwoven that they cannot be separated, then it is not possible to sever the valid portions of the authorization from the invalid portion and the trial court has no power to amend the authorization so as to place a limit on the places where the interception of communications of unknown persons could have been made: R. v. Braithwaite (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 348, 72 A.R. 227 (C.A.).

Review of validity of authorization – Since a wiretap constitutes a search or seizure within the meaning of s. 8 of the Charter, statutory provisions authorizing interception of private communications must conform to the minimum constitutional requirements demanded by s. 8 of the Charter. Thus, before granting an authorization, a judge must be satisfied that the granting of the authorization is in the best interests of the administration of justice. This requires that the judge be satisfied by affidavit that there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a specified crime has been or is being committed and that the interception of the private communications in question will afford evidence of the crime. In addition, the applicant must meet the requirements of subsec. (1)(b) with respect to the unavailability of other investigative procedures. The statutory requirements of subsec. (1)(a) are identical to the constitutional requirements. The review to determine compliance with the statutory minimum requirements and hence the minimum constitutional requirements is to be conducted by the trial judge rather than a judge of the court which granted the authorization. The judge conducting the review must hear evidence and submissions as to whether the interception constitutes an unreasonable search and seizure. Since this is an issue as to the admissibility of evidence, it is an issue which may be raised at trial. Applications for review should be made to the trial judge. If the judge concludes that the minimum statutory conditions set out in subsec. (1)(a) have not been complied with then the search is not authorized by law and is unlawful. The judge should not, however, review the authorization de novo and should not substitute his view for that of the authorizing judge. If based on the record which was before the authorizing judge as amplified on the review, the trial judge concludes that the authorizing judge could have granted the authorization then he should not interfere. In this process, the existence of fraud, non-disclosure, misleading evidence and new evidence are not prerequisites to a review but merely relevant factors, their sole impact being to determine whether there continues to be any basis for the decision of the authorizing judge: R. v. Garofoli, supra.

Even though the accused may not have been directly incriminated by conversations recorded pursuant to an authorization, where incriminating remarks made by other individuals during the conversations would be admissible as evidence against the accused under the co-conspirators exception to the rule against hearsay, then it would seem that the accused has standing to challenge the validity of the authorization: R. v. Durette, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 469, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 28 C.R. (4th) 1.

Errors in the information presented to the authorizing judge, whether advertent or even fraudulent, are only factors to be considered in deciding whether or not to set aside the authorization. The trial judge should examine the information in the affidavit which was independent of the evidence found to be misleading to determine whether there was sufficient reliable information to support an authorization: R. v. Bisson, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 1097, 94 C.C.C. (3d) 94, 65 Q.A.C. 241.

Cross-examination of deponent of affidavit – While the accused has no right to cross-examine the deponent of the affidavit, the trial judge should grant leave to cross-examine where he is satisfied that cross-examination is necessary to enable the accused to make full answer and defence. A basis must be shown by the accused for the view that the cross-examination will elicit testimony tending to discredit the existence of one of the preconditions to the authorization, as, for example, the existence of reasonable and probable grounds. The test previously applied by most of the lower courts, refusing to permit counsel for the accused to cross-examine the deponent of the affidavit unless there was prima facie proof of a deliberate falsehood or reckless disregard for the truth in respect of statements in the affidavit and that this false statement is necessary to the finding that there were grounds for granting the authorization, was too strict. Cross-examination will be limited by the trial judge to questions that are directed to establish that there was no basis upon which the authorization could have been granted. With respect to confidential informers, there is no right to cross-examine. The informer is not a witness and cannot be identified, unless the accused brings himself within the exception which permits disclosure of the informer's identity where the accused's innocence is at stake: R. v. Garofoli, supra.

Where the actual deponent of the affidavit had only a limited role in the investigation, the accused should be permitted to cross-examine the sub-affiant police officers who were actively involved in the investigation and provided the deponent with the information used for the affidavit: R. v. Pasaluko (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 190 (B.C.S.C.).

Subsec. (5) / [Designation of persons who may intercept] – A designation by the provincial Attorney General is valid notwithstanding it is not expressly limited to offences within provincial jurisdiction (i.e., Code offences). A designation in general terms will be construed as being so limited: R. v. Miller and Thomas (No. 2) (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 115 (B.C. Co. Ct.). Furthermore, this subsection does not mean that interceptions may only be made by designated interceptors: R. v. Miller and Thomas (No. 3) (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 118 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

If an interceptor is named in the authorization and described as a person designated by the Attorney-General, the presumption of regularity applies and the Crown is not required to prove the designation in the absence of evidence to indicate some irregularity: R. v. Shaw (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 348, 45 N.B.R. (2d) 21 (C.A.).

Where authority to intercept was given to a particular commanding officer or persons acting under his authority then the right to intercept would include a person acting within the scope or ambit of the general authority conferred upon him by his commanding officer. Such person need not be specifically and personally authorized by the commanding officer: R. v. Vransky, Zikan and Dvorak (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 14 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the authorization names a certain interceptor and “any person acting under his authority” it is incumbent on the Crown to establish that the persons participating in the interceptions were in fact acting under his authority. On the other hand, interceptions recorded automatically at times when the equipment was not being monitored are admissible: R. v. Shaw, supra.

Subsec. (6), (7) / [Renewals] – A renewal may only extend the time of the original authorization. It may not extend or modify the terms of the original authorization by including, for example, a person not provided for in the original authorization: R. v. Badovinac, supra. Nor may the renewal change the address of the place of interception: R. v. Dass (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 194, 8 C.R. (3d) 224 (Man. C.A.), leave to appeal refused Dec. 13, 1979.

Where, however, it is apparent that the second order was intended to be both a renewal of the original authorization and a new authorization it may properly include persons not included in the original authorization: R. v. Vransky, Zikan and Dvorak (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 14 (Ont. C.A.), application for leave to appeal to S.C.C. dismissed May 6, 1980.

Where the authorities seek to intercept the private communications of more targets than they may apply for a fresh authorization with respect to all of the proposed targets. There is no requirement that a renewal be obtained with respect to the persons named in the original authorization: R. v. Thompson, supra.

Further, where the authorities do obtain a second authorization, which includes additional persons and places, they do not have to comply with the provisions of subsec. (6) and thus do not have to disclose all of the details of each and every piece of incriminating evidence known to the authorities. The material in support of the fresh authorization should, however, include a full, fair and frank disclosure of relevant intercepted private communications obtained up to the time of the second authorization: R. v. Moore; R. v. Bogdanich (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 21 C.R. (4th) 387, 45 W.A.C. 253 (B.C.C.A.), affd [1995] 1 S.C.R. 756, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 288, 38 C.R. (4th) 44.

MANNER IN WHICH APPLICATION TO BE KEPT SECRET / Exception / Opening for further application / Opening on order of judge / Opening on order of trial judge / Order for destruction of documents / Order of judge / Idem / Editing of copies / Accused to be provided with copies / Original documents to be returned / Deleted parts.

187. (1) All documents relating to an application made pursuant to any provision of this Part are confidential and, subject to subsection (1.1), shall be placed in a packet and sealed by the judge to whom the application is made immediately on determination of the application, and that packet shall be kept in the custody of the court in a place to which the public has no access or in such other place as the judge may authorize and shall not be dealt with except in accordance with subsections (1.2) to (1.5).

(1.1) An authorization given under this Part need not be placed in the packet except where, pursuant to subsection 184.3(7) or (8), the original authorization is in the hands of the judge, in which case that judge must place it in the packet and the facsimile remains with the applicant.

(1.2) The sealed packet may be opened and its contents removed for the purpose of dealing with an application for a further authorization or with an application for renewal of an authorization.

(1.3) A provincial court judge, a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552 may order that the sealed packet be opened and its contents removed for the purpose of copying and examining the documents contained in the packet.

(1.4) A judge or provincial court judge before whom a trial is to be held and who has jurisdiction in the province in which an authorization was given may order that the sealed packet be opened and its contents removed for the purpose of copying and examining the documents contained in the packet if

- (a) any matter relevant to the authorization or any evidence obtained pursuant to the authorization is in issue in the trial; and
- (b) the accused applies for such an order for the purpose of consulting the documents to prepare for trial.

(1.5) Where a sealed packet is opened, its contents shall not be destroyed except pursuant to an order of a judge of the same court as the judge who gave the authorization.

(2) An order under subsection (1.2), (1.3), (1.4) or (1.5) made with respect to documents relating to an application made pursuant to section 185 or subsection 186(6) or 196(2) may only be made after the Attorney General or the Solicitor General by whom or on whose authority the application for the authorization to which the order relates was made has been given an opportunity to be heard.

(3) An order under subsection (1.2), (1.3), (1.4) or (1.5) made with respect to documents relating to an application made pursuant to subsection 184.2(2) or section 184.3 may only be made after the Attorney General has been given an opportunity to be heard.

(4) Where a prosecution has been commenced and an accused applies for an order for the copying and examination of documents pursuant to subsection (1.3) or (1.4), the judge shall not, notwithstanding those subsections, provide any copy of any document to the accused until the prosecutor has deleted any part of the copy of the document that the prosecutor believes would be prejudicial to the public interest, including any part that the prosecutor believes could

- (a) compromise the identity of any confidential informant;
- (b) compromise the nature and extent of ongoing investigations;
- (c) endanger persons engaged in particular intelligence-gathering techniques and thereby prejudice future investigations in which similar techniques would be used; or
- (d) prejudice the interests of innocent persons.

(5) After the prosecutor has deleted the parts of the copy of the document to be given to the accused under subsection (4), the accused shall be provided with an edited copy of the document.

(6) After the accused has received an edited copy of a document, the prosecutor shall keep a copy of the original document, and an edited copy of the document and the original document shall be returned to the packet and the packet resealed.

(7) An accused to whom an edited copy of a document has been provided pursuant to subsection (5) may request that the judge before whom the trial is to be held order that any part of the document deleted by the prosecutor be made available to the accused, and the judge shall order that a copy of any part that, in the opinion of the judge, is required in order for the accused to make full answer and defence and for which the provision of a judicial summary would not be sufficient, be made available to the accused. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2, R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 24; 1993, c. 40, s. 7.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Note that s. 24 of the Access to Information Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. A-1 provides that the head of a government institution shall refuse to disclose any record requested under that Act that contains information, the disclosure of which is restricted by or pursuant to this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the manner in which certain documents relating to applications under this Part are to be kept confidential. Subject to subsec. (1.1), all documents are to be placed in a sealed packet and kept in the custody of the court. By virtue of subsec. (1.1), the authorization itself is not placed in the packet except in the case of the telecommunication procedure under s. 184.3 in which case the authorization is placed in the sealed packet and the facsimile remains with the applicant.

The other provisions of this section deal with the circumstances in which the sealed packet can be opened and the material used on the application disclosed. Under subsec. (1.2), the packet may be opened for the purpose of a renewal or further authorization. Under subsec. (1.3), a judge may permit the packet to be opened and the contents copied and examined. Similarly, the trial judge, under subsec. (1.4), may permit the packet to be opened and the contents copied and examined where application is made by the accused for the purpose of preparing for trial and any matter relevant to the authorization or any evidence obtained pursuant to the authorization is "in issue" in the trial. These applications must be made upon notice to the Attorney General.

Subsections (4) to (7) then set out the editing procedure. In summary Crown counsel will first edit the material to remove information, the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interest. The accused is then provided with the edited copy. The accused, however, may apply to the trial judge for an order that portions which were deleted be disclosed to the accused. The further disclosure order will be made where the judge is of the opinion that the additional material is necessary in order for the accused to make full answer and defence and where provision of a "judicial summary" of the deleted material would not be sufficient. This process roughly tracks the decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada in Dersch v. Canada (Attorney General) (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 132, 80 C.R. (3d) 299, [1991] 1 W.W.R. 231 and R. v. Garofoli (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317. The former decision had held under the predecessor legislation that, as a result of the enactment of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the accused had the right to access to the sealed packet in order to make full answer and defence. The latter decision had laid out a procedure for editing the affidavit and is noted below and noted under s. 186 in reference to the right to cross-examine the deponent of the affidavit.

ANNOTATIONS

NOTE: The cases noted under this section were decided under the predecessor legislation but were considered to be of assistance in applying this legislation.

Access to sealed packet – An application for access to the sealed packet may be made to a superior court judge prior to the preliminary inquiry. That judge may also edit the affidavit. Where, however, the accused claims that he needs access to the identity of a secret informer then that issue will probably have to be determined by the trial judge: R. v. Giannakopoulos (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 541, 82 Alta. L.R. (2d) 243 (Q.B.).

The right to full disclosure requires that an accused, against whom wiretap evidence is to be adduced, have access to an edited copy of the affidavit in the sealed packet prior to electing his mode of trial. At this initial stage, the affidavit is to be edited by Crown counsel since only the trial judge has the power to make the final determination as to what material should be edited from the affidavit: R. v. Aranda (1992), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 420 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)).

Where there is likely no affidavit in the sealed packet because the application was brought on an emergency basis pursuant to s. 188 the accused is entitled to cross-examine the person upon whose submissions the order was granted: R. v. Graves et al. (1987), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 552 (N.S.S.C.).

Editing of affidavit – If the Crown can support the authorization on the basis of the material as edited then the authorization is confirmed. If, however, the editing renders the authorization insupportable then the Crown may apply to have the trial judge consider as much of the excised material as is necessary to support the authorization. The trial judge should accede to such a request only if satisfied that the accused is sufficiently aware of the nature of the excised material to challenge it in argument or by evidence. In this respect, a judicial summary of the excised material should be provided if it will fulfil that function: R. v. Garofoli (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

When determining whether the contents of a wiretap affidavit should be disclosed to an accused, full disclosure should be the rule, subject to certain exceptions based upon overriding public interests which may justify non-disclosure. It was improper to edit out material which had already been disclosed in earlier proceedings arising out of the same investigation. Since it is only confidential information that should be edited, the affidavits as edited at the earlier trial should have been the starting point in this case. It was also an error to excise not only information which might tend to identify informers but information obtained from informers and others and material characterized merely as commentary, summary or opinion. The discretion to determine what editing is required to ensure that the public interest is protected does not include the power to edit material whose continued confidentiality clearly is not justified by any of the public interest concerns: R. v. Durette, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 469, 88 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 28 C.R. (4th) 1.

APPLICATIONS TO SPECIALLY APPOINTED JUDGES / Authorizations in emergency / Certain interceptions deemed not lawful / Definition of “Chief Justice” / Inadmissibility of evidence.

188. (1) Notwithstanding section 185, an application made under that section for an authorization may be made ex parte to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, or a judge as defined in section 552, designated from time to time by the Chief Justice, by a peace officer specially designated in writing, by name or otherwise, for the purposes of this section by

- (a) the Solicitor General of Canada, if the offence is one in respect of which proceedings, if any, may be instituted by the Government of Canada and conducted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada, or
- (b) the Attorney General of a province, in respect of any other offence in the province, if the urgency of the situation requires interception of private communications to commence before an authorization could, with reasonable diligence, be obtained under section 186.

(2) Where the judge to whom an application is made pursuant to subsection (1) is satisfied that the urgency of the situation requires that interception of private communications commence before an authorization could, with reasonable diligence, be obtained under section 186, he may, on such terms and conditions, if any, as he considers advisable, give an authorization in writing for a period of up to thirty-six hours.

(3) [Repealed. 1993, c. 40, s. 8.]

(4) In this section, “Chief Justice” means

- (a) in the Province of Ontario, the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court;
- (b) in the Province of Quebec, the Chief Justice of the Superior Court;
- (c) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Trial Division;
- (d) in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen’s Bench;
- (e) in the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Trial Division; and
- (f) in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, the judge of the Supreme Court with the earliest date of appointment to the court in question.

NOTE: Subsec. (4)(f) re-enacted 1993, c. 28, s. 78 (to come into force April 1, 1999). The text, which is not yet in force and therefore printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

- (f) in the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, the judge of the Supreme Court with the earliest date of appointment to the court in question.

(5) The trial judge may deem inadmissible the evidence obtained by means of an interception of a private communication pursuant to a subsequent authorization given under this section, where he finds that the application for the subsequent authorization was based on the same facts, and involved the interception of the private communications of the same person or persons, or related to the same offence, on which the application for the original authorization was based. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1974-75-76, c. 19, s. 1; 1978-79, c. 11, s. 10; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 25; c. 27 (2nd Supp.), s. 10; 1990, c. 17, s. 10; 1992, c. 1, s. 58; 1992, c. 51, s. 35; 1993, c. 28, s. 78; 1993, c. 40, s. 8.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "intercept", "offence" and "private communication" are defined in s. 183. "Peace officer" and "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" are defined in s. 2.

The procedure for applying for and granting of a normal "60-day" authorization is dealt with in ss. 185 and 186. Admissibility of evidence obtained as a result of execution of the authorization is dealt with in s. 189. The unlawful interception offence in s. 184 would not apply to a person acting under an authorization granted under this section by virtue of s. 184(2)(b).

Authorizations may be executed anywhere in Canada in accordance with s. 188.1. Provision is made in s. 487.02 for the making of an assistance order to require persons to co-operate in the carrying out of orders made under this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes emergency applications for authorizations to be issued to a designated judge and sets out an evidentiary rule regarding the admission of such evidence at trial.

Section 188(1) permits such applications to be made ex parte by a peace officer to a judge designated by the Chief Justice of a province, if the urgency of the situation requires that an interception be made before one could, with reasonable diligence, bring an application in accordance with s. 186. "Chief Justice" is defined in s. 188(4). The peace officer bringing the application must be designated in writing by either the Attorney General or the Solicitor General (depending on whose behalf the application is made) for the purpose of this section. Subsection (2) provides that, if the judge is satisfied that the urgency of the situation requires that the interception should begin before a conventional application could, with reasonable diligence, be made, he may issue a written authorization. This type of authorization can last for a maximum of 36 hours and may contain whatever terms and conditions the judge deems advisable.

Subsection (5) gives a trial judge the discretion to exclude evidence of private communications intercepted under a subsequent emergency authorization under certain circumstances. The circumstances triggering the discretion are that the judge finds that the subsequent authorization was based on the same facts, and involved the same targeted persons or the same offence, as the first application for an authorization was based upon.

ANNOTATIONS

To comply with the requirements of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights, the information which forms the basis for the application under this section must be made on oath or affirmation, or semble, the informant must undertake to confirm the information under oath. It may also be that s. 8 requires that the process relating to the obtaining of the authorization includes some form of memorializing or recording the gist of the sworn allegations: R. v. Galbraith (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 178, 70 C.R. (3d) 392 (Alta. C.A.). Folld R. v. Laudicina (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 281, 41 C.R.R. 142 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The certificate referred to in subsec. (3) may be given at the same time as the authorization is granted and based on the same material: R. v. Laudicina, supra.

EXECUTION OF AUTHORIZATIONS / Execution in another province.

188.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the interception of a private communication authorized pursuant to section 184.2, 184.3, 186 or 188 may be carried out anywhere in Canada.

(2) Where an authorization is given under section 184.2, 184.3, 186 or 188 in one province but it may reasonably be expected that it is to be executed in another province and the execution of the authorization would require entry into or upon the property of any person in the other province or would require that an order under section 487.02 be made with respect to any person in that other province, a judge in the other province may, on application, confirm the authorization and when the authorization is so confirmed, it shall have full force and effect in that other province as though it had originally been given in that other province. 1993, c. 40, s. 9.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The various orders referred to in this section are the authorizations to intercept with consent of one of the parties [ss. 184.2 and 184.3]; the normal 60-day order for surreptitious interception [s. 186] and the emergency 36-hour authorization [s. 188]. This section also applies to general warrants to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5).

SYNOPSIS

This section reverses case law under the predecessor legislation which had held that a judge in one province could not grant an authorization to intercept private communications in another province. By virtue of subsec. (1), the authorization may be carried out anywhere in Canada. The only caveat is that, pursuant to subsec. (2), if it will be necessary to enter private property in the other province or to obtain an assistance order under s. 487.02, then the authorization must be confirmed in the other province. It is unclear what material, other than the authorization, needs to be placed before the judge in the other province.

NO CIVIL OR CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

188.2 No person who acts in accordance with an authorization or under section 184.1 or 184.4 or who aids, in good faith, a person who he or she believes on reasonable grounds is acting in accordance with an authorization or under one of those sections incurs any criminal or civil liability for anything reasonably done further to the authorization or to that section. 1993, c. 40, s. 9.

Notice of intention to produce evidence / Privileged evidence.

189. (1) to (4) [Repealed. 1993, c. 40, s. 10.]

(5) The contents of a private communication that is obtained from an interception of the private communication pursuant to any provision of, or pursuant to an authorization given under, this Part shall not be received in evidence unless the party intending to adduce it has given to the accused reasonable notice of the intention together with

(a) a transcript of the private communication, where it will be adduced in the form of a recording, or a statement setting out full particulars of the private communication, where evidence of the private communication will be given viva voce; and

(b) a statement respecting the time, place and date of the private communication and the parties thereto, if known.

(6) Any information obtained by an interception that, but for the interception, would have been privileged remains privileged and inadmissible as evidence without the consent of the person enjoying the privilege. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 10; 1993, c. 40, s. 10.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “intercept” and “private communication” are defined in s. 183. Section 190 makes provision for the giving of further particulars of the private communication that is intended to be adduced in evidence. The notice requirement in subsec. (5) of this section is distinct from the requirements of s. 196 which requires the Attorney General or Solicitor General to give notice to a person who has been the target of an interception pursuant to an authorization.

SYNOPSIS

This section imposes notice and disclosure requirements which must be complied with before evidence of lawfully intercepted private communications may be received in evidence. The accused must receive reasonable notice of the intention to introduce such evidence along with either a transcript of the intercepted private communications or a statement setting out the full particulars of the communication (depending on how it is intended that the evidence be adduced) and details of the place, date, time of, and parties to, the communication (if known).

Subsection (6) protects the character of intercepted otherwise privileged communications by providing that such evidence is inadmissible without the consent of the person who enjoys the privilege.

ANNOTATIONS

Many of the annotations under this section have been removed, consequent upon the amendment of this section to remove the automatic exclusionary rule for unlawfully intercepted private communications. Nevertheless, where private communications have been unlawfully intercepted then there will likely be a violation of s. 8 of the Charter. It has previously been held that a search will be reasonable if it is authorized by law, if the law itself is reasonable and if the manner in which the search was carried out is reasonable: R. v. Collins (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 56 C.R. (3d) 193 [1987] 1 S.C.R. 265. In considering whether the particular interception was lawful, reference should be made to the notes under ss. 184 to 186 which authorize interceptions and to the notes under this section which deal with circumstances in which the interception has been lawfully made. If the search or seizure of the evidence is unlawful and unreasonable then the evidence is subject to exclusion if the conditions in s. 24(2) of the Charter have been fulfilled. Reference should also be made to the notes under ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Charter, infra.

Meaning of "intercepted" – "Intercepted" means an interference by a third party between the place of origin and the place of destination of the communication and does not include the situation where there are only two people involved although the originator is mistaken as to the identity of the party receiving the communication: R. v. McQueen (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 262, [1975] 6 W.W.R. 604 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). Contra: R. v. Bengert et al. (1978), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 457, 15 C.R. (3d) 7 (B.C.S.C.).

Eavesdropping by a police officer as to the private conversation between two accused in a prison cell constitutes the interception of a private communication within the meaning of this section: R. v. Boutilier and Melnick (1976), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 76 D.L.R. (3d) 291 (N.S.S.C. T.D.). Contra: R. v. Beckner (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 356 (Ont. C.A.) where it was held that Part VI has no application where the conversation is merely overheard by a third party without the use of any mechanical or other device. Similarly, where the recipient of the conversation testifies as to its contents, the provisions of this Part have no application: R. v. Gamble and Nichols (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 415 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Unlawful interception – Evidence of private communications, intercepted by the police with the consent of one of the parties to the communication but without an authorization, violates s. 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the evidence will be inadmissible if its admission would bring the administration of justice into disrepute within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Charter. Where, however, the police acted in good faith, in reasonable reliance on what they understood the law to be as set out in s. 184(2)(a), then the evidence should be admitted: R. v. Duarte (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 65 D.L.R. (4th) 240, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 30, 71 O.R. (2d) 575n.

Where the evidence of the intercepted communication was inadmissible against the co-conspirator by reason of a violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms then it was not admissible against the accused. Where the Crown seeks to rely on the co-conspirators exception to the hearsay rule, there is a threshold condition that the tendered evidence be admissible against the person who actually made the statements in question: R. v. Montoute (1991), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 113 A.R. 95 (C.A.).

Meaning of “lawfully made” – The interception of an accused’s communication is not lawfully made where the accused was not named in the authorization, and being known to the police at the time of the application for the authorization could not therefore be covered by a “basket clause” for unknown persons. Such person’s private communications are not admissible even if she is in communication with a named person: R. v. Chesson (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 65 C.R. (3d) 193, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 148 (4:0).

If the trial judge, in conducting a review of the sufficiency of the affidavit in support of the application for an authorization, concludes that the minimum statutory conditions set out in s. 186(1)(a) have not been complied with then the search is not authorized by law and is unlawful. R. v. Garofoli (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 161, 80 C.R. (3d) 317 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

While inclusion of a general “resort to” clause in an authorization and interception of conversations at places resorted to by the named targets is lawful under the authorization, the manner in which the authorization was executed may be a violation of s. 8 of the Charter. Thus, where pay telephones were wiretapped in the absence of reasonable and probable grounds for believing that a target was using the telephone at the time then there was a violation of s. 8 and evidence obtained as a result of such interceptions may be inadmissible under s. 24(2) of the Charter: R. v. Thompson (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 225, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1111, 73 D.L.R. (4th) 596 (4:2).

Proof of compliance with and validity of authorization – Where an authorization permits interception of private communications at places resorted to by the targets, there must be extrinsic evidence that the target person resorted to the particular location. Identification of the target person’s voice from the interception cannot alone be sufficient to comply with the authorization. The level of evidence required is that which would lead the police to believe on reasonable and probable grounds that a person will resort to a particular location. Resorting to a particular location can be established through a previously lawfully authorized interception. Merely placing a wiretap on public telephones because of their proximity to where one of the targets was staying would not be sufficient evidence to act upon. An interception at a place, for which sufficient evidence did not exist that it was a place resorted to by the target, would be unlawful: R. v. Thompson, supra.

Where the authorization fails to describe the place at which the private communication of named persons may be intercepted, where such a description must be given as required by s. 186(4)(c), then interceptions made pursuant to such an authorization are not lawfully made: R. v. Blacquiere et al. (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 330, 28 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 336 (P.E.I.S.C.).

Interceptions of private communications pursuant to an authorization which permits installation of a device in a motor vehicle is not rendered unlawful by reason of the fact that the device used is attached to the vehicle’s battery: R. v. Chesson (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 65 C.R. (3d) 193, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 148: (4:0).

Where there is a clear dividing line between the good and bad parts of an authorization so that they are not so interwoven that they cannot be separated but are actually separate authorizations given in the same order, the court can divide the order, preserve the valid portion which then forms the authorization: Grabowski v. The Queen (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 449, 22 D.L.R. (4th) 725 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Subsec. (5) [Notice] / Persons entitled to notice – On a joint trial all the accused must be served with the notice prescribed by this subsection not merely those accused who were the subject of the interception: R. v. Viscount et al. (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 533 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

A co-accused has the right to notice of another accused's intention to adduce the contents of intercepted communications during the course of their joint trial: R. v. Proudfoot (1995), 102 C.C.C. (3d) 260, 102 W.A.C. 241 sub nom. R. v. Steel, 34 Alta. L.R. (3d) 426 (C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Nygaard and Schimmens (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 72 C.R. (3d) 257, [1990] 1 W.W.R. 1 (S.C.C.) (8:1), that this section applies where Crown counsel sought to cross-examine a defence witness on intercepted private communications which she had with the accused. The effect of the cross-examination substantially undermined the alibi evidence given by this witness and in reality the private communications were used as evidence against the accused. Accordingly it was necessary for the Crown to prove that subsec. (5) has been complied with.

Notice given at preliminary inquiry – A notice given prior to the preliminary inquiry remains valid for all subsequent proceedings including a trial on a preferred indictment where the accused is discharged at the preliminary hearing: R. v. Welsh and Iannuzzi (No. 6), supra.

The fact that the intercepted private communication was introduced at the accused's preliminary hearing does not satisfy the specific notice provisions of this subsection: R. v. Dunn (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 538, 33 C.R.N.S. 299 (N.S. Co. Ct.).

Transcript (para. (a)) – A "transcript" within the meaning of this subsection need not be absolutely word perfect nor need it be certified by a Court stenographer: R. v. Dunn et al. (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 495, 38 C.R.N.S. 383 (Sask. C.A.), affd 52 C.C.C. (2d) 127n, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 1012 sub nom. Yee v. The Queen.

This subsection is complied with where the transcript is in one of the official languages even where the conversation was in another language: R. v. Ma, Ho and Lai (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 16 (B.C. Co. Ct.); R. v. Johnny and Billy (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 33 (B.C.S.C.), affd 5 C.C.C. (3d) 538, 149 D.L.R. (3d) 710 (C.A.).

The requirement of a "transcript" is satisfied by giving the accused a copy of the actual tape recording: R. v. Dass (1977), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 465 (Man. Q.B.).

While it is the tapes themselves which constitute the evidence which should be and must be considered by the jury, it is nonetheless appropriate, in many instances, that transcripts not only be read while the tapes are being played but also be retained by the jury during their deliberations. Examples of cases where the trial judge might properly exercise his discretion are where the tape is in a foreign language or where the communications are lengthy or numerous. Where, however, the jury is permitted to retain the transcripts, there must be instructions by the trial judge that it is the tapes which constitute the evidence and the necessary equipment must be made available so that the jury may listen to the tapes during their deliberations. A police officer who has listened to the tapes may give evidence as to the identification of the voices reproduced and may, as well, tender a transcript which he has prepared and which he testifies accurately represents the conversations heard on the tape. The officer can, of course, be cross-examined both on voice identification and accuracy of the transcripts and it would be open to the defence to tender a witness who also has listened to the tapes and prepared a transcript setting out an alternate interpretation. The two transcripts could then go to the jury: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 113, 25 O.A.C. 321 (C.A.).

While a police officer who has prepared a transcript of the conversations may not be an "expert" on voice identification, it was open to the trial judge to point out to the jury the greater opportunities the officer had for identification, provided the jury was clearly told that they were not bound to accept the officer's opinion: R. v. Rowbotham (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 63 C.R. (3d) 113 (Ont. C.A.).

Contents of notice (para. (b)) – This subsection was complied with where the accused was served with copies of the transcripts showing time, date, telephone number and parties to the conversation and told that the transcripts could be used at trial, and where his solicitor was given written notice of intention which also contained details of the date, place and parties to the conversations: R. v. Schmitke and Mudry (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 180 (B.C.C.A.).

The words “if known” in subpara. (b) modify the entire phrase “time, place and date of the private communication and the parties thereto” and therefore only if the time, place and date are known need those particulars be given. Where, however, the evidence establishes that the police did have this information but did not supply it to the accused, the taped conversation is inadmissible: R. v. Allen (No. 4) (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 55 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Identification of the place of the interception requires the prosecution to inform the accused of the location of the two telephones at the opposite ends of the communication, where they are known. Thus, where the police knew the location of the pay telephone from which a call was made it should have been identified in the notice: R. v. Morello (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 278, 83 A.R. 75 (Alta. C.A.).

Additional disclosure – A trial Judge has a discretion to require the Crown to produce for the defence tapes in addition to those which it intends to adduce as part of its case where it is in the interests of justice to do so, as where the additional tapes might affect the interpretation to be given to the interceptions being introduced by the Crown: R. v. Lyons (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 318, 140 D.L.R. (3d) 223 (B.C.C.A.).

The accused should be given access to the logs of interceptions made pursuant to an earlier authorization in which he was not named where this is necessary to assist the accused in establishing that the subsequent authorization was not lawfully granted: R. v. Young et al. (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 96 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

Subsec. (6) [Privilege] – This subsection renders inadmissible intercepted private communications between the accused husband and his wife where the wife could not be a competent or compellable witness at the instance of the Crown. The privilege attaching to husband and wife communications is not destroyed where the communication is obtained by an interception within the meaning of this Part: R. v. Jean and Piesinger (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 176, 7 C.R. (3d) 338 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), appeal dismissed 51 C.C.C. (2d) 192n, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 400, 20 A.R. 360; Lloyd and Lloyd v. The Queen (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 169, 31 C.R. (3d) 157, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 645 (6:3).

While this subsection preserves privileges which are recognized at law, although the conversations have been intercepted pursuant to an authorization, the police informer privilege had no application so as to exclude conversations between the accused, a former police informer, and his co-accused a police officer. To be protected by the privilege, the actions of the informer must relate to his function as a police informer. On the evidence accepted by the trial judge in this case, the conduct and communications between the accused and other parties had nothing to do with the accused's function as an informer. The evidence showed that the accused was acting in his own interests and that of his co-accused. The fact that the accused was a police informer did not give him licence to commit criminal offences solely in his own interests: R. v. Hiscock; R. v. Sauv  (1992), 46 Q.A.C. 263 (C.A.).

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

- (c) an officer or a servant of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a member of the Canadian Forces in possession of such a device or component in the course of his duties as such an officer, servant or member, as the case may be; and
- (d) any other person in possession of such a device or component under the authority of a licence issued by the Solicitor General of Canada.

(3) A licence issued for the purpose of paragraph (2)(d) may contain such terms and conditions relating to the possession, sale or purchase of a device or component described in subsection (1) as the Solicitor General of Canada may prescribe. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 26.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "authorization", "electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device", "intercept", "private communication" and "sell" are defined in s. 183. Possession is defined in s. 4(3). "Canadian Forces" is defined in s. 2 and police officer and police constable are within the definition of "peace officer" in s. 2. Under s. 193 it is an offence to unlawfully disclose an intercepted private communication.

Pursuant to s. 192, any device by means of which the offence under this section was committed may be ordered forfeited. The offence in this section can itself be the basis for an authorization to intercept private communications, by virtue of the definition of "offence" in s. 183. Related offences are the interception offence in s. 184 and the disclosure offence in s. 193.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial of the offence described in subsec. (1) pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

NOTE: By virtue of s. 487.01(5) the offence and exceptions in this section also apply to video surveillance in circumstances where persons have a reasonable expectation of privacy.

SYNOPSIS

Section 191 makes it an indictable offence to do any of the specified things in relation to any of the devices listed (which may be used to surreptitiously intercept private communications). The prohibited devices include not only any electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical device, but extend also to any other device or component thereof, if its design makes it useful primarily for the surreptitious interception of private communications. It must be shown that the accused knew of the nature or abilities of the device or component. The wide-ranging description of the prohibited activities with such devices is possessing, sell- ing, or purchasing. The penalty upon conviction is a maximum of two years' imprisonment.

Subsection (2) provides a series of exceptions to liability under subsec. (1). Subsection (2)(a) to (c) exclude the operation of subsec. (1) to certain classes of persons, generally police officers, those carrying out lawful interceptions, those working under the direction of the police, or members of the Canadian forces. Such possession by the police or Canadian forces members must generally be in the course of their employment. Section 191(2)(d) exempts those who hold licences to possess such devices from criminal liability under subsec. (1). These licences are issued by the federal Solicitor General and may contain, pursuant to subsec. (3), terms and conditions.

ANNOTATIONS

A radio receiver tuned to a police band is not a device prohibited by this section where the evidence shows that the police are aware that members of the public have receivers capable of intercepting their communications. In such circumstances it could not be said that the device was intercepting "private communications" as those words are defined by s. 183: R. v. Pitts (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 150 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

Similarly, R. v. Comeau (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 61, 37 C.R. (3d) 286 (N.B.C.A.), where it was held that the use of codes by the police to disguise the broadcasts while showing an intention that they only be understood by the police was insufficient to produce any reasonable expectation that the broadcasts would not be intercepted. The originators would still expect many persons to continue to "listen" to the broadcasts.

FORFEITURE / Limitation.

192. (1) Where a person is convicted of an offence under section 184 or 191, any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device by means of which the offence was committed or the possession of which constituted the offence, on the conviction, in addition to any punishment that is imposed, may be ordered forfeited to Her Majesty whereupon it may be disposed of as the Attorney General directs.

(2) No order for forfeiture shall be made under subsection (1) in respect of telephone, telegraph or other communication facilities or equipment owned by a person engaged in providing telephone, telegraph or other communication service to the public or forming part of the telephone, telegraph or other communication service or system of that person by means of which an offence under section 184 has been committed if that person was not a party to the offence. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device", are defined in s. 183. "Attorney-General" is defined in s. 2. A party to an offence is defined by ss. 21 and 22.

In addition to the penalties set out in ss. 184 and 191 and the order under this section, a court that convicts an accused of the s. 184 offence or an offence under s. 193 may make an award of punitive damages under s. 194.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes the forfeiture of any device which was the means of committing an offence for which the accused has been convicted under s. 184 (unlawful interception of private communications) or s. 191 (unlawful possession, etc., of such devices). Such an order may be made upon sentencing, in addition to any other punishment. The section provides that the device is to be turned over to Her Majesty, and the Attorney General may then direct how it will be disposed of.

Subsection (2) exempts from such order, the listed equipment owned by a person who is involved in providing telephone services (and other specified lawful activities) to the public. However, the exception only applies if the owner was not a party to the offence.

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION / Exemptions / Publishing of prior lawful disclosure.

193. (1) Where a private communication has been intercepted by means of an electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device without the consent, express or implied, of the originator thereof or of the person intended by the originator thereof to receive it, every one who, without the express consent of the originator thereof or of the person intended by the originator thereof to receive it, wilfully

(a) uses or discloses such private communication or any part thereof or the substance, meaning or purport thereof or of any part thereof, or
 (b) discloses the existence thereof,
 is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who discloses a private communication or any part thereof or the substance, meaning or purport thereof or of any part thereof or who discloses the existence of a private communication

- (a) in the course of or for the purpose of giving evidence in any civil or criminal proceedings or in any other proceedings in which the person may be required to give evidence on oath;
- (b) in the course of or for the purpose of any criminal investigation if the private communication was lawfully intercepted;
- (c) in giving notice under section 189 or furnishing further particulars pursuant to an order under section 190;
- (d) in the course of the operation of
  - (i) a telephone, telegraph or other communication service to the public, or
  - (ii) a department or an agency of the Government of Canada, if the disclosure is necessarily incidental to an interception described in paragraph 184(2)(c) or (d);
- (e) where disclosure is made to a peace officer or prosecutor in Canada or to a person or authority with responsibility in a foreign state for the investigation or prosecution of offences and is intended to be in the interests of the administration of justice in Canada or elsewhere; or
- (f) where the disclosure is made to the Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service or to an employee of the Service for the purpose of enabling the Service to perform its duties and functions under section 12 of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act.

(3) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who discloses a private communication or any part thereof or the substance, meaning or purport thereof or of any part thereof or who discloses the existence of a private communication where that which is disclosed by him was, prior to the disclosure, lawfully disclosed in the course of or for the purpose of giving evidence in proceedings referred to in paragraph (2)(a). 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1976-77, c. 53, s. 11; 1984, c. 21, s. 77; R.S.C. 1985, c. 30 (4th Supp.), s. 45; 1993, c. 40, s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "authorization", "electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device", "intercept", "private communication" and "sell" are defined in s. 183. "Peace officer" is defined in s. 2. As to cases on the meaning of consent, see notes under s. 184. As to the meaning of "lawfully intercepted", reference should be made to the exception in s. 184(2) to the unlawful interception offence. The term "wilfully" does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See R. v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.).

Pursuant to s. 194, the court that convicts the accused of the offence under this section may make an order for punitive damages. Under s. 195(3), the annual report of the Solicitor General and Attorneys General are to set out the number of prosecutions under this section of officers or servants of the Crown.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge pursuant to s. 498.

Note that s. 24 of the Access to Information Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. A-1 provides that the head of a government institution shall refuse to disclose any record requested under that Act that contains information, the disclosure of which is restricted by or pursuant to this section.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to disclose certain information pertaining to intercepted private communications, subject to certain exceptions.

The offence created by subsec. (1) contains three elements. First, the interception must have been made by one of the devices listed, and it must have been done without the consent of either the originator or the person intended to receive it. (Thus, only interceptions made lawful pursuant to s. 183.1 are excluded by this aspect of s. 193.) Second, there must be no express consent of such persons to use information or disclose its contents or meaning as set out in s. 193(1)(a) or to disclose its existence. Third, the actions of the accused must be proven to be wilful. The maximum punishment for this offence is two years.

Section 193(2)(a) and (c) and subsec. (3) are exceptions to subsec. (1) and apply generally to the use of such information in relation to evidence being given in proceedings or procedural matters in relation to such proceedings. Section 193(2)(c) complements ss. 189 and 190, which require certain information to be disclosed in order to provide additional information to the accused. Section 193(2)(b) and (e) relate to law enforcement and prosecutorial needs and permit disclosure of lawfully intercepted private communications to assist in the investigation or prosecution of offences. In the case of the exception under s. 193(2)(e), there is the additional requirement that the disclosure be intended to be in the interests of the administration of justice. As this paragraph also authorizes disclosure to foreign police and prosecutors, the reference to the administration of justice may refer to its benefit in Canada or elsewhere. Section 193(2)(d) complements s. 184(2)(c) and (d) and exempts disclosure which is necessarily incidental to interceptions described in those paragraphs which basically relate to running and servicing public telephone or other communications services or monitoring them. Disclosure to employees of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) for the purpose of carrying out its duties as specified is also exempted from liability under subsection (1). Subsection (3) exempts persons who disclose information which has already been lawfully disclosed in court proceedings.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1) – The essence of this offence is the making known to another person the existence of an unlawfully intercepted private communication. It is irrelevant that the tape recordings given to the other person were of such poor quality that the voices on it were not discernible, so long as the existence of the unlawful interception was revealed: R. v. Simm (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 322, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 732 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

In one of the few successful prosecutions under this section the court held that the system which the accused had installed in his office and adjoining boardroom fell under the prohibition in subsec. (1). The system allowed for the surreptitious interception of private conversations in both rooms through use of hidden microphones and interception of private conversations of anyone using the accused's telephone. The accused's own testimony that he wished to use the devices to ascertain if unauthorized persons were making use of his office or boardroom constituted an admission that they would be used for surreptitious interceptions: R. v. McLelland (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 134 (Ont. C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – A witness required to testify at a public inquiry established by the provincial Government and to disclose the contents of an intercepted private communication comes within the exception in this subsection: Re Royal Commission Of Inquiry Into Activities Of Royal American Shows Inc. (1977), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 22, [1977] 5 W.W.R. 592 (Laycraft, J. Com'r).

The protection afforded by this subsection also extends to civil proceedings over which the province has jurisdiction and the words "for the purpose of giving evidence" would protect the production of the tape recording prior to trial: Tide Shore Logging Ltd. v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 215, 9 C.R. (3d) 237 (B.C.S.C.).

Either para. (a) or (b) of this subsection permits defence counsel to cross-examine a Crown witness on intercepted private communications even if the lawfulness of the interception has not been established. In particular, as regards para. (b), the phrase "any criminal investigation" is not limited to a police investigation but would include the investigation carried out by counsel in the course of cross-examination at a trial: R. v. Lessard (No. 3) (1986), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 569 (Que. S.C.).

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION RECEIVED FROM INTERCEPTION OF RADIO-BASED TELEPHONE COMMUNICATIONS / Other provisions to apply.

193.1 (1) Every person who wilfully uses or discloses a radio-based telephone communication or who wilfully discloses the existence of such a communication is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, if

- (a) the originator of the communication or the person intended by the originator of the communication to receive it was in Canada when the communication was made;
- (b) the communication was intercepted by means of an electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device without the consent, express or implied, of the originator of the communication or of the person intended by the originator to receive the communication; and
- (c) the person does not have the express or implied consent of the originator of the communication or of the person intended by the originator to receive the communication.

(2) Subsections 193(2) and (3) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, to disclosures of radio-based telephone communications. 1993, c. 40, s. 12.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device", "intercept", and "radio-based telephone communication" are defined in s. 183. The interception of radio-based telephone communications is itself an offence under s. 184.5 if the interception was done maliciously or for gain. No such limitation applies to the offence created by this section. Disclosure is permitted, however, with the consent of one of the parties or if any of the exemptions in s. 193(2) or (3) apply. Thus, see the synopsis and notes under s. 193.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to disclose certain information pertaining to intercepted radio-based telephone communications [e.g. cellular phones] if one of the parties to the communication was in Canada, the communication was intercepted by means of an electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device without the consent of one of the parties and the disclosure was not consented to. Disclosure is permitted where any of the conditions set out in s. 193(2) or (3) apply.

DAMAGES / No damages where civil proceedings commenced / Judgment may be registered / Moneys in possession of accused may be taken.

194. (1) Subject to subsection (2), a court that convicts an accused of an offence under section 184, 184.5, 193 or 193.1 may, on the application of a person aggrieved, at the time sentence is imposed, order the accused to pay to that person an amount not exceeding five thousand dollars as punitive damages.

(2) No amount shall be ordered to be paid under subsection (1) to a person who has commenced an action under Part II of the Crown Liability Act.

(3) Where an amount that is ordered to be paid under subsection (1) is not paid forthwith, the applicant may, by filing the order, enter as a judgment, in the superior court of the province in which the trial was held, the amount ordered to be paid, and that judgment is enforceable against the accused in the same manner as if it were a judgment rendered against the accused in that court in civil proceedings.

(4) All or any part of an amount that is ordered to be paid under subsection (1) may be taken out of moneys found in the possession of the accused at the time of his arrest, except where there is a dispute respecting ownership of or right of possession to those moneys by claimants other than the accused. 1973-74, c. 50, s. 2; 1993, c. 40, s. 13.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to an order under this section, where a person is convicted of an offence under s. 184 or 191, any electro-magnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other device, by means of which the offence was committed or the possession of which constituted the offence, may be ordered forfeited to the Crown.

An order under this section may be appealed under Part XXI as a sentence appeal.

SYNOPSIS

This section permits a court, which convicts a person of an offence under s. 184 (unlawful interception) or s. 193 (unlawful possession, etc., of devices), to order punitive damages be awarded to a person aggrieved by the offence. The order is only to be made on application by the aggrieved person and must be made at the time of sentencing. The maximum amount of such an order is $5000. If there is no dispute about the ownership or right of possession (by persons other than the accused), funds located in the possession of the accused at the time of his arrest may be used to satisfy an order made under subsec. (1). If the amount of damages awarded is not paid forthwith, subsec. (3) permits the order to be treated as if it were a civil judgment for enforcement purposes.

Subsection (2) prohibits money being paid under this section to a person who has begun an action under Part II of the Crown Liability Act.

196. (1) The Attorney General of the province in which an application under subsection 185(1) was made or the Solicitor General of Canada if the application was made by or on behalf of the Solicitor General of Canada shall, within ninety days after the period for which the authorization was given or renewed or within such other period as is fixed pursuant to subsection 185(3) or subsection (3) of this section, notify in writing the person who was the object of the interception pursuant to the authorization and shall, in a manner prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council, certify to the court that gave the authorization that the person has been so notified.

(2) The running of the ninety days referred to in subsection (1), or of any other period fixed pursuant to subsection 185(3) or subsection (3) of this section, is suspended until any application made by the Attorney General or the Solicitor General to a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a judge as defined in section 552 for an extension or a subsequent extension of the period for which the authorization was given or renewed has been heard and disposed of.

C.R.C. 1978, c. 440; SOR/81-859, Can. Gaz. pt. Ii, 26/10/81, p. 3153.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "Attorney General", "peace officer", "public officer" and "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" are defined in s. 2. The documents relating to an application under subsec. (2) are to be kept confidential in accordance with s. 187.

SYNOPSIS

Section 196 provides that those persons, whose private communications have been intercepted pursuant to an authorization, be notified that they have been the object of such an interception.

Subsection (1) requires the Attorney General or the Solicitor General (depending on who made the application for the authorization) to provide the notification within 90 days after the period for which the authorization was given or renewed, unless an order was made varying such period; (the period of time for giving notice may be altered by an order under s. 185(3) or 196(3)). The notice must be in writing but it need not tell the person the contents or the details of the authorization. After notice is given, the person who gave the notice must certify to the court issuing the authorization that the notice has been given. The Governor in Council may pass regulations providing for the contents of such certification.

Subsections (2) to (4) permit an application to be made to a judge, before the period for the giving of notice has run, to extend the period for up to three years. A subsequent application for the extension of such period may be made. The application may be brought by either the Attorney General or the Solicitor General, depending on whose behalf the application for the authorization is made. The same types of judges, who are authorized by this Part to grant authorizations under s. 185, may extend the notice. An application to extend the time for notice must be accompanied by an affidavit sworn on the basis of information and belief of a peace or public officer. The running of the 90 days or any other period is suspended once the application for an extension is made, until the application can be heard and disposed of. Subsection (4) sets out the required contents of such an affidavit which include (in addition to information regarding prior applications for authorization – whether successful, withdrawn or refused) the facts which the deponent relies upon for support that the notice period should be extended. Subsection (3) spells out the criteria to be applied by the judge hearing such an application. The affidavit must first satisfy the judge that either: (a) the investigation of an offence to which the authorization relates; or (b) subsequent investigation for an offence listed in s. 183, obtained as a result of the investigation noted in (a), is continuing. Finally, the judge must be of the opinion that the interests of justice warrant the granting of the application. If these conditions are met, the judge must fix an extended period, of less than three years, for the notice to be given.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsection (1) is complied with merely by notifying the person that he was the object of an interception. The person has no right to any wider notification such as receipt of a copy of the authorization: Re Zaduk and The Queen (1978), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 349 (Ont. H.C.J.), affd (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 327, 98 D.L.R. (3d) 133 (Ont. C.A.).

The Crown, having informed the accused that they were not the targets of any wiretap investigation in relation to the charges for which they were then being tried, had no obligation to disclose whether or not the accused were named as targets in any other authorizations. Before the Crown would be required to disclose this information, the defence must meet a threshold test of showing some basis which would enable the presiding judge to conclude that there is in existence material which is potentially relevant: R. v. Chaplin, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 727, 96 C.C.C. (3d) 225, 36 C.R. (4th) 201.

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section. The gaming, betting and lottery offences are found in ss. 201 to 209; bawdy house and prostitution offences in ss. 210 to 213.

SYNOPSIS

Section 197(1) provides exhaustive definitions for a number of terms which are used in several sections throughout Part VII of the Criminal Code. The definition of “common gaming house” in subsec. (1) must be read together with subsec. (2) which provides a number of exceptions to the definition.

Section 197(3) provides that the onus of proving that the house comes within one of the exclusions within s. 197(2) is upon the accused.

Section 197(4) clarifies and extends the meaning of common gaming house. It is aimed at foreclosing methods of avoiding conviction by the use of techniques such as using a number of different locations for a “floating crap game”.

ANNOTATIONS

“bet” – “Bets” or “betting” under the Criminal Code do not have the same connotation as found in civil law of contract, and there are other considerations in determining illegal betting: R. v. Benwell et al. (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 158, [1972] 3 O.R. 906 (2:1) (C.A.), affd 10 C.C.C. (2d) 503 (S.C.C.).

“common bawdy-house” / [Also see notes under s. 210] – The words “kept or occupied” or “resorted to” connote a frequent or habitual use of the premises for the purpose of prostitution: Patterson v. The Queen, [1968] 2 C.C.C. 247, 3 C.R.N.S. 23 (S.C.C.) (5:0). In that case Spence, J., summarized the type of evidence from which the Court has found that the prohibited nature of the premises was established, as follows:

first, there has been actual evidence of the continued and habitual use of the premises for prostitution . . .

secondly, there has been evidence of the reputation in the neighbourhood of the premises as a common bawdy-house, or,

thirdly, there has been evidence of such circumstances as to make the inference that the premises were resorted to habitually as a place of prostitution, a proper inference for the Court to draw from such evidence.

To establish a place as a common bawdy-house it is not necessary to prove specifically that acts of prostitution or intercourse took place on the premises: R. v. Sorko, [1969] 4 C.C.C. 241 (B.C.C.A.).

The “practice of prostitution” does not require actual sexual intercourse, nor need there be physical contact between the customer and the performer. Prostitution merely requires proof that the woman offered her body for lewdness or for the purposes of the commission of an unlawful act in return for payment. The act of offering one’s self as a participant in acts of indecency for the sexual gratification of another is sufficient: R. v. Tremblay (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 439, 41 Q.A.C. 241, [1991] R.J.Q. 2766 (C.A.), revd on other grounds [1993] 2 S.C.R. 932, 84 C.C.C. (3d) 97 (3:2).

In determining whether an act is indecent, the community standard of tolerance test should be applied. The court must take into account the degree of harm which might flow from the conduct which is said to be indecent. What the community will tolerate will vary with the place in which the acts take place and the composition of the audience. It was open to the judge to find that this standard was not exceeded by the conduct of a customer and performer masturbating in each other’s presence in a private room and where there is no physical contact. In doing so, the judge could rely upon evidence of an expert, charging practices by the police and a report to Parliament by a Commission of Inquiry: R. v. Tremblay, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 932, 84 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 23 C.R. (4th) 98 (3:2).

A hotel may be found to be a common bawdy-house notwithstanding not every room is used for purposes of prostitution where evidence is led that during a two-week period, on over 100 occasions, prostitutes were seen to be bringing their customers to the hotel and to a certain floor of the hotel: R. v. McLellan (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 543 (B.C.C.A.).

Evidence that on two occasions on the same night employees of a massage parlour offered to perform indecent acts with customers was insufficient to establish the premises were habitually resorted to for such acts and there being no other evidence of habitual use the accused were acquitted of the offence contrary to s. 210: R. v. Ikeda and Widjaja (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 145, 3 C.R. (3d) 382 (Ont. C.A.).

"common betting house" / [Also see notes under s. 201] – Use of a hotel room on only one occasion will not come within this definition which requires proof that the activity is frequent or habitual in nature. While the word "opened" may have a very wide meaning it must take its meaning from the context, in this case the words "kept or used" which have been held to require proof of a frequent or habitual use: R. v. Grainger (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 119 (Ont. C.A.).

"common gaming house" / [Also see notes under s. 201] – In Rockert v. The Queen (1978), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 438, 81 D.L.R. (3d) 759, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 704 (7:2), it was held that premises which are used on only one occasion do not fall within either para. (a) or (b) of this definition. The words "kept" and "resort" in para. (a) connote frequent or habitual activity, as does "kept" in para. (b). The word "used" in para. (b) means "that is made use of" and requires a practice of employing the premises in the prohibited manner or at least a practice consisting of more than one use or occasion. Following this decision, subsec. (4) was amended to add para. (c) to that subsection with the result that, in some cases, in the circumstances therein described, a single use of premises may nevertheless suffice to constitute the premises a common gaming house.

A place to which persons who have paid a membership fee resort nightly to play rummy and at which the accused sells refreshments comes within para. (a) of the definition notwithstanding the membership fee is devoted to a bona fide soccer club (which however was not incorporated under subsec. (2)) where the accused kept the proceeds from the refreshment sales and was clearly carrying on a business for gain: R. v. Karavasilis (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 530 (Ont. C.A.).

In addition to proof of the elements in the definition in para. (a) the Crown must prove as an element of the offence of gaming that the participants had the chance of both winning and losing money or money's worth. Thus, possible outcomes must be a result, direct or indirect, of wagering or hazarding a stake prior to or during the game. Where no money changed hands between the players, this element of gaming is not made out merely because it is customary for the loser of the card game to pay for the refreshments. The players in such circumstances were not putting up a stake on the outcome of the game but had merely found a convenient way for taking turns at who would purchase drinks which would normally be consumed: Di Pietro and Di Pietro v. The Queen (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 100, 50 C.R. (3d) 266, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 250 (7:0), approving R. v. Irwin et al. (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 212, 39 O.R. (2d) 314 (C.A.).

In this case, a scheme devised by the accused, in which persons purchased memberships in a club which purchased provincial government lottery tickets, constituted keeping a common gaming house. A portion of the fee was used to pay the accused's expenses and the other portion was used to purchase the tickets. The accused guaranteed that each group would have a certain number of winning combinations or he would give a refund. This was more than a group of persons getting together to purchase tickets and play a lottery. Rather, it was a new game of chance. It was a game played for a consideration and in accordance with rules developed by the accused. Under the accused's scheme, he and each of the members stood the chance of both winning and losing money or money's worth. The requisite element of wagering was therefore made out: R. v. Herger (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 359 (C.A.).

"game" – In Ross, Banks and Dyson v. The Queen [1969] 1 C.C.C. 1, 4 C.R.N.S. 233

(S.C.C.), it was held (by four Judges to one) following the rule of literal interpretation in the absence of ambiguity that the word “mixed” in this definition implies no indication of the proportions of chance and skill and therefore bridge is a game within this subsection.

A carnival operation where the patrons toss coins at glasses and other vessels, winning the glass or vessel on which the coin lands, is a game within the meaning of this definition: R. v. Touzin and Touzin (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 183, 11 C.R. (3d) 90 (Que. C.A.).

“keeper” – It was held in R. v. Kerim, [1963] 1 C.C.C. 233, [1963] S.C.R. 124, 39 C.R. 390 (3:2), that not every person who falls within this definition as a “keeper” keeps a common gaming house. Rather, there must be some act of participation in the wrongful use of the place. Presumably, this reasoning would apply to the other keeping offences, keeping a common betting house and keeping a common bawdy house. [Note: While this decision would seem to render this definition redundant, it is suggested that, in any of the keeping offences, it must be proved as a minimum that the person fell within the definition of keeper in this section and also committed some act as indicated by the court in Kerim. Some of the difficulty in interpretation of this section appears to be as a result of its derivation from s. 229(3) of the 1927 Code, which enacted a presumption that a person was a keeper of a disorderly house if he or she “appears, acts or behaves” as, inter alia, the person having the care, government, or management of the premises.]

While it has been held that, for premises to be considered a common gaming house, there must be evidence of frequent or habitual use: Rockert v. The Queen, supra, it is not necessary to prove that the person charged with keeping the common gaming house acted as such frequently or habitually, particularly in light of para. (e) of this definition which refers to a permanent or temporary use of the place: R. v. Lamolinara (1989), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 250 (Que. C.A.).

Social club exemption [subsec. (2)] – It was held in R. v. MacDonald, [1966] 2 C.C.C. 307 (S.C.C.) (5:0), that a branch of the Royal Canadian Legion was not entitled to the social club exemption where bingo was carried out on a large scale and on a daily basis. The court held that this was not an “occupation and use by a bona fide social club”. However, following that decision, this subsection was substantially amended so that the activities carried on in that case might fall within this exemption, provided that the requisite licence was obtained and complied with.

A gaming house, which falls within the definition of “common gaming house” in para. (b)(i), being a place kept or used for the purpose of playing games in which a bank is kept by one or more but not all of the players, is not entitled to the exemption in this subsection: R. v. Pon Chung and Mow Chong Social Club, [1965] 2 C.C.C. 331, [1965] 1 O.R. 583 (Ont. C.A.).

The social club’s “bona fides” is not lost merely because some of the avowed objects of the club were not carried out: R. v. Pon Chung and Mow Chong Social Club, supra.

Presumptions

PRESUMPTIONS / Conclusive presumption from slot machine / Definition of “slot machine”.

198. (1) In proceedings under this Part,

- (a) evidence that a peace officer who was authorized to enter a place was wilfully prevented from entering or was wilfully obstructed or delayed in entering is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the place is a disorderly house;
- (b) evidence that a place was found to be equipped with gaming equipment or any device for concealing, removing or destroying gaming equipment is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the place is a common gaming house or a common betting house, as the case may be;

- (c) evidence that gaming equipment was found in a place entered under a warrant issued pursuant to this Part, or on or about the person of anyone found therein, is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the place is a common gaming house and that the persons found therein were playing games, whether or not any person acting under the warrant observed any persons playing games therein; and
- (d) evidence that a person was convicted of keeping a disorderly house is, for the purpose of proceedings against any one who is alleged to have been an inmate or to have been found in that house at the time the person committed the offence of which he was convicted, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the house was, at that time, a disorderly house.

(2) For the purpose of proceedings under this Part, a place that is found to be equipped with a slot machine shall be conclusively presumed to be a common gaming house.

- (3) In subsection (2), “slot machine” means any automatic machine or slot machine
- (a) that is used or intended to be used for any purpose other than vending merchandise or services, or
  - (b) that is used or intended to be used for the purpose of vending merchandise or services if
    - (i) the result of one of any number of operations of the machine is a matter of chance or uncertainty to the operator,
    - (ii) as a result of a given number of successive operations by the operator the machine produces different results, or
    - (iii) on any operation of the machine it discharges or emits a slug or token,
- but does not include an automatic machine or slot machine that dispenses as prizes only one or more free games on that machine. R.S., c. C-34, s. 180; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 10.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “gaming equipment”, “disorderly house”, “common gaming house” and “common betting house” are defined in s. 197. The term “peace officer” is defined in s. 2. The offences relating to gaming house, betting house and bawdy house are set out in ss. 201 and 210 respectively. The warrant referred to in para. (1)(c) is issued under s. 199.

Wilful obstruction of a peace officer in the execution of duty is an offence under s. 129(a).

SYNOPSIS

Section 198 creates a number of presumptions relating to a number of different offences under this Part.

Section 198(3) exhaustively defines “slot machines”. Section 198(2) creates an irrebuttable presumption that a place found to contain a slot-machine shall be presumed to be a common gaming house.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(a) – The bare fact that the officer was delayed in entering the premises is not sufficient to invoke this presumption: R. v. McEwan and Lee (1932), 59 C.C.C. 75, [1933] 1 D.L.R. 398 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) distinguishing Theirlynck v. The King (1931), 56 C.C.C. 156, [1931] S.C.R. 478 (5:0).

Subsec. (1)(b) – Evidence that a place is found to be equipped with “gaming equipment” which, however, is not, or may not, be used for betting is not proof that the place was a “common betting house”, notwithstanding the definition of “gaming equipment” in s. 197 as anything that is or may be used for the purpose of playing games or for betting: R. v. Ruskoff, Marbella and Damore (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 504 (Ont. C.A.).

Twenty-five cent pieces being used to play the game “heads or tails” came within the definition of “gaming equipment” in s. 197 and thus the presumption in this subsection is applicable: R. v. Lefrancois (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 380 (Que. C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(d) – The presumption in this subsection infringes ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter and is of no force and effect: R. v. Janoff (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 454, [1991] R.J.Q. 2427, 41 Q.A.C. 147 (C.A.).

Subsec. (2) – While the Courts have held that where a charge although laid under s. 201 could have been laid under s. 206(1)(f) or (g) the accused may nevertheless rely on the exhibition or fair exemption in s. 206(3), the special relationship which slot-machines bear to common gaming houses by virtue of this subsection must make s. 201 the governing section where such machines are involved and an accused is not entitled to invoke the provisions of s. 206(3): R. v. Cross (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 505, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 644 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

It was held in R. v. Shisler (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 531 (Ont. C.A.), that the conclusive presumption created by this subsection is of no force and effect being inconsistent with the presumption of innocence as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter.

Subsec. (3) – While the amendment of this subsection, so as to deprive the Crown of reliance on the presumption in a case involving a slot machine such as a pinball machine which only gives free games or prizes, would not necessarily foreclose a conviction under s. 201 if the operation otherwise came within the definition of “common gaming house” in s. 197, it was held in R. v. Zippilli (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 481 (Ont. C.A.) that a place equipped with such games is not within that definition. “Gaming” requires an element of wagering which is absent in the mere playing of a pinball game for amusement.

A “pull-ticket” vending machine falls within the definition in para. (b) where although it always dispenses a ticket it is a matter of chance or uncertainty whether the operator of the machine receives a valuable or worthless ticket: Charity Vending Ltd. v. Alberta (Gaming Commission) (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 455 (Alta. C.A.).

Search

WARRANT TO SEARCH / Search without warrant, seizure and arrest / Disposal of property seized / When declaration or direction may be made / Conversion into money / Telephones exempt from seizure / Exception.

199. (1) A justice who is satisfied by information on oath that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence under section 201, 202, 203, 206, 207 or 210 is being committed at any place within the jurisdiction of the justice may issue a warrant authorizing a peace officer to enter and search the place by day or night and seize anything found therein that may be evidence that an offence under section 201, 202, 203, 206, 207 or 210, as the case may be, is being committed at that place, and to take into custody all persons who are found in or at that place and requiring those persons and things to be brought before that justice or before another justice having jurisdiction, to be dealt with according to law.

(2) A peace officer may, whether or not he is acting under a warrant issued pursuant to this section, take into custody any person whom he finds keeping a common gaming house and any person whom he finds therein, and may seize anything that may be evidence that such an offence is being committed and shall bring those persons and things before a justice having jurisdiction, to be dealt with according to law.

(3) Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, a court, judge, justice or provincial court judge before whom anything that is seized under this section is brought may declare that the thing is forfeited, in which case it shall be disposed of or dealt with as the Attorney General may direct if no person shows sufficient cause why it should not be forfeited.

(4) No declaration or direction shall be made pursuant to subsection (3) in respect of anything seized under this section until

- (a) it is no longer required as evidence in any proceedings that are instituted pursuant to the seizure; or
- (b) the expiration of thirty days from the time of seizure where it is not required as evidence in any proceedings.

(5) The Attorney General may, for the purpose of converting anything forfeited under this section into money, deal with it in all respects as if he were the owner thereof.

(6) Nothing in this section or in section 489 authorizes the seizure, forfeiture or destruction of telephone, telegraph or other communication facilities or equipment that may be evidence of or that may have been used in the commission of an offence under section 201, 202, 203, 206, 207 or 210 and that is owned by a person engaged in providing telephone, telegraph or other communication service to the public or forming part of the telephone, telegraph or other communication service or system of that person.

(7) Subsection (6) does not apply to prohibit the seizure, for use as evidence, of any facility or equipment described in that subsection that is designed or adapted to record a communication. R.S., c. C-34, s. 181; 1994, c. 44, s. 10.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "justice", "peace officer", "day", "night" and "Attorney General" are defined in s. 2.

Section 29 sets out duties of persons executing a warrant and, inter alia, the officer must have it with him, where it is feasible to do so, and produce it when requested to do so.

As to the use of force generally in enforcement of the law, see ss. 25, 26, 27 and 31.

Warrants in relation to the offences described in this section could also be obtained pursuant to ss. 487 and 487.1. The declaration of forfeiture under subsec. (3) may be appealed as a sentence appeal under Part XXI or Part XXVII, as the case may be.

SYNOPSIS

Section 199 creates search, seizure and forfeiture provisions relating to the offences within Part VII listed in s. 199(1). In addition it authorizes taking into custody persons found within the places searched.

Section 199(1) permits a justice who is satisfied by information on oath that there are reasonable grounds to believe that one of the offences listed in the subsection (all "vice"-type offences) is being committed at a place, to issue a warrant authorizing the search of the place. It allows the search to take place day or night and gives the police authority to detain any person or thing found on the premises and then to bring them before a justice.

Section 199(2) permits a police officer who enters a common gaming house to detain the keeper of the house and all those who are found in the house, and to seize all things within the house. There is no requirement that the police have a warrant to enter or seize property from the common gaming house at the time the seizures are made under this subsection.

It should be noted that s. 199(6) adds certain restrictions to what may be seized by warrant under this section or s. 489. These restrictions deal basically with communication facilities and equipment.

Section 199(7) permits the seizure of items otherwise included within subsec. (6) if the item is designed or adapted to record conversations and it is seized for evidentiary purposes.

Section 199(3) creates a broad discretion in judicial officers to direct that whatever is seized be forfeited. It appears that the onus is upon the person who seeks to avoid forfeiture to “show sufficient cause” why it should not be forfeited. The Attorney General controls how items ordered seized are to be dealt with, including requiring that they be disposed of as directed. Section 199(5) gives the Attorney General the same powers as the owner to convert a forfeited item into money. Section 199(4) provides certain time-limits within which an item seized is not to be the subject of a declaration or direction.

ANNOTATIONS

Forfeiture – For forfeiture of seized funds it is not necessary that the Crown prove their identity with the specific proven offence: R. v. Owens (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 125, [1972] 1 O.R. 341 (Ont. C.A.).

A declaration for forfeiture may be made only after a hearing in conformity with the provisions of this section, notice of which has been given to all interested parties: R. v. Tobin (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 137, 37 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 182 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

A forfeiture order may be made under this section at the conclusion of the trial of an accused for an offence under s. 201. Subsection (4) does not require that the Court await the outcome of any appeal proceedings before making the declaration: R. v. Anderson and Blackie (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 183 (B.C.C.A.).

Items, such as money, which may be evidence of the gaming-house offence may be seized from the keeper under subsec. (2) and declared forfeited under subsec. (3) although he is not on the premises at the time of the execution of the warrant: R. v. Anderson and Blackie, supra.

A forfeiture order may be made under subsec. (3), where the gaming equipment was seized pursuant to a search warrant issued under s. 487: R. v. Harb (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 204, 129 N.S.R. (2d) 123 (C.A.).

Gaming and Betting

---

KEEPING GAMING OR BETTING HOUSE / Person found in or owner permitting use.

201. (1) Every one who keeps a common gaming house or common betting house is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who

- (a) is found, without lawful excuse, in a common gaming house or common betting house, or
- (b) as owner, landlord, lessor, tenant, occupier or agent, knowingly permits a place to be let or used for the purposes of a common gaming house or common betting house, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 185.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “keeper”, “common gaming house” and “common betting house” are defined in s. 197(1) and (4). The exemptions for genuine social clubs is set out in s. 197(2). Section 198 sets out certain presumptions which aid in proof that premises are a common gaming house or common betting house. In particular, note s. 198(2) and (3) respecting slot machines. Sections 204 and 207 enact certain exemptions respecting gaming and betting. While s. 206 enacts exemptions for certain kinds of gaming and lotteries, those sections do not in specific terms exempt an accused from liability under this section. Accordingly, the reach of those exemptions is uncertain, see cases below in particular respecting the Agricultural fair exemption. Related offences are found in s. 203, placing bets on behalf of others; s. 206, lotteries and games of chance; s. 209, cheating at play.

The offence in subsec. (1) may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant for video surveillance under s. 487.01(5) and falls within the definition of “enterprise crime offence” in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2. As regards special search and seizure powers in relation to gaming houses and betting houses, see s. 199.

The offence in subsec. (1) is a pure indictable offence, but, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). The trial of the offences in subsec. (2) are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offences in subsec. (2) are as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For all offences under this section, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates offences in relation to keeping a common gaming or betting house.

Section 201(1) makes it an indictable offence to keep such a premises. The maximum punishment upon conviction is two years' imprisonment.

Section 201(2) creates two summary conviction offences. Paragraph (2)(a) makes it an offence for an accused to be a found in at a common gaming house or common betting house. It must be shown that the accused had no lawful excuse for being present in such a premises.

Section 201(2)(b) prohibits permitting a place to be used as a common gaming house or a common betting house if the accused is in the capacity of an owner, landlord, tenant, occupier or agent. It must be shown that the accused knew the use being made of the place and permitted it to occur.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of “keeps” / [Also see notes under heading “Keeper” in s. 197] – Not every person who falls within the definition of “keeper” within s. 197 “keeps” a common gaming house. To constitute that offence there must be some act of participation in the wrongful use of the place. Thus the accused who was the owner of the premises and rented them out to various charitable organizations but who in no way participated in the promotion, organization or operation of the games was acquitted of this charge. The fact that he operated a refreshment stand for the patrons of the games which was entirely independent of the activities of the organization renting the premises is immaterial. The accused in such circumstances may, however, come within the offence in subsec. (2)(b): R. v. Kerim, [1963] 1 C.C.C. 233, [1963] S.C.R. 124, 39 C.R. 390 (3:2).

R. v. Kerim, supra, was distinguished and the accused's conviction upheld where the accused leased the premises, provided cards and score pads and sold refreshments, notwithstanding there was no “rake-off”. The accused had involved himself in the use of the premises to such an extent that he was participating in the illegal use. His own activities in providing the accommodation and facilities and selling the refreshments made the premises a common gaming house: R. v. Karavasilis (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 530 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the game's rules do not preclude some or all of its players from having equal opportunity to becoming its banker and that position does not confer some advantage over the players then the banker cannot be said to be the keeper of a common gaming house: R. v. Monroe (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 68, 74 W.W.R. 373 (B.C.C.A.).

Common gaming house / [Also see notes under s. 197] – In Rockert et al. v. The Queen (1978), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 438, 81 D.L.R. (3d) 759, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 704 (7:2), it was held that premises which are used on only one occasion do not fall within either para. (a) or (b) of the definition of common gaming house in s. 197(1). However, following this decision, subsec. (4) of s. 197 was amended to add para. (c) to that subsection with the result that in some cases, in the circumstances therein described, a single use of premises may nevertheless suffice to constitute the premises a common gaming house.

Common betting house / [Also see notes under s. 197] – Use of premises on one occasion will not constitute such premises a common betting house as defined in s. 197: R. v. Grainger (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 119 (Ont. C.A.).

The recording of bets, let alone proof of the method of recording, is not an ingredient of keeping a common betting house and there need not even be direct evidence of the accused having received a bet. It is enough that premises were kept by the accused for the purpose of enabling any person to receive bets: Silvestro v. The Queen, [1965] 2 C.C.C. 253, [1965] S.C.R. 155 (3:2).

Agricultural fair exemptions – Notwithstanding there is no exemption clause for offences charged under this section, if the charge could have been laid under s. 206(1)(f) or (g) and the accused can bring himself within the exemption clause in s. 206(3) (games operated at an exhibition or fair) the accused is entitled to the protection of any exemption set out in that subsection: R. v. Andrews and five others (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 450, 32 C.R.N.S. 358 (Sask. C.A.). Also see R. v. Beasley (1936), 65 C.C.C. 337, [1936] 2 D.L.R. 377 (Ont. C.A.). But see: R. v. Cross (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 505, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 644 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) where slot machines are involved; noted under s. 198(2), supra.

202. (1) Every one commits an offence who

- (a) uses or knowingly allows a place under his control to be used for the purpose of recording or registering bets or selling a pool;
- (b) imports, makes, buys, sells, rents, leases, hires or keeps, exhibits, employs or knowingly allows to be kept, exhibited or employed in any place under his control any device or apparatus for the purpose of recording or registering bets or selling a pool, or any machine or device for gambling or betting;
- (c) has under his control any money or other property relating to a transaction that is an offence under this section;
- (d) records or registers bets or sells a pool;
- (e) engages in book-making or pool-selling, or in the business or occupation of betting, or makes any agreement for the purchase or sale of betting or gaming privileges, or for the purchase or sale of information that is intended to assist in book-making, pool-selling or betting;
- (f) prints, provides or offers to print or provide information intended for use in connection with book-making, pool-selling or betting upon any horse-race, fight, game or sport, whether or not it takes place in or outside of Canada or has or has not taken place;
- (g) imports or brings into Canada any information or writing that is intended or is likely to promote or be of use in gambling, book-making, pool-selling or betting on a horse-race, fight, game or sport, and where this paragraph applies it is immaterial
  - (i) whether the information is published before, during or after the race, fight, game or sport, or

  - (h) advertises, prints, publishes, exhibits, posts up, or otherwise gives notice of any offer, invitation or inducement to bet on, to guess or to foretell the result of a contest, or a result of or contingency relating to any contest;
  - (i) wilfully and knowingly sends, transmits, delivers or receives any message by radio, telegraph, telephone, mail or express that conveys any information relating to book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering, or that is intended to assist in book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering; or
  - (j) aids or assists in any manner in anything that is an offence under this section.
- (2) Every one who commits an offence under this section is guilty of an indictable offence and liable
- (a) for a first offence, to imprisonment for not more than two years;
  - (b) for a second offence, to imprisonment for a term not more than two years and not less than fourteen days; and
  - (c) for each subsequent offence, to imprisonment for not more than two years and not less than three months. R.S., c. C-34, s. 186; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "bet", "gaming equipment", and "place" are defined in s. 197.

The offence in para. (1)(e) may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant for video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5), and the offences in this section fall within the definition of "enterprise crime offence" in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2. As regards special search and seizure powers in relation to gaming houses and betting houses, see s. 199. Sections 204 and 207 enact certain exemptions respecting gaming and betting. While s. 206 enacts exemptions for certain kinds of gaming and lotteries, that section does not, in specific terms, exempt an accused from liability under this section. Accordingly, the reach of those exemptions is uncertain, see cases noted under heading Agricultural fair exemption, under s. 201.

The offence in subsec. (2) is a pure indictable offence, but by virtue of s. 553 it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Where the prosecution seeks the higher penalty prescribed by subsec. (2)(b) or (c), it must comply with the provisions of s. 665. Section 667 provides one method of proof of the prior conviction. Note that no reference to the prior conviction may be made in the information by virtue of s. 664.

Related offences are: s. 201, keeping common gaming or betting house; s. 203, placing bets on behalf of others; s. 206, offences in relation to lotteries and games of chance; s. 209, cheating at play.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates indictable offences prohibiting betting, pool selling, bookmaking, importing equipment to engage in any of these activities, and other similar illicit gambling activities. It also provides for punishment upon conviction for such offences. To determine the scope of liability under this section it is necessary to read it together with s. 204 which provides for a number of exemptions.

Section 202(1) creates a number of specific prohibitions set out in paras. (a), (b), (d) to (i), which spell out the prohibited acts and in the case of certain paragraphs also spell out the mental element. One such paragraph is para. (i) which specifies certain actions such as sending, transmitting, delivering or receiving any message by one of the means specified in the paragraph which is related to bookmaking, pool-selling, or wagering, or that is intended to assist in such activity. It must be shown that the accused's actions were both wilful and done knowingly.

Section 202(1)(c) and (j) create broad offences which extend the liability created by the more specific paragraphs. Section 202(1)(c) makes it an offence for the accused to have control over any money or property relating to a transaction prohibited by this subsection. Similarly subsec. (1)(j) makes it an offence to aid or assist in any manner anything which is otherwise an offence under subsec. (1). It must be shown that the accused knew that the acts assisted in the commission of the other offence created by the subsection but it does not appear that it must be shown that the accused's purpose was to assist.

Section 202(2) creates an escalating punishment scale based on the number of prior offences for which the accused has been convicted.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(b) – The accused's honest but mistaken belief that the devices were legal even where such belief is the result of reasonable inquiries made of Customs officials is no defence to this charge, by virtue of s. 19: R. v. Potter (1978), 39 C.C.C. (2d) 538, 3 C.R. (3d) 154 (P.E.I.S.C.).

To obtain a conviction for the offence under subsec. (1)(b), the Crown was required to prove that the accused kept devices in a place under her control, that the devices were gambling devices, and that the accused knew that the devices were gambling devices and knowingly kept them. Gambling or gaming must, as well, involve a chance of gain and a risk of loss. The Crown, however, was not required to show that the machines were actually used for the purpose of gambling: R. v. Kent, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 133, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 344, 33 C.R. (4th) 319.

Subsec. (1)(d) – The registering or recording must be of the bookmaker's, not the bettor's, record of bets: R. v. Michael (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 282, [1974] 5 W.W.R. 749 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Subsec. (1)(e) – The keeper of a common betting house is one who does something for the purpose of aiding and abetting other persons to engage in the business or occupation of betting and thus he may be convicted of the offence under this section: Silvestro v. The Queen, [1965] 2 C.C.C. 253, [1965] S.C.R. 155 (3:2).

The term "bookmaking" is not limited to horse races. A bookmaker is one who engages in the occupation of taking bets or negotiating bets and the keeping of accounts, regardless of whether the bet is on a horse-race or is more general in scope. Thus, bookmaking describes an enterprise, the business of taking bets and of keeping accounts: R. v. Decome (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 460, [1991] R.J.Q. 618 (C.A.).

The accused's scheme in which persons purchased memberships in a club which purchased provincial government lottery tickets did not amount to pool-selling or selling a pool. The scheme was not one in which the participants or members bet with one another and one or more of the members or participants won, as is usually the case in pool-betting or pool-selling. Rather the members shared equally in the winnings: R. v. Herger (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 359 (C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(f) – The Crown was not required to prove that the British football pools, which were the source of the information provided or conveyed by the accused, were illegal pools in England: R. v. Ede (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 447n, 63 O.A.C. 319 (C.A.).

PLACING BETS ON BEHALF OF OTHERS.

203. Every one who

- (a) places or offers or agrees to place a bet on behalf of another person for a consideration paid or to be paid by or on behalf of that other person,

- (b) engages in the business or practice of placing or agreeing to place bets on behalf of other persons, whether for a consideration or otherwise, or
  - (c) holds himself out or allows himself to be held out as engaging in the business or practice of placing or agreeing to place bets on behalf of other persons, whether for a consideration or otherwise,
- is guilty of an indictable offence and liable
- (d) for a first offence, to imprisonment for not more than two years,
  - (e) for a second offence, to imprisonment for not more than two years and not less than fourteen days, and
  - (f) for each subsequent offence, to imprisonment for not more than two years and not less than three months. R.S., c. C-34, s. 187; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 11.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "bet" is defined in s. 197.

Section 204 enacts certain exemptions respecting betting, for offences under ss. 201 and 202, but not this section. Section 206 enacts exemptions for certain kinds of gaming but does not, in specific terms, exempt an accused from liability under this section. Accordingly, the reach of those exemptions is uncertain, see cases noted under heading Agricultural fair exemption, under s. 201. The exemption in s. 207 would, however, apply to conduct otherwise within this section.

The offences under this section are pure indictable offences, but, by virtue of s. 553, are offences over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Where the prosecution seeks the higher penalty prescribed by para. (e) or (f), it must comply with the provisions of s. 665. Section 667 provides one method of proof of the prior conviction. Note that no reference to the prior conviction may be made in the information by virtue of s. 664.

SYNOPSIS

Section 203 prohibits the activities of the actions of "bookies" and other off-track betting schemes and sets out a schedule of available sentences based on whether the accused is a repeat offender.

Section 203(a) makes it an indictable offence to place a bet for another in exchange for consideration. The offence is also stated to encompass offers or agreements to place the bet. The consideration may be received either at the time of the act described or it may be agreed that the consideration may be received at a later time.

Section 203(b) makes it an indictable offence to engage in the business or practice of either placing or agreeing to place bets, whether or not for consideration.

Section 203(c) makes it an indictable offence to hold oneself out to be a "bookie", or allow oneself to be so held out.

ANNOTATIONS

This section, which was first introduced following the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Gruhl And Brennan, [1970] 1 C.C.C. 104, 4 D.L.R. (3d) 583, has been amended from time to time and liability extended as various off-track betting schemes have come before the Courts. Thus, cases such as R. v. Williams and Adams (1970), 2 C.C.C. (2d) 476, [1971] 1 W.W.R. 722 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), affd 3 C.C.C. (2d) 91n, [1971] S.C.R. vi (5:0) and R. v. Benwell et al. (1972), 9 C.C.C. calculated in accordance with the regulations to be payable in respect of each dollar bet.

(7) Where an officer appointed by the Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food is not satisfied that the provisions of this section and the regulations are being carried out in good faith by any person or association in relation to a race-meeting, he may, at any time, order any betting in relation to the race-meeting to be stopped for any period that he considers proper.

- (c) prescribing the maximum percentage that may be deducted and retained pursuant to subsection (6) by or on behalf of a person or association operating a pari-mutuel system of betting in respect of a horse-race in accordance with this section and providing for the determination of the percentage that each such person or association may deduct and retain;
- (d) respecting pari-mutuel betting in Canada on horse-races conducted on a race-course situated outside Canada; and
- (e) authorizing pari-mutuel betting and governing the conditions for pari-mutuel betting, including the granting of licences therefor, that is conducted by an association in a betting theatre owned or leased by the association in a province in which the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or such other person or authority in the province as may be specified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof, has issued a licence to that association for the betting theatre.

- (a) certify as acceptable, for the purposes of this section, the governing body that regulates the race; and
- (b) permit pari-mutuel betting in Canada on the race.

(9) The Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food may make regulations respecting

- (a) the zone is immediately adjacent to the race-course;
  - (b) the farthest point of that zone is not more than 900 metres from the nearest point on the race track of the race-course; and
  - (c) all real property situated in that zone is owned or leased by the person or association who owns or leases the race-course.
- (10) Every person who contravenes or fails to comply with any of the provisions of this section or of any regulations made under this section is guilty of
- (a) an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
  - (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (11) For the purposes of this section, “association” means an association incorporated by or pursuant to an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of a province that owns or leases a race-course and conducts horse-races in the ordinary course of its business and, to the extent that the applicable legislation requires that the purposes of the association be expressly stated in its constituting instrument, having as one of its purposes the conduct of horse-races. R.S., c. C-34, s. 188; 1980-81-82-83, c. 99, s. 1; R.S.C. 1985, c. 47 (1st Supp.), s. 1; 1989, c. 2, s. 1; 1994, c. 38, ss. 18, 25.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on the offence under subsec. (10) then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

Section 204 creates exemptions from liability which would otherwise arise under s. 201 or 202, and it also creates a system of legalized pari-mutuel betting.

Section 204(1) creates three types of exemptions. Section 204(1)(a) exempts the custodian or the stakeholder of moneys when such person pays out the stakes or money to one of the class of persons described in subparas. (i) to (iii).

Section 204(1)(c) excludes bets made or records of bets made through the pari-mutuel system if the conditions in subparas. (i) and (ii) are satisfied.

Section 204(3) to (9.1) permit the setting of and functioning of a pari-mutuel betting operation for horse races. It provides for regulations to be made dealing with many aspects of system described in subsec. (8). Subsection (1.1) states that if the person does an act described in ss. 201 to 202 for the purpose of legal pari-mutuel betting it is exempt from liability if the acts are done in accordance with the regulations.

Section 204(11) provides an exhaustive definition of the word association for the purposes of the section.

Section 204(10) creates the offence of contravening the section or the regulations made under it. In addition it provides for punishment by way of summary conviction procedure or by way of indictment. In the latter case the maximum sentence is two years.

205. [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 52 (1st Supp.), s. 1.]

- (i) receives bets of any kind on the outcome of a game of three-card monte; or
- (j) being the owner of a place, permits any person to play the game of three-card monte therein.

(2) In this section "three-card monte" means the game commonly known as three-card monte and includes any other game that is similar to it, whether or not the game is played with cards and notwithstanding the number of cards or other things that are used for the purpose of playing.

(3) Paragraphs (1)(f) and (g), in so far as they do not relate to a dice game, three-card monte, punch board or coin table, do not apply to the board of an annual fair or exhibition, or to any operator of a concession leased by that board within its own grounds and operated during the fair or exhibition on those grounds.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “bet” is defined in s. 197 and “property” and “valuable security” in s. 2. The game of “three-card monte”, referred to in subsec. (2), was described in Re Rosen (1920), 37 C.C.C. 381 (Que. C.A.), as “a game played with three cards, say, two black ones and a red one, shuffled or manipulated by the dealer and placed face down and the opponent backs his ability to spot the position of a particular card. By sleight of hand or quickness of movement, the dealer endeavours to induce the person backing his opinion to put his hand on the wrong card.”

The offences under subsec. (1) are pure indictable offences, but by virtue of s. 553 are offences over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may by virtue of s. 555(1) elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). The trial of the offence in subsec. (4) is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence in subsec. (4) is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 787(2). For all offences under this section, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. As regards special search and seizure powers in relation to offences under this section, see s. 199.

Section 207 provides for certain types of permitted lotteries. As regards pyramid selling and similar schemes, reference should be made to ss. 55 and 56 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 and respecting the conduct of promotional contests involving a lottery or other game, see s. 59 of the same Act.

Related offences are: s. 201, keeping common gaming or betting house; s. 203, placing bets on behalf of others; s. 209, cheating at play.

SYNOPSIS

Sections 206 and 207, when read together, create liability for acts in relation to lotteries and games of chance and create exceptions to such liability.

Section 206(1) creates the indictable offence of doing the acts specified on paras. (a) to (j). No purpose beyond the doing of the acts described need be proven. The maximum sentence upon imprisonment is two years.

Section 206(2) defines "three-card monte" for the purposes of this section.

Section 204(3) creates an exception from s. 206(1)(f) to (g) for the use of a board located at an annual fair or exhibition or the operator of such a board. However, the exemption does not include dice games, three-card monte, punch board or coin tables. Subsection (3.1) sets out an exhaustive definition of the phrase "fair or exhibition" – see where it is used in subsec. (3).

Section 206(4) creates a summary conviction offence applicable to any one who takes or receives a lot, ticket or other item mentioned in subsec. (1).

Section 206(5) provides that any right of property involved in the specified acts relating to lotteries and games of chance is void and is forfeited to the Crown. However, s. 206(6) is a saving provision which states that if a person acquires the property as a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration without notice their rights are protected.

Section 206(7) sets out that application of this section to a foreign lottery.

Section 206(8) sets out additional general exemptions to the operation of this section.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(a) – A conviction was upheld where the scheme was that 20 ticket holders would be chosen by chance and then those 20 would compete in a potato-peeling contest to see who would win the 10 cars which were offered as prizes. The Court held that the whole scheme was one of chance determining the result, as "the twenty drawn to enter the contest might well be without any real skill in paring a potato, and the cars would go to the ten least unskilful or inefficient . . . or what is also important, if any of the twenty should prove skilful, they were chosen as contestants by chance": R. v. Wallace (1954), 109 C.C.C. 351, 20 C.R. 39 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). This case was distinguished in R. v. Young (1957), 119 C.C.C. 389, 27 C.R. 226 (B.C.C.A.) where it was held that the selection by chance of the persons entitled to participate in the contest of skill did not render the whole scheme a lottery.

The burden is on the Crown to prove that the proposed disposition of property was by mode of chance alone, involving the absence of any genuine skill and if the "skill testing question" constitutes an exercise of skill then the scheme is not a prohibited lottery. Where the police halt the lottery before the draw is held there is no burden on the accused to prove that the intended question would be a genuine test of skill: R. v. Young (1978), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 565, [1979] 2 W.W.R. 231 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Subsec. (1)(d) – Where the lucky draw and skill-testing scheme was found to simply be a device to attempt to avoid prosecution, a conviction for operating a lottery was affirmed: R. v. Robert Simpson (Regina) Limited (1958), 121 C.C.C. 39 (Sask. C.A.).

A scheme which is one of skill or mixed skill and chance does not contravene this subsection: Roe v. The King (1949), 94 C.C.C. 273, 8 C.R. 135, [1949] S.C.R. 652.

The Montreal voluntary tax plan was reviewed under appeal in City of Montreal v. A.-

G. Que., [1970] 2 C.C.C. 1, 10 D.L.R. (3d) 315 (S.C.C.). The Court, agreeing that the prize offering of silver ingots was a cash prize and that the scheme was based essentially on chance, held (7:0) that the plan was a lottery.

The accused's belief that the Criminal Code lottery provisions did not apply to bingo games held on an Indian Reserve was a mistake of law and, thus, no defence to the charge under this paragraph: R. v. Jones (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 512 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Any aboriginal rights which the First Nations may have in relation to economic activity on the reserves did not include the right to regulate high-stakes gambling on the reserve. By the valid exercise of the criminal law power, Parliament has made such activities a criminal offence: R. v. Gardner; R. v. Jones (1994), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 120 D.L.R. (4th) 475, 21 O.R. (3d) 385 (C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(e) – Chance and skill are not factors in the offence of conducting a lottery as the offence is committed if a purchaser stands to receive back a larger amount than he contributed because other persons have contributed. Further, the offence was committed even where the accused deposited with the trust company running the contest sufficient funds to pay for the prize even if only one ticket was sold. The deposit of the funds with the trust company was only made by the accused by reason of the fact that it was part of a scheme by which contestants would pay money to enter the contest and such contest clearly contemplated, at its inception and throughout, that the prize would be awarded at the conclusion of the contest by reason of the payments for tickets of all the non-successful contestants: Dream Home Contests (Edmonton) Ltd. v. The Queen, Hodges v. The Queen (1960), 126 C.C.C. 241, [1960] S.C.R. 414 (5:0). Foldt: R. v. Canus Of North America Ltd., [1965] 1 C.C.C. 91, 43 C.R. 321 (Sask. C.A.).

The legitimacy of a business is not a factor to be considered if a part of its operation is a lottery scheme. Furthermore, the key to this offence is that a participant shall become entitled to receive from others under the scheme an amount larger than his investment, and accordingly it does not matter whether that larger amount was in existence in the scheme before or after he joined it: R. v. Golden Canada Products (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 43 D.L.R. (3d) 251 (Alta. C.A.).

The essential element of this offence is the scheme and it is not necessary that money has been paid by the new recruits so long as it is contemplated that it will be payable and that a participant will receive a larger sum than he paid in as a result of the participation of others. It is not a requisite of the scheme that there be a banker: R. v. Mackenzie, Ennis and Meilleur (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 528, 135 D.L.R. (3d) 374, 36 O.R. (2d) 562 (C.A.); R. v. Fehr et al. (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 382 (B.C.C.A.).

The Crown is not required to prove that at the time of the alleged offence other people had already paid money so that one of the persons in the scheme had already been paid a sum greater than what he had earlier paid. It is sufficient that the Crown establishes that the scheme whereby that result could obtain was in existence: R. v. Stead et al. (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 397 (Sask. Prov. Ct.).

Where a significant part of the scheme operated in the province it is no defence that part of the scheme, such as the actual payment of the money, also operated in the United States: R. v. Stead et al., supra.

Subsec. (1)(g) – A wheel of fortune is a gambling device bearing some resemblance to a revolving wheel with sections indicating chances taken or bets placed: R. v. Andrews and five others (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 450, 32 C.R.N.S. 358 (Sask. C.A.).

Subsec. (3) – An accused who can bring himself within this subsection is entitled to its protection even on a charge of keeping a common gaming house under s. 201: R. v. Andrews and Five Others, supra.

However, this principle does not apply where the games involved are slot machines: R. v. Cross (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 505, [1978] 4 W.W.R 644 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Subsec. (8) – The exemption in para. (a) does not apply to a bingo game where, although all participants must be members of the sponsoring association, the prize money is derived from the sale of the bingo cards: R. v. Gladue and Kirby (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 308 (Alta. Prov. Ct.).

PERMITTED LOTTERIES / Terms and conditions of licence / Offence / Definition of "lottery scheme" / Exception re: pari-mutuel betting.

207. (1) Notwithstanding any of the provisions of this Part relating to gaming and betting, it is lawful

- (a) for the government of a province, either alone or in conjunction with the government of another province, to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in that province, or in that and the other province, in accordance with any law enacted by the legislature of that province;
- (b) for a charitable or religious organization, pursuant to a licence issued by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province or by such other person or authority in the province as may be specified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof, to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in that province if the proceeds from the lottery scheme are used for a charitable or religious object or purpose;
- (c) for the board of a fair or of an exhibition or an operator of a concession leased by that board, to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in a province where the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province or such other person or authority in the province as may be specified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof has
  - (i) designated that fair or exhibition as a fair or exhibition where a lottery scheme may be conducted and managed, and
  - (ii) issued a licence for the conduct and management of a lottery scheme to that board or operator;
- (d) for any person, pursuant to a licence issued by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province or by such other person or authority in the province as may be specified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof, to conduct and manage a lottery scheme at a public place of amusement in that province if
  - (i) the amount or value of each prize awarded does not exceed five hundred dollars, and
  - (ii) the money or other valuable consideration paid to secure a chance to win a prize does not exceed two dollars;
- (e) for the government of a province to agree with the government of another province that lots, cards or tickets in relation to a lottery scheme that is by any of paragraphs (a) to (d) authorized to be conducted and managed in that other province may be sold in the province;
- (f) for any person, pursuant to a licence issued by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province or such other person or authority in the province as may be designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof, to conduct and manage in the province a lottery scheme that is authorized to be conducted and managed in one or more other provinces where the authority by which the lottery scheme was first authorized to be conducted and managed consents thereto;
- (g) for any person, for the purpose of a lottery scheme that is lawful in a province under any of paragraphs (a) to (f), to do anything in the province, in accordance with the applicable law or licence, that is required for the conduct, management or operation of the lottery scheme or for the person to participate in the scheme; and
- (h) for any person to make or print anywhere in Canada or to cause to be made or printed anywhere in Canada anything relating to gaming and betting that is to be used in a place where it is or would, if certain conditions provided by law are met, be lawful to use such a thing, or to send, transmit, mail, ship, deliver or allow to be sent, transmitted, mailed, shipped or delivered or to accept for carriage or transport or convey any such thing where the destination thereof is such a place.

(2) Subject to this Act, a licence issued by or under the authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province as described in paragraph (1)(b), (c), (d) or (f) may contain such terms and conditions relating to the conduct, management and operation of or participation in the lottery scheme to which the licence relates as the Lieutenant Governor in Council of that province, the person or authority in the province designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council thereof or any law enacted by the legislature of that province may prescribe.

(3) Every one who, for the purposes of a lottery scheme, does anything that is not authorized by or pursuant to a provision of this section

- (a) in the case of the conduct, management or operation of that lottery scheme,
  - (i) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or
  - (ii) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction; or
- (b) in the case of participating in that lottery scheme, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(4) In this section, “lottery scheme” means a game or any proposal, scheme, plan, means, device, contrivance or operation described in any of paragraphs 206(1)(a) to (g), whether or not it involves betting, pool selling or a pool system of betting other than

- (a) a dice game, three-card monte, punch board or coin table;
- (b) bookmaking, pool selling or the making or recording of bets, including bets made through the agency of a pool or pari-mutuel system, on any race or fight, or on a single sport event or athletic contest; or
- (c) for the purposes of paragraphs (1)(b) to (f), a game or proposal, scheme, plan, means, device, contrivance or operation described in any of paragraphs 206(1)(a) to (g) that is operated on or through a computer, video device or slot machine, within the meaning of subsection 198(3).

(5) For greater certainty, nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing the making or recording of bets on horse-races through the agency of a pari-mutuel system other than in accordance with section 204. R.S., c. C-34, s. 190; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 12; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 31, c. 52 (1st Supp.), s. 3.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “bet” and “game” are defined in s. 197. Pari-mutuel systems are dealt with in s. 204. The game of “three-card monte”, referred to in subsec. (4), was described in Re Rosen (1920), 37 C.C.C. 381 (Que. C.A.), as a “a game played with three cards, say, two black ones and a red one, shuffled or manipulated by the dealer and placed face down and the opponent backs his ability to spot the position of a particular card. By sleight of hand or quickness of movement, the dealer endeavours to induce the person backing his opinion to put his hand on the wrong card”.

Where the Crown elects to proceed by indictment on the offence described in subsec. (3)(a) then the accused has an election as to mode of trial under s. 536(2). Where the Crown elects to proceed by way of summary conviction for the offence under subsec. (3)(a) and for any case under subsec. (3)(b), the trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for these summary conviction offences is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For all offences under this section, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. As regards special search and seizure powers in relation to offences under this section, see s. 199.

As regards pyramid selling and similar schemes, reference should be made to ss. 55 and 56 of the Competition Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-34 and respecting the conduct of promotional contests involving a lottery or other game, see s. 59 of the same Act.

Related offences are: s. 201, keeping common gaming or betting house; s. 203, placing bets on behalf of others; s. 209, cheating at play.

SYNOPSIS

Section 207 legalizes the creation and operation of lotteries run by any of the bodies specified in s. 207(1)(a) to (d). In addition it provides for the regulation of such schemes and creates an offence of operating or participating in a lottery not created or run in accordance with s. 207.

Section 207(1) permits lotteries to be created by a province, or under licence by charitable or religious organizations, by a board of a fair or exhibition or by any other person to whom a licence has been issued. The last-mentioned category only applies to lotteries in which the ticket cost no more than two dollars and the prize does not exceed $500.

Section 207(1)(e) to (h) permits persons to do specified activities required to carry out the operation of lawful lotteries under this section.

Section 207(4) exhaustively defines the term lottery scheme for the purposes of this section and also specifically excludes the activities noted in s. 207(4)(a) to (c) which are dealt with (either by way of prohibition or regulation) in ss. 202 to 206.

Section 207(5) clarifies the scope of the exclusion in s. 207(4)(b) in relation to pari-mutuel schemes.

Section 207(2) permits terms and conditions to be imposed in a licence under this section to regulate the conduct, management, and operation or participation in a lottery scheme.

Section 207(3) makes it an offence to do anything not authorized by this section if the act is done for the purpose of a lottery scheme. It is a summary conviction offence or an indictable offence punishable by up to two years imprisonment if the act is done in relation to the conduct, management or operation of such scheme. It is a summary conviction offence to participate in an unlawful scheme.

ANNOTATIONS

Since a "pull-ticket" vending machine falls within the definition of a slot machine in s. 198(3) the provincial gaming commission acts properly in refusing to issue licenses to charities or religious organizations seeking to use such machines: Charity Vending Ltd. v. Alberta (Gaming Commission) (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 455 (Alta. C.A.).

The statutory scheme established by this section and s. 206 which, in effect, decriminalizes certain forms of gambling and creates a regulated industry does not constitute an unconstitutional delegation to the province, although the power to impose terms and conditions on licenses is delegated to the Lieutenant-Governor: R. v. Furtney, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 89, 66 C.C.C. (3d) 498, 8 C.R. (4th) 121 (7:0).

CHEATING AT PLAY.

209. Every one who, with intent to defraud any person, cheats while playing a game or in holding the stakes for a game or in betting is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 192.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "game" and "bet" are defined in s. 197.

This offence is a pure indictable offence, but, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences are: s. 201, keeping common gaming or betting house; s. 202, offences in relation to betting, pool-selling and book-making, etc.; s. 203, placing bets on behalf of others; s. 380, fraud.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to cheat at play. The actus reus of the offence is to cheat while doing any of the following: playing a game; holding the stakes; or betting. The requisite mental element is the intention of defrauding any person. The maximum sentence upon conviction is two years.

In McGarey v. The Queen (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 525, 26 D.L.R. (3d) 231 (S.C.C.) the booth operator was convicted in the operation of a midway milk bottle toss game where the unsuspecting patron was unaware that the bottom bottles of each pyramid were heavily weighted. It was held (5:0) that in this game of mixed chance and skill the booth operator was a player and the surreptitious weighting of the bottom bottles constituted his intent to defraud the patron player by creating a false visual impression of the game, which false impression in itself was the ill-practice of cheating.

However, simple measures taken to increase the degree of skill required for success are not improper: R. v. Reilly (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 286 (Ont. C.A.).

Bawdy-houses

KEEPING COMMON BAWDY-HOUSE / Landlord, inmate, etc. / Notice of conviction to be served on owner / Duty of landlord on notice.

210. (1) Every one who keeps a common bawdy-house is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

(2) Every one who

- (a) is an inmate of a common bawdy-house,
- (b) is found, without lawful excuse, in a common bawdy-house, or
- (c) as owner, landlord, lessor, tenant, occupier, agent or otherwise having charge or control of any place, knowingly permits the place or any part thereof to be let or used for the purposes of a common bawdy-house, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Where a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1), the court shall cause a notice of the conviction to be served on the owner, landlord or lessor of the place in respect of which the person is convicted or his agent, and the notice shall contain a statement to the effect that it is being served pursuant to this section.

(4) Where a person on whom a notice is served under subsection (3) fails forthwith to exercise any right he may have to determine the tenancy or right of occupation of the person so convicted, and thereafter any person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1) in respect of the same premises, the person on whom the notice was served shall be deemed to have committed an offence under subsection (1) unless he proves that he has taken all reasonable steps to prevent the recurrence of the offence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 193.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “keeper”, “common bawdy-house” and “place” are defined in s. 197. Section 198(1)(a) and (d) set out certain presumptions which aid in proof that premises are a common bawdy-house.

As regards special search and seizure powers in relation to bawdy-houses, see s. 199.

The offence in subsec. (1) is a pure indictable offence, but, by virtue of s. 553, it is an offence over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction and does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). The trial of the offences in subsec. (2) are conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offences in subsec. (2) are as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). For all offences under this section, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

This offence falls within the definition of “enterprise crime offence” in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2.

Other offences related to prostitution may be found in ss. 211 to 213.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates a number of offences in relation to a common bawdy-house.

Section 210(1) makes it an indictable offence to keep a common bawdy-house. The maximum sentence upon conviction is two years.

Section 210(2) creates three summary conviction offences. Section 210(2)(a) makes it an offence to be an inmate in a common bawdy-house. “Inmate” is not defined in the Criminal Code but would include a resident or regular occupant of the premises. Section 210(2)(b) makes it an offence to be found in a common bawdy-house. It must be shown that there was no lawful excuse for the accused’s presence. The term “found in” is not defined. Section 210(2)(c) makes it an offence for any of the named persons to knowingly permit any part of a premises to be used or let for the purposes of a common bawdy-house. The category of persons who are caught by this paragraph are those who have actual control or charge over the premises. To demonstrate that the conduct satisfies the necessary mental element of having knowingly permitted the use, it must be shown that the accused was aware of the use of the premises and either acquiesced or encouraged its continued use for the illicit purposes.

Subsections (3) and (4) must be read together and create a duty upon the owner, landlord or lessor of the premises which was the subject of a conviction under subsec. (1) (keeping a common bawdy-house). Subsection (3) provides for a notice to be served upon such person or his agent advising of the conviction, and upon receipt of the notice the landlord, owner or lessor must either forthwith attempt to terminate the tenancy or other arrangement permitting the keeper to be on the premises or face possible later prosecution. If there is a conviction under subsec. (1) in relation to the same premises after the notice has served upon the owner (or other person mentioned in the subsection) the person who had received the notice shall be deemed to also be a keeper pursuant to subsec. (1). To accord with fundamental fairness, at the least it must be shown that the later conviction involving the same premises related to activity which occurred after the notice has been served. The effect of the deeming provision may be ousted if the accused establishes that all reasonable steps were taken to prevent the reoccurrence of the offence under subsec. (1).

ANNOTATIONS

Common bawdy-house / [Also see notes under s. 197] – Any defined space is capable of being a common bawdy-house, even a parking lot, if there is localization of a number of acts of prostitution within its specified boundaries. However, mere presence by prostitutes in the parking lot on a number of occasions, where they did not exercise any control or management over the lot and had no right or interest in the lot as owners, tenants or licensees, is not sufficient to establish them as keeping a common bawdy-house: R. v. Pierce and Golloher (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 388, 37 O.R. (2d) 721 (C.A.).

That the premises are a common bawdy-house may be proved by evidence of the general reputation of the house in the community: Theirlynck v. The King (1931), 56 C.C.C. 156, [1931] S.C.R. 478, [1931] 4 D.L.R. 591.

As well, where there is evidence that the place has the reputation as a common bawdy-house, evidence was admissible as to the accused's reputation as a prostitute. Such evidence is not admitted to show that the accused was the keeper but that the place is occupied by a person whose reputation is consistent with the reputation which it is said the place bears: R. v. West (1950), 96 C.C.C. 349, 9 C.R. 355, [1950] O.W.N. 302 (C.A.).

Keeps [subsec. (1)] – As not every “keeper” as defined in s. 197 “keeps” a common bawdy-house, an information charging that the accused “were the keepers of a common bawdy-house” does not charge an offence known to law: R. v. Catalano (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 255 (Ont. C.A.).

Thus the offence requires proof of provision of accommodation by the accused. A prostitute who on several occasions over a two-week period resorted to the same hotel must be acquitted of this offence where there is no evidence she was given any particular room, or had rented a particular room or even that she had paid the rent on the room: R. v. McLellan (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 543 (B.C.C.A.).

To establish the offence of keeping there must be proof that the accused had some degree of control over the care and management of the premises, and that the accused participated to some extent in the illicit activities of the common bawdy-house. This element of participation does not, however, require personal participation in the sexual acts which occur in the house. It is sufficient that the accused participated in the use of the house as a common bawdy-house. Thus, a person who satisfies the definition of “keeper” in s. 197(1) does not necessarily commit the offence under subsec. (1): R. v. Corbeil (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 272, 5 C.R. (4th) 62, 124 N.R. 241 (S.C.C.) (4:1).

It is unnecessary to show that the accused participated in the day-to-day running of the premises where he is shown to be the directing mind of the corporation which owned the premises, participated in the management, received the proceeds and was aware of the activities being carried on: R. v. Woszczyna; R. v. Soucy (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 221 (Ont. C.A.).

Even where the accused uses her own residence by herself for the purposes of prostitution she may be convicted under this section: R. v. Worthington (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 311, 22 C.R.N.S. 34 (Ont. C.A.).

Found in [subsec. (2)(b)] – The offence of being found in a common bawdy-house is not a lesser offence included in the charge of keeping a common bawdy-house: R. v. Labelle, [1957] Que. Q.B. 81 (C.A.).

The offence under para. (2)(b) requires that the accused was found in the common bawdy house and it was not sufficient that the accused “was present”. Mere proof of presence on the premises in question at some earlier time is not sufficient, the accused must have been perceived there or seen by someone. On the other hand, evidence that the accused was seen entering and leaving was sufficient to prove the offence, his presence in the bawdy house not being the object of subsequent admission but being discovered by the contemporaneous observation or inspection by the police: R. v. Lemieux (1991), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 434, [1992] R.J.Q. 295, 44 Q.A.C. 1 (C.A.).

Permitting [subsec. (2)(c)] – Where the accused knowingly allowed the premises to be used as a place to which men and women resorted for the purpose of illicit sexual intercourse then a conviction will be sustained even though there was no evidence that the women were charging money for their services or that the couples resorting to the premises were unmarried: R. v. Turkiewich (1962), 133 C.C.C. 301, 38 C.R. 220 (Man. C.A.).

A charge of being an occupier unlawfully permitting premises to be used as a common bawdy-house was held to be a lesser offence included in the charge of keeping a common bawdy-house: R. v. Lafreniere, [1965] 1 C.C.C. 31, 44 C.R. 274 (Ont. H.C.J.).

The words "or otherwise having charge or control" qualify the earlier words in the subsection and make it clear that the section is not directed at an owner or landlord, per se, but rather at such persons as being the ones having charge or control of the premises. Even where the landlord has power to acquire the charge or control of the premises by immediate termination of the lease, still, once he leased the premises, it was the tenant who had charge or control. The section is directed at a landlord who has actual charge or control in the sense that he has the right to intervene forthwith and whose failure to do so can be considered the granting of permission: R. v. Wong (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 6, 2 Alta. L.R. 90 (S.C. App. Div.).

Constitutional considerations – This section does not offend either s. 2 or s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Reference re Sections 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 65, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1235, [1990] 4 W.W.R. 481, 77 C.R. (3d) 1 (4:2).

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “prostitute”, “common bawdy-house” and “place” are defined in s. 197. Sexual intercourse is defined in s. 4(5).

Under s. 150.1, it is no defence to the offences in subsec. (2) and (4) that the accused believed that the complainant was 18 years of age, unless the accused took all reasonable steps to ascertain the complainant’s age. Age is determined by s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. Section 658 provides means of proving the age of a child. The accused may elect his mode of trial on any of the offences in this section pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although an accused charged with the offence under subsec. (4) is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person found guilty of an offence under subsec. (1) or (2) may, depending on the circumstances, be liable to the mandatory prohibition order in s. 100(1) for possession of firearms, ammunition and explosives. The offence in subsec. (1) may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5). The offences in this section fall within the definition of “enterprise crime offence” in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2.

Special evidentiary and procedural provisions – Section 274 specifically provides that no corroboration is required for a conviction for these offences and the judge shall not instruct the jury that it is unsafe to find the accused guilty in the absence of corroboration. Also see s. 659 abrogating any rule requiring a warning about convicting on the evidence of a child. Under s. 4(2) of the Canada Evidence Act, the spouse of an accused charged with this offence is a compellable witness at the instance of the prosecution. Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act deals with the competency of witnesses under the age of 14 years.

Related offences are: ss. 210 and 211, offences in relation to bawdy-houses; s. 213, offences in relation to prostitution; ss. 271 to 273, sexual assault; s. 245, administering noxious substance. Sexual offences in relation to children may be found in Part V, ss. 151 to 153 and ss. 170 to 172.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to engage in any of the listed actions in relation to procuring a person for the purposes of prostitution and related illicit activities. It also creates indictable offences relating to youthful prostitutes.

Section 212(1)(a) prohibits procuring, attempting to procure or soliciting a person to have illicit sexual intercourse with another person. The act of intercourse may occur (or be intended to occur) in or out of Canada. The term "illicit" is broader than prohibited by the criminal law and includes such acts as requiring an employee to have sex with prospective clients in order for the employer to obtain business.

Section 212(1)(b) makes it an offence to inveigle or entice another person to a common bawdy-house or a house of assignation. It must be shown that the accused did the acts for the purpose of getting that person to engage in illicit sexual intercourse or prostitution. The paragraph specifically excludes liability if the person enticed or inveigled is a prostitute or a person of known immoral character.

Section 212(1)(c) makes it an offence to conceal another in a common bawdy-house or a house of assignation. It must be proven that the accused did so knowingly, namely, that the accused did the act while aware of the nature of the premises involved.

Section 212(1)(d) prohibits procuring or attempting to procure any one to become a prostitute. It applies whether the person is being procured to be a prostitute in or out of Canada. It is a defence if the accused reasonably believed that the person is already a prostitute.

Section 212(1)(e) makes it an offence to procure or attempt to procure any one to move from their home for the purpose of becoming an inmate or a frequenter of a common bawdy-house. The common bawdy-house may be located in or out of Canada. It must be shown that the person does not already live in a common bawdy-house.

Section 212(1)(f) makes it an offence to direct, take (or to cause either) a person arriving in Canada to a common bawdy-house or a house of assignation. No intention beyond the doing of the physical acts need be shown.

It is an offence under s. 212(1)(g) to procure another to enter or leave Canada for the purpose of prostitution.

Section 212(1)(h) makes it an offence to exercise control, direction or influence over another person if the accused's acts aid abet or compel another to carry on prostitution. It must be proven, in addition to the foregoing, that the acts were done for the purpose of gain.

Pursuant to s. 212(1)(i) it is an offence to administer or cause another to take anything (including drugs or alcohol) if the acts are accompanied by the mental elements of intent to either stupefy or overpower another person for the purpose of enabling any one to have sexual intercourse with that person.

The final offence created by this subsection is to live entirely, or in part, on the avails of the prostitution of another person. A prostitute cannot be prosecuted for supporting him or herself on the proceeds of the trade nor can such a person be convicted as a party or co-conspirator to living off the avails of their own earnings.

The maximum sentence upon conviction for any of the offences in s. 212(1) is 10 years' imprisonment.

Subsection (3) creates a presumption that one who lives with a prostitute or is in the habitual company of a prostitute or lives in a common bawdy-house, or a house of assignation, lives on the avails of prostitution. The accused may rebut the inference which would otherwise be relevant to a prosecution under subssecs. (1)(j) or (2).

Subsections (2) and (4) create offences relating to youthful prostitutes. Section 212(2) raises the maximum sentence upon conviction for living off the avails of a prostitutes to 14 years if the prostitute is under 18. (The maximum sentence would otherwise be 10 years – see s. 212(1)(j)). Section 212(4) makes it an offence to obtain, or attempt to obtain, the sexual services of a person under 18 years of age. It must be shown that consideration was offered for the services. The accused is liable to a sentence of five years upon conviction.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (1)(a) – Evidence of an attempt to obtain a female person for a man who desires sexual intercourse for money will support a conviction: R. v. Babcock (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 175 (B.C.C.A.).

The word “illicit” in this paragraph refers to sexual intercourse not authorized or sanctioned by lawful marriage and is not limited to sexual intercourse prohibited by the criminal law or other enactment of positive law and would include requiring an employee to have intercourse with the company’s clients in order to conclude contracts: Deutsch v. The Queen (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 52 C.R. (3d) 305, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 2. (5:0).

Assuming that the offence of procuring a woman to have illicit sexual intercourse is not committed unless sexual intercourse takes place nevertheless the accused could be convicted of attempting to procure under this paragraph where the accused in the course of a job interview advised the prospective employee that she would have to have sexual intercourse with the company’s clients where necessary to conclude a contract and that a successful employee could make a great deal of money, even if in the end no job offer was actually made. Provided the accused had the necessary intent to induce or persuade the woman to seek employment that would require her to have sexual intercourse with prospective clients, then the holding out of the large financial rewards in the course of the interviews, in which the necessity of having sexual intercourse with prospective clients was disclosed, could constitute the actus reus of an attempt to procure. This would clearly be a step, and an important step, in the commission of the offence: Deutsch v. The Queen, supra.

Subsec. (1)(d) – It is no offence to recruit a woman who is already a prostitute and the accused’s belief that the woman is already a prostitute is a defence to this charge: R. v. Cline (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 214, [1982] 2 W.W.R. 286 (Alta. C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(j) – This offence requires proof that the accused received in kind all or part of the female’s proceeds from prostituting herself or had those proceeds applied in some way to support his living. It is her avails as such that he must live on and indirect benefits resulting to him from her practice are not avails of her prostitution. As well, the words “living on” connote living parasitically and those persons who offer the same services to prostitutes as to other persons do not commit this offence: R. v. Celebrity Enterprises Ltd. et al. (1977), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 540, [1978] 2 W.W.R. 562 (B.C.C.A.).

Where the accused is living with a prostitute, the question to be determined is whether the accused and the prostitute had entered into a normal and legitimate living arrangement which included a sharing of expenses for their mutual benefit or whether, instead, the accused was living parasitically on the earnings of the prostitute for his own advantage. This is not to say that, to avoid liability under this paragraph, each of the parties must make an equal contribution to the living expenses. The parasitic aspect of the relationship involves an element of exploitation which is essential to the concept of living on the avails of prostitution: R. v. Grilo (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 53, 5 C.R. (4th) 113, 2 O.R. (3d) 514 (C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Bramwell (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 418, 60 W.A.C. 293 (B.C.C.A.).

The prostitute on whose avails another person lives may not be convicted of the offence of conspiring with that person to commit the offence contrary to this paragraph. The prostitute’s immunity from prosecution does not, however, bar the conviction for conspiracy of the person who lived on the avails of her prostitution where there is proof of an agreement between him and the prostitute that he do so: R. v. Murphy and Bieneck (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 1, 21 C.R. (2d) 39 (Alta. C.A.).

Subsec. (3) – This subsection creates a mandatory presumption whereby the accused will need to call evidence, unless there is already evidence to the contrary in the Crown's case. This presumption infringes the presumption of innocence as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter but constitutes a reasonable limit and is therefore valid. R. v. Downey (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 13 C.R. (4th) 129, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 10.

Repeal of limitation period – Where, prior to the repeal of the one year limitation period in former s. 212(4), the charges would have been statute-barred then proceedings cannot thereafter be commenced against the accused: R. v. Ford (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 544, 106 D.L.R. (4th) 325, 15 O.R. (3d) 171 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Sheppard (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 213, 84 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 242 (Nfld. S.C.).

Within one year of that review the committee is to submit a report to the House including a statement of any changes the committee recommends.

SYNOPSIS

(1)(a) to (c)) if accompanied by the intention of engaging in prostitution or obtaining the sexual services of a prostitute. This summary conviction offence applies to the acts described below only if they are done in a public place (as defined by s. 213(2)) or a place open to public view.

Section 213(1)(a) applies to the act of either stopping a motor vehicle or attempting to do so for the prohibited purpose.

Section 213(1)(b) prohibits impeding either pedestrian or motor vehicle traffic, or impeding others from going in or out of any premises adjacent to a public place, or one open to the public for the purposes described above.

Section 213(1)(c) makes it an offence to stop any one or to communicate in any manner (or attempt to do either) for the prohibited purpose.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsection (1)(c) of this section, while infringing freedom of expression as guaranteed by s. 2(b) of the Charter, is a reasonable limit on that freedom and is therefore valid. Nor is the provision on its own or in combination with the bawdy-house prohibition in s. 210(1) a violation of s. 7 of the Charter: Reference re ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 65, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123, [1990] 4, W.W.R. 481, 77 C.R. (3d) 1 (4:2). Nor does subsec. (1)(c) violate the guarantee to freedom of association: R. v. Skinner (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1235, 77 C.R. (3d) 84 (4:2).

Paragraph (1)(c) in effect creates two ways in which the offence may be carried out in that it makes it an offence either to stop or attempt to stop the person or to in any manner communicate or attempt to communicate for the prohibited purpose. There is no requirement that the accused be shown to have stopped and communicated with another person: R. v. Head (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 56, 59 C.R. (3d) 80 (B.C.C.A.).

The offence of communicating for the purpose of obtaining sexual service requires proof of an intention to engage sexual services. More than mere communication is required. The intention of the accused, however, may be inferred from the circumstances. In this case, evidence that the accused spoke to the undercover officer merely out of curiosity negated intent: R. v. Pake (1995), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 524 (Alta. C.A.).

The mere response by the accused, to an overture by a plainclothes police woman, that he wished to obtain the sexual services of a prostitute is sufficient to make out the offence under this section: R. v. Edwards and Pine (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 412 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

The offence in para. (c) was intended to protect everyone from the nuisance of being propositioned on the street and at least prohibits communication for the purpose of engaging the sexual services of a person whom the accused thinks to be a prostitute: R. v. Ruest (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 476, 7 C.R. (4th) 48, 40 Q.A.C. 147 (C.A.).

A conversation in a motor vehicle on a public street is within this section, although the vehicle is at all times in motion: R. v. Smith (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 127 (B.C.C.A.).

CROSS-REFERENCES

In addition to the definitions in this section, see s. 2 and notes to that section. The terms “motor vehicle” and “railway equipment” are defined in s. 2. The term “wilfully” does not have a fixed meaning and must take its meaning from the context. Generally speaking, however, it connotes an intention to bring about a proscribed consequence. See: Regina v. Buzzanga and Durocher (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 369 (Ont. C.A.). Most of the legal duties referred to in the definition of “abandon” or “expose” may be found in ss. 215 to 217. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

ANNOTATIONS

“abandon or expose” – A relative who undertakes to babysit young children is under a legal duty to take the same care of the children as their parents are at law required to do: R. v. Reedy (No. 2) (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 104 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

Duties Tending to Preservation of Life

DUTY OF PERSONS TO PROVIDE NECESSARIES / Offence / Punishment / Presumptions.

215. (1) Every one is under a legal duty

(a) as a parent, foster parent, guardian or head of a family, to provide necessities of life for a child under the age of sixteen years;

(b) as a married person, to provide necessities of life to his spouse; and

(c) to provide necessities of life to a person under his charge if that person

(i) is unable, by reason of detention, age, illness, mental disorder or other cause, to withdraw himself from that charge, and

(ii) is unable to provide himself with necessities of life.

(2) Every one commits an offence who, being under a legal duty within the meaning of subsection (1), fails without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, to perform that duty, if

(a) with respect to a duty imposed by paragraph (1)(a) or (b),

(i) the person to whom the duty is owed is in destitute or necessitous circumstances, or

- (ii) the failure to perform the duty endangers the life of the person to whom the duty is owed, or causes or is likely to cause the health of that person to be endangered permanently; or
  - (b) with respect to a duty imposed by paragraph (1)(c), the failure to perform the duty endangers the life of the person to whom the duty is owed or causes or is likely to cause the health of that person to be injured permanently.
- (3) Every one who commits an offence under subsection (2) is guilty of
- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
  - (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.
- (4) For the purpose of proceedings under this section,
- (a) evidence that a person has cohabited with a person of the opposite sex or has in any way recognized that person as being his spouse is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that they are lawfully married;
  - (b) evidence that a person has in any way recognized a child as being his child is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that the child is his child;
  - (c) evidence that a person has left his spouse and has failed, for a period of any one month subsequent to the time of his so leaving, to make provision for the maintenance of his spouse or for the maintenance of any child of his under the age of sixteen years is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that he has failed without lawful excuse to provide necessities of life for them; and
  - (d) the fact that a spouse or child is receiving or has received necessities of life from another person who is not under a legal duty to provide them is not a defence. R.S., c. C-34, s. 197; 1974-75-76, c. 66, s. 8; 1991, c. 43, s. 9.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “child” and “guardian” are defined in s. 214. The term “mental disorder” is defined in s. 2. Omission to perform the duty imposed by subsec. (1) may, in some circumstances, amount to criminal negligence as defined in s. 219 and, if conduct results in death or bodily harm, will amount to an offence under ss. 220 and 221 respectively. Criminal negligence causing death is also a form of culpable homicide for the purposes of ss. 222 to 237. The related offence of abandoning a child is in s. 218. Neglecting to obtain assistance in child birth is an offence under s. 242. The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2).

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates an offence for failing to provide the necessities of life and contains a number of rebuttable presumptions which facilitate proof of certain elements of the offence.

Section 215(1) establishes three classes of relationships in which one party has a legal duty to provide the necessities of life to the other party. (a) a parent, foster parent, guardian or head of a family must provide the necessities of life to a child under the age of 16; (b) a married person must provide for his spouse; and (c) a person who has charge of another must provide the necessities of life to that person if for one of the specified reasons that person is unable to withdraw from the charge and is unable to provide himself with the necessities of life.

Section 215(2) states that failure to carry out the legal duty specified in subsec. (1) constitutes an offence. The first element of this offence is that the accused failed, without lawful excuse, to fulfil a duty imposed by subsec. (1) if the additional conditions in either s. 215(2)(a) or (b) are established. The onus of establishing a lawful excuse is on the accused and, as with all such burdens placed on the accused, it has been attacked as an alleged violation of ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter.

Section 215(2)(a) applies to cases in which the legal duty owed by the accused arises as a result of s. 215(1)(a) or (b) (basically parents and spouses). Under s. 215(2)(a), the offence will be made out if the person to whom the duty is owed is either destitute or in necessitous circumstances or if the result of the failure to fulfil the duty endangers the life of the person to whom the duty is owed or causes or is likely to cause permanent endangerment to the health of that person. Section 215(2)(b) applies if the duty upon the accused arose from s. 215(1)(c) (a person under the charge of the accused if certain circumstances pertain). The failure to fulfil that duty makes out the offence, if the result is that the life of the person to whom the duty is owed is endangered or it is likely to cause the health of that person to be injured permanently.

Subsection (3) provides that the offence created may be prosecuted by way of summary conviction procedure or by indictment. In the latter event, the maximum sentence is two years.

Section 215(4)(a) to (c) set out rebuttable evidentiary presumptions that evidence of the things specified is proof of certain elements of the offence unless there is any evidence to the contrary. Section 215(4)(d) limits what constitutes a defence to the charge of failing to provide the necessities of life. It provides that it is not a defence that some one else, who is not under a legal duty to do so, provided a spouse or child the necessities of life.

ANNOTATIONS

"necessaries of life" – The words "necessaries of life" mean such necessities as tend to preserve life, and not necessities in their ordinary legal sense and may include medical aid: R. v. Brooks (1902), 5 C.C.C. 372 (B.C.S.C.).

Medical treatment tending to preserve life is a necessary of life and if it were established that the parent of a minor child, by denying treatment to the child, accelerated the child's death then he could be convicted of the offence of criminal negligence causing death contrary to s. 220 if the requisite reckless disregard for the child's life and safety was demonstrated: R. v. Cyrenne, Cyrenne and Cramb (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 238 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

Lawful excuse – The accused's inability to support his wife may constitute a lawful excuse: R. v. Yuman (1910), 17 C.C.C. 474, 22 O.L.R. 500 (C.A.).

It is not a lawful excuse for a parent who, knowing that a child is in need of medical assistance, refused to obtain such assistance because to do so would be contrary to a tenet of his own particular faith. The guarantee to freedom of conscience and religion in s. 2(a) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not affect that issue: R. v. Tutton and Tutton (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 328, 44 C.R. (3d) 193, 14 C.R.R. 314 (Ont. C.A.), affd 48 C.C.C. (3d) 1 (S.C.C.) (6:0).

Where an accused is charged with manslaughter in an indictment so worded as to make the offence under this subsection an included offence, it must be made clear to the jury that the issue of lawful excuse and the onus on the accused on that issue is not applicable on the manslaughter charge: R. v. Tutton and Tutton, supra.

Placing the burden of proof of lawful excuse upon the accused infringes the presumption of innocence guarantee in s. 11(d) of the Charter and, accordingly, the words "the proof of which lies upon him" are of no force and effect: R. v. Atikian (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 293 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Mens rea – This offence imposes liability on an objective basis. On a charge contrary to subsec. (2) (a)(ii), the Crown must prove a marked departure from the conduct of a reasonably prudent parent in circumstances where it was objectively foreseeable that the failure to provide the necessities of life would lead to a risk of danger to the life, or a risk of permanent endangerment to the health, of the child: R. v. Naglik, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 122, 83 C.C.C. (3d) 526, 23 C.R. (4th) 335.

In a series of cases, the Supreme Court of Canada had occasion to explore the fault element in cases of so-called “penal negligence” apparently as distinguished from criminal negligence. Failure to provide necessities would be one of these offences. In R. v. Creighton (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 632 (S.C.C.) McLachlin J., writing for a majority of the court, suggested the following approach to proof of such offences. The first question is whether the actus reus is established. This requires that the negligence constitute a marked departure from the standards of a reasonable person in all the circumstances of the case. The next question is whether the mens rea is established. Normally the mens rea for objective foresight of risk of harm is inferred from the facts. The standard is that of the reasonable person in the circumstances of the accused. The normal inference that a person who committed a manifestly dangerous act failed to direct their mind to the risk and the need to take care may be negated by evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to lack of capacity to appreciate the risk. Short of incapacity, personal factors are not relevant whether those factors might indicate, for example, either a lack of experience or a special experience. Also see: R. v. Naglik, supra.

DUTY OF PERSONS UNDERTAKING ACTS DANGEROUS TO LIFE.

216. Every one who undertakes to administer surgical or medical treatment to another person or to do any other lawful act that may endanger the life of another person is, except in cases of necessity, under a legal duty to have and to use reasonable knowledge, skill and care in so doing. R.S., c. C-34, s. 198.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Omission to perform the duty imposed by this section may, in some circumstances, amount to criminal negligence as defined in s. 219 and, if conduct results in death or bodily harm, will amount to an offence under ss. 220 and 221 respectively. Criminal negligence causing death is also a form of culpable homicide for the purposes of ss. 222 to 237. Also note s. 217 respecting the duty of persons undertaking acts. Section 45 protects a person from criminal responsibility for performing surgical operations in certain circumstances.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates a legal duty upon those who undertake lawful acts that may endanger the life of another to have and to use reasonable knowledge, skill and care in so doing. Section 216 specifically addresses those administering surgical or medical treatment, but also extends to anyone who does any other lawful act that may endanger the life of another person. This section explicitly excludes those cases in which the act was performed out of necessity.

ANNOTATIONS

Whether or not the accused, who were acting as midwives at a home birth, were administering medical treatment within the meaning of this section their conduct did constitute “any other lawful act that may endanger the life of another person” and they were therefore under a legal duty to have and use reasonable knowledge, skill and care and were to be held to the standard of a competent childbirth attendant notwithstanding their lack of formal training as midwives: R. v. Sullivan and Lemay (1986), 31 C.C.C. (3d) 62, 55 C.R. (3d) 48 (B.C. Co. Ct.). [Appeal to Court of Appeal dismissed on other grounds (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 65 C.R. (3d) 256, 31 B.C.L.R. (2d) 145, further appeal to S.C.C. allowed on other grounds 63 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 3 C.R. (4th) 277, [1991] 1 S.C.R. 489.

This section imposed a legal duty on the accused, who knew he was infected with the AIDS virus, to not donate blood to the Red Cross and breach of this duty may found a conviction for common nuisance under s. 180: R. v. Thornton, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 445, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 530, 21 C.R. (4th) 215 (9:0).

DUTY OF PERSONS UNDERTAKING ACTS.

217. Every one who undertakes to do an act is under a legal duty to do it if an omission to do the act is or may be dangerous to life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 199.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Omission to perform the duty imposed by this section may, in some circumstances, amount to criminal negligence as defined in s. 219 and if conduct results in death or bodily harm will amount to an offence under ss. 220 and 221 respectively. Criminal negligence causing death is also a form of culpable homicide for the purposes of ss. 222 to 237.

---

ABANDONING CHILD.

218. Every one who unlawfully abandons or exposes a child who is under the age of ten years, so that its life is or is likely to be endangered or its health is or is likely to be permanently injured, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 200.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "child", "abandon" and "expose" are defined in s. 214. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21. The related offence of failing to provide necessities is found in s. 215. Neglecting to obtain assistance in child birth is an offence under s. 242.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(2).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

---

ANNOTATIONS

While the Crown, to prove this offence, must prove not only that the child was abandoned but that, inter alia, its life was likely to be endangered, the offence was made out where the accused abandoned her child in a motor vehicle for an indefinite period of time in an environment which posed a threat to its life due to the cold temperatures and risk of abduction. It was no excuse that the accused intended to return several hours later at a time, when according to expert evidence, the child would still be alive. It is the act of endangering that constitutes the offence: R. v. Holzer (1988), 63 C.R. (3d) 301 (Alta. Q.B.).

Criminal Negligence

CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE / Definition of "duty".

219. (1) Every one is criminally negligent who

(a) in doing anything, or

(b) in omitting to do anything that it is his duty to do, shows wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons.

(2) For the purposes of this section, "duty" means a duty imposed by law. R.S., c. C-34, s. 202.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offences of criminal negligence causing death and causing bodily harm are set out in ss. 220 and 221 respectively. Criminal negligence is also a form of culpable homicide for the purposes of s. 222. Duties imposed under sections of the Criminal Code include the following: s. 33, duty to disperse rioters; s. 79, duty of care re explosives; s. 86, duty of care re firearms; s. 215, duty to provide necessities; s. 216, duty of person undertaking acts dangerous to life; s. 217, duty of persons undertaking acts; s. 263(1) and (2), duty to safeguard opening in ice and excavations.

Related offences where the conduct results only in damage to property or animals are found in Part XI.

SYNOPSIS

Section 219 defines the term criminal negligence.

Criminal negligence can arise from either acts or omissions, if the accused was under a legal duty to do the omitted act. If the act or omission shows a wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons, this makes out criminal negligence. Despite the reference to “other persons” the offence need only result in potential harm to one other person.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of criminal negligence – The mere breach of a duty imposed by a provincial statute does not per se constitute criminal negligence: R. v. Tüchner (1961), 131 C.C.C. 64, 29 D.L.R. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.) but it is proper for the Judge to refer the jury to the legislation which governs the particular activity in which the accused is engaged: Leblanc v. The Queen (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 68 D.L.R. (3d) 243 (S.C.C.) (6:3).

Criminal negligence does not require proof of intention or deliberation, indifference being sufficient. Thus, the accused may be convicted on proof of driving amounting to a marked and substantial departure from the standard of a reasonable driver in circumstances where the accused either recognized and ran an obvious and serious risk to the lives and safety of others or, alternatively, gave no thought to that risk: R. v. Sharp (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 428, 39 C.R. (3d) 367, 26 M.V.R. 279 (Ont. C.A.).

In two cases R. v. Waite (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1436, 69 C.R. (3d) 323, and R. v. Tutton (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 129, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1392, 69 C.R. (3d) 289, the Supreme Court considered the mens rea of the criminal negligence offence as it applied to acts of commission [Waite, operation of a motor vehicle] and omission [Tutton, failure of parents to provide medical treatment to a child]. In each case there were three judgments and no clear consensus emerged as to the requisite mens rea. On two points, there was agreement as follows: (1) There is no distinction between acts of commission or omission in determining the requisite mens rea; (2) It is an error to direct the jury that the Crown must prove elements of deliberateness and wilfulness. The court divided equally however on whether the mens rea required was subjective or objective. Three members of the court (McIntyre, Lamer and L’Heureux-Dubé JJ.) were of the view that an objective standard was to be applied. Thus, proof of conduct which reveals a marked and significant departure from the standard which could be expected of a reasonably prudent person in the circumstances will justify a conviction. The decision must be made, however, on a consideration of the facts existing at the time and in relation to the accused’s perception of those facts. Thus, an honest and reasonably held belief in the existence of certain facts may be a relevant consideration in assessing the reasonableness of the accused’s conduct. Further, McIntyre J., writing for himself and L’Heureux-Dubé J., adopted the reasons for judgment of Cory J.A. in the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Waite (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 326, 52 C.R. (3d) 355, 41 M.V.R. 119. This would appear to represent approval of that court’s principle of fault as it applies to this offence, especially in the driving context. The clearest explanation of this principle may be found in R. v. Sharp, supra, where the Court of Appeal held that, while the jury may find the required fault in the nature of the accused’s driving which amounts to a marked and substantial departure from the standard of a reasonable driver in the circumstances, the accused may be acquitted if there is an explanation which arises from the evidence that would account for the deviant conduct in a manner which would negative the element of fault, such as a cause resulting from circumstances beyond the accused's control, for example, a sudden mechanical malfunction. Lamer J. in his concurring reasons in both cases, while accepting the objective standard, was of the view that, in applying this, a generous allowance must be made for factors which are particular to the accused, such as youth, mental development, education. [Quaere whether such a generous allowance applies in the case of licensed activity such as driving.]

Wilson J. writing for herself, Dickson C.J.C. and Le Dain J., while explicitly adopting the fault notion as explained in R. v. Sharp, supra, in the motor vehicle context, would also require proof of some minimal blameworthy state of mind described as advertence to the risk or wilful blindness to the risk. In the driving context, however, where risks to lives and safety of others is constant and obvious, the accused's claim that he or she gave no thought to the risk or has simply a negative state of mind would, in most cases, amount to the culpable positive mental state of wilful blindness to the prohibited risk. More generally it was explained [Tutton, supra, at p. 154 C.C.C.]:

"Conduct which shows a wanton or reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others will by its nature constitute prima facie evidence of the mental element, and in the absence of some evidence that casts doubt on the normal degree of mental awareness, proof of the act and reference to what a reasonable person in the circumstances must have realized will lead to a conclusion that the accused was aware of the risk or wilfully blind to the risk."

In the subsequent cases of R. v. Nelson (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 285, 75 C.R. (3d) 70, 21 M.V.R. (2d) 245 (Ont. C.A.), and R. v. Cabral (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 317, 21 M.V.R. (2d) 252 (Ont. C.A.), held that, until the Supreme Court of Canada holds otherwise, it is still open to that court to follow its decisions in R. v. Sharp, supra, and in R. v. Waite (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 326, and apply the objective test as enunciated in those decisions. Further, the court noted that in the context of a charge of criminal negligence involving the operation of a motor vehicle, in most cases, as a practical matter, there will be very little difference between the limited subjective approach of Wilson J. and the objective approach in R. v. Sharp, supra, and in R. v. Waite (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 326.

In R. v. Anderson (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 481, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 265, 75 C.R. (3d) 50 (7:0), the court returned to the question of criminal negligence in the context of a driving case. Sopinka J. for the court, while not attempting to resolve the objective/subjective issue, pointed out that fundamental to either approach is a finding that the conduct of the accused constituted a marked departure from the norm. He also pointed out that, as the risk created increases, the objective and subjective approaches begin to converge, since the easier it is to conclude that both a reasonably prudent person would have foreseen the consequences [the objective approach] and that the particular accused must have foreseen the consequences [the subjective approach]. In this case, it was unnecessary to resolve the issue because the trial judge had a reasonable doubt whether the conduct of the accused in driving in an impaired condition and failing to stop at a red light was a marked departure from the norm. That being the case, a conclusion that the accused had a wanton or reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others could not be drawn on either a subjective or objective basis.

In determining whether the conduct of the accused, a 16-year-old boy, constituted criminal negligence the standard to be used is that of a sane and sober 16-year-old. The question then was whether or not the conduct amounted to a marked and substantial departure from that standard. In this case the accused lightly pushed his friend at the top of a staircase who then fell to his death. While such conduct constituted negligence it involved only minimal force and momentary inadvertence and was not sufficient to amount to a marked and substantial departure from the standard of a reasonable person: R. v. Barron (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 544, 48 C.R. (2d) 334 (Ont. C.A.).

Evidence that the accused suffered from mental retardation was relevant to determining whether he possessed the capacity to understand and appreciate the risks entailed by his conduct and could therefore be held to be criminally negligent: R. v. Ubhi (1994), 27 C.R. (4th) 332, 1 M.J.R. (3d) 161, 65 W.A.C. 248 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 31 C.R. (4th) 405, 5 M.V.R. (3d) 249n, 177 N.R. 79n.

A “duty imposed by law” may be a duty arising by virtue of either statute or common law: R. v. Coyne (1958), 124 C.C.C. 176, 31 C.R. 335 (N.B. S.C. App. Div.).

A parent is under a legal duty at common law to take reasonable steps to protect his child from illegal violence used by the other parent towards the child which the parent foresees or ought to foresee. Such a parent is criminally liable for failing to discharge that duty in circumstances which show a wanton or reckless disregard for the child’s safety, where the failure to discharge the legal duty has contributed to the death of the child or resulted in bodily harm to the child: R. v. Popen (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 232 (Ont. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not require proof of subjective foresight for a conviction for criminal negligence: R. v. Nelson, supra.

CAUSING DEATH BY CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE.

220. Every person who by criminal negligence causes death to another person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for life and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and
- (b) in any other case, to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 203; 1995, c. 39, s. 141.

ANNOTATIONS

The word “person” should be interpreted in the same manner as “human being” as defined for the homicide provisions by s. 223. Thus for this section to apply the child must have been completely extruded from its mother’s body and be born alive. Where the child dies while it is in the birth canal it is not at that time a “person” and the offence under this section could not be committed: R. v. Sullivan (1991), 63 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 3 C.R. (4th) 277, 122 N.R. 166 (S.C.C.).

Evidence of the type of driving by the accused immediately after the accident is admissible as part of the res gestae and also for consideration on the issue of his wanton and reckless disregard prior to and at the time of the accident: Balcerczyk v. The Queen (1956), 117 C.C.C. 71, [1957] 3 S.C.R. 20 (S.C.C.) (4:1).

For conviction the Crown must prove the breaching of an obligation imposed by law with a wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of others and, to assist in the proof of mens rea, may lead evidence of previous similar conduct: Leblanc v. The Queen (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 68 D.L.R. (3d) 243 (S.C.C.) (6:3).

The element of causation is satisfied if the evidence shows that the criminally negligent conduct of the accused was at least a contributing cause of death outside the de minimis range. It is misdirection to instruct the jury that the conduct must be shown to be a substantial cause. Further, foreseeability of the risk of death is not a factor which the jury should consider on the question of whether the accused’s conduct amounts to criminal negligence: R. v. Pinske (1988), 6 M.V.R. (2d) 19, 30 B.C.L.R. (2d) 114 (C.A.), affd 100 N.R. 399 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

CAUSING BODILY HARM BY CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE.

221. Every one who by criminal negligence causes bodily harm to another person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 204.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Criminal negligence is defined in s. 219. Bodily harm is defined in s. 2.

As to included offences, see s. 662(5).

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) where the victim is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. An accused convicted of this offence may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment for any period not exceeding ten years where the offence under this section was committed by means of a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260. It may be that, in some circumstances, the accused will also be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1). With respect to causation see notes under ss. 220, 249 and 255.

Homicide

HOMICIDE / Kinds of homicide / Non culpable homicide / Culpable homicide / Idem / Exception.

222. (1) A person commits homicide when, directly or indirectly, by any means, he causes the death of a human being.

(2) Homicide is culpable or not culpable.

(3) Homicide that is not culpable is not an offence.

(4) Culpable homicide is murder or manslaughter or infanticide.

(5) A person commits culpable homicide when he causes the death of a human being,
(a) by means of an unlawful act,
(b) by criminal negligence,
(c) by causing that human being, by threats or fear of violence or by deception, to do anything that causes his death, or
(d) by wilfully frightening that human being, in the case of a child or sick person.

(6) Notwithstanding anything in this section, a person does not commit homicide within the meaning of this Act by reason only that he causes the death of a human being by procuring, by false evidence, the conviction and death of that human being by sentence of the law. R.S., c. C-34, s. 205.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The scheme of the homicide provisions is that this section defines culpable homicide and then other provisions determine whether culpable homicide is murder, manslaughter or infanticide. The distinction is largely, although not exclusively, dependent on the intent accompanying the conduct which resulted in death. Murder is defined in ss. 229 and 230. The punishment for murder is set out in s. 235. Infanticide is defined in s. 233. The punishment for infanticide is set out in s. 237. Manslaughter is defined in ss. 232, 234 and 263. The punishment for manslaughter is set out in s. 236.

As to causation, see ss. 223(2) and 224 to 227. As to definition of "human being" see s. 233.

Criminal negligence is defined in s. 219 and criminal negligence causing death is also a separate offence under s. 220.

SYNOPSIS

This section spells out what constitutes homicide and sets out the distinction between culpable and non-culpable homicide.

Section 222(1) states that homicide is committed when a person causes the death, directly or indirectly, of another person. Homicide may be either culpable or not, and non-culpable homicide is not an offence. Subsection (6) provides a clarification by excluding from the ambit of homicide procuring the death of another by false evidence which leads to that person's conviction and the imposition of the death penalty. The only Canadian statute which retains the death penalty is the National Defence Act.

Subsection (4) exhaustively defines culpable homicide as being murder, manslaughter or infanticide. Subsection (5) deals with the ways in which culpable homicide may be committed such as by an unlawful act (s. 222(5)(a)) or by criminal negligence (s. 222(5)(b)).

ANNOTATIONS

Causation – Where an issue of causation arises the jury in deciding the question is not limited to considering the testimony of expert witnesses but may also consider the evidence of lay witnesses who witnessed the assault alleged by the Crown to have been the cause of death. Causation as a question of fact is for the jury not the experts. Further, where it is established that the assault by the accused was at least a contributing cause of death, outside the de minimis range, then causation as a matter of law has been established. The accused must take his victim as he finds him and it is no defence to a charge of manslaughter that death was unexpected and the physical reactions of the victim to the assault unforeseen or that death ordinarily would not result from the unlawful act: Smithers v. The Queen (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 427, 75 D.L.R. (3d) 321, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 506 (9:0).

The test for the time of death is whether any of the victim's vital organs including the heart continue to operate. The criminal law does not recognize brain death or cessation of brain function as the legal standard of determining when death occurs: R. v. Green (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 413 (B.C.S.C.).

Where the entire episode involving a series of unlawful acts is one continuing transaction then it is not open to the accused to rely upon the defence of honest but mistaken belief on the basis that at the time of the final act which actually resulted in the death of the victim the accused believed the victim to be already dead: R. v. Frizzell (1993), 81 C.C.C. (3d) 463, 22 C.R. (4th) 400, 47 W.A.C. 122 (B.C.C.A.).

The common law definition of causation requiring proof that the unlawful act was at least a contributing cause of death outside the de minimus range complies with the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter. When combined with the requisite fault element for manslaughter by an unlawful act, being commission of an unlawful dangerous act, in circumstances where a reasonable person would have foreseen the risk of bodily harm which is neither trivial nor transitory, there is no risk that a person who is morally innocent will be convicted for consequences that should not be attributed to him: R. v. Cribbin (1994), 89 C.C.C. (3d) 67, 28 C.R. (4th) 137, 17 O.R. (3d) 548 (C.A.).

Homicide by "unlawful act" – The mens rea of unlawful act manslaughter under subsec. (5)(a) is, in addition to the mens rea of the underlying offence, objective foreseeability of the risk of bodily harm which is neither trivial nor transitory: R. v. Creighton (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 632 (S.C.C.).

The unlawful act must also be objectively dangerous, that is, likely to injure another person: R. v. DeSousa (1992), [1992] 2 S.C.R. 944, 76 C.C.C. (3d) 124, 15 C.R. (4th) 66; R. v. Creighton, supra.

Where the defence of self-defence is made out then the act done in self-defence is not unlawful, the homicide is not culpable and the accused must be acquitted: R. v. Baker (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 368 (B.C.C.A.).

Homicide by criminal negligence – See notes under ss. 219 and 220.

WHEN CHILD BECOMES HUMAN BEING / Killing child.

223. (1) A child becomes a human being within the meaning of this Act when it has completely proceeded, in a living state, from the body of its mother whether or not

- (a) it has breathed,
- (b) it has an independent circulation, or
- (c) the navel string is severed.

(2) A person commits homicide when he causes injury to a child before or during its birth as a result of which the child dies after becoming a human being. R.S., c. C-34, s. 206.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222 and see cross-references under that section respecting murder, manslaughter and infanticide. The effect of this section is that killing of a child who has become a human being can amount to homicide or also found the offence of criminal negligence causing death under s. 220. Where the child's death is caused in the act of birth before it becomes a human being then the accused commits the offence under s. 238. Neglecting to obtain assistance in child-birth is an offence under s. 242 and concealing the body of a child an offence under s. 243. Other causation provisions are found in ss. 224 to 228.

SYNOPSIS

This section establishes the point at which a child becomes a human being for the purpose of determining if a homicide has been committed.

Section 223(1) defines that a child is a human being if it has completely proceeded from its mother in a living state, even if it has not done one of the things listed in s. 223(1)(a) to (c). Subsection (2) provides that homicide is committed if a child dies after meeting the definition of human being, in subsec. (1) even if the cause of death was injuries sustained by the child before or during its birth.

ANNOTATIONS

A person who attacks an obviously pregnant woman with intent to harm her is guilty of at least manslaughter if the foetus being subsequently born alive dies from injury or disease caused by the attack: R. v. Prince (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 510, [1989] 1 W.W.R. 80 (Man. C.A.).

DEATH THAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN PREVENTED.

224. Where a person, by an act or omission, does any thing that results in the death of a human being, he causes the death of that human being notwithstanding that death from that cause might have been prevented by resorting to proper means. R.S., c. C-34, s. 207.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222 and see cross-references under that section respecting murder, manslaughter and infanticide. Other causation provisions are found in ss. 223(2) and 225 to 228. "Human being" is defined in s. 223(1). This provision would also apply to the offences of criminal negligence causing death under s. 220, dangerous driving causing death under s. 249(4) and impaired operation causing death under s. 255(3).

SYNOPSIS

Section 224 deals with the issue of a death which might have been prevented, which arises as a question of causation in relation to homicide cases.

This section provides that a person commits homicide if that person does anything which results in the death of another person, even if proper treatment could have prevented death from that cause. The person may have caused the death by act or omission. This satisfies the first requirement of all homicides: proof that the person caused the death of another person (see s. 222(1)).

DEATH FROM TREATMENT OF INJURY.

225. Where a person causes to a human being a bodily injury that is of itself of a dangerous nature and from which death results, he causes the death of that human being notwithstanding that the immediate cause of death is proper or improper treatment that is applied in good faith. R.S., c. C-34, s. 208.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222 and see cross-references under that section respecting murder, manslaughter and infanticide. Other causation provisions are found in ss. 223(2), 224 and 226 to 228. “Human being” is defined in s. 223(1). This provision would also apply to the offences of criminal negligence causing death under s. 220, dangerous driving causing death under s. 249(4) and impaired operation causing death under s. 255(3). The term “bodily injury” is not defined in this section. Some assistance may, however, be obtained from the definition of “bodily harm” in s. 267(2).

SYNOPSIS

Section 225 deals with one aspect of the issue of causation in homicide cases, namely, the effect of the immediate cause of death being treatment applied after the accused caused a dangerous injury to the deceased. The section provides that, if the treatment was given in good faith, it is irrelevant whether it was proper or not. The key is whether the injury, caused by the accused to the deceased, was of a dangerous nature and that death resulted from it. Thus, causation will be supplied by this section so long as the act of the accused causing injury was an operative factor, even if it was only one of the causes of the death.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Kitching And Adams (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 159, [1976] 6 W.W.R. 697 (Man. C.A.) the defence raised was that the cause of death was the act of doctors who, having detected no sign of brain activity, removed the deceased’s kidneys and then disconnected the deceased from the mechanical devices which were used to keep his heart and other organs functioning. Matas, J.A., for four of the Judges, held that the jury had been adequately instructed on the effects of ss. 207 to 209 [now ss. 224 to 226]. O’Sullivan, J.A., in a concurring opinion pointed out that those sections extend liability in certain cases and do not affect the principle that it is not necessary to prove that a criminal is the sole cause of his crime and that even if it could be shown that the actions of the doctors constituted an operative cause of death, still, that would not exonerate the accused unless the evidence left a reasonable doubt that the accused’s actions also constituted an operative cause of the deceased’s death.

A similar result was reached in R. v. Malcherek; R. v. Steel (1981), 73 Cr. App. R. 173 (C.A.).

In R. v. Torbiak and Gillis (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 193 (Ont. C.A.) the Court held that there could be no doubt that the cause of death in law was a gunshot wound to the groin inflicted by one of the accused although the doctors, because of the elderly victim’s age decided to follow a conservative course of non-interventional treatment following the shooting until three weeks later the victim’s condition deteriorated and he died on the operating table.

ACCELERATION OF DEATH.

226. Where a person causes to a human being a bodily injury that results in death, he causes the death of that human being notwithstanding that the effect of the bodily injury is only to accelerate his death from a disease or disorder arising from some other cause. R.S., c. C-34, s. 209.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222 and see cross-references under that section respecting murder, manslaughter and infanticide. Other causation provisions are found in ss. 223(2), 224, 225, 227 and 228. "Human being" is defined in s. 223(1). This provision would also apply to the offences of criminal negligence causing death under s. 220, dangerous driving causing death under s. 249(4) and impaired operation causing death under s. 255(3). The term "bodily injury" is not defined in this section. Some assistance may, however, be obtained from the definition of "bodily harm" in s. 267(2).

SYNOPSIS

Section 226 deals with the legal effect of actions which accelerate the death of another person.

This section states that when a person causes bodily injury to another person which results in death, that person causes the death of the deceased, even if the only effect of the injury was to hasten the unavoidable death of that person.

DEATH WITHIN YEAR AND A DAY.

227. No person commits culpable homicide or the offence of causing the death of a person by criminal negligence or by means of the commission of an offence under subsection 249(4) or subsection 257(3) unless the death occurs within one year and one day from the time of the occurrence of the last event by means of which the person caused or contributed to the cause of death. R.S., c. C-34, s. 210; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 34.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to determination of the period of "within one year and one day" see s. 27(5) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c.s. I-21. The term "year" is defined in s. 37 of the same Act.

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222 and see cross-references under that section respecting murder, manslaughter and infanticide. Other causation provisions are found in ss. 223(2) and 224 to 226. "Human being" is defined in s. 223(1). The offence of criminal negligence causing death is found in s. 220. The reference to s. 249(4) is to dangerous driving causing death. The reference to "subsection 257(3)" is an obvious error and was intended to refer to the offence of impaired operation causing death under s. 255(3).

SYNOPSIS

Section 227 codifies the common law which sets the outer time limit between the acts of the accused and the death of the victim for the purpose of establishing criminal liability.

The rule is that the death must occur within a year and one day of the accused's acts. The section lists a number of provisions to which this rule applies, including criminal negligence, culpable homicide and dangerous driving.

---

KILLING BY INFLUENCE ON THE MIND.

228. No person commits culpable homicide where he causes the death of a human being

(a) by any influence on the mind alone, or

(b) by any disorder or disease resulting from influence on the mind alone, but this section does not apply where a person causes the death of a child or sick person by wilfully frightening him. R.S., c. C-34, s. 211.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222 and see cross-references under that section respecting murder, manslaughter and infanticide. Other causation provisions are found in ss. 223(2), 224, 225, 227 and 228. “Human being” is defined in s. 223(1). The proviso in this section respecting death caused to a child or sick person relates back to s. 222(5)(d). Similarly, it would seem that, if the conduct fell within s. 222(5)(c) it would not likely come within the term “by any influence on the mind alone” in para. (a).

SYNOPSIS

This section excludes certain acts, which can be referred to as killing by influence of the mind, from what would otherwise constitute culpable homicide.

The acts excluded are causing the death of a human being as means of influence of the mind or as a consequence of any disorder or disease resulting from such influence. However, it does not exclude such acts if the person wilfully frightens a sick person or child and thereby causes the death. This exception is a corollary of s. 222(5)(d) which makes such conduct culpable homicide.

ANNOTATIONS

This section was applied and the accused’s conviction for manslaughter quashed where the evidence indicated that the deceased died from acute heart failure precipitated by the fear and emotional stress of a break-in by the accused and an ensuing struggle. There was no evidence that either the physical exertion of the struggle or an assault during the struggle was a contributing factor to the victim’s death. The victim did have a pre-existing heart condition: R. v. Powder (1981), 29 C.R. (3d) 183 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused loc. cit.

Murder, Manslaughter and Infanticide

MURDER.

229. Culpable homicide is murder

- (a) where the person who causes the death of a human being
  - (i) means to cause his death, or
  - (ii) means to cause him bodily harm that he knows is likely to cause his death, and is reckless whether death ensues or not;
- (b) where a person, meaning to cause death to a human being or meaning to cause him bodily harm that he knows is likely to cause his death, and being reckless whether death ensues or not, by accident or mistake causes death to another human being, notwithstanding that he does not mean to cause death or bodily harm to that human being; or
- (c) where a person, for an unlawful object, does anything that he knows or ought to know is likely to cause death, and thereby causes death to a human being, notwithstanding that he desires to effect his object without causing death or bodily harm to any human being. R.S., c. C-34, s. 212.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222. Culpable homicide is also defined as murder in the circumstances set out in s. 230. Murder is classified as first or second degree murder under s. 231. The punishment for murder is, pursuant to s. 235, a minimum of life imprisonment. Eligibility for parole for a person convicted of murder is determined by ss. 742 to 747. [Respecting parole eligibility, see further cross-references under s. 235.] A person convicted of murder will also be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of

s. 100(1). As to included offences, see s. 662. For special provision respecting the plea of autrefois, see s. 610(2) to (4).

Pursuant to s. 582, no person may be convicted of first degree murder unless he is specifically charged with that offence in the indictment. Under s. 589, no count that charges an offence other than murder shall be joined in an indictment to a count that charges murder.

The offence of attempted murder is set out in s. 239, accessory after the fact to murder in s. 240 and conspiracy to commit murder in s. 465(1)(a).

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance under s. 487.01(5), and falls within the definition of "enterprise crime offence" in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 [official premises, etc.].

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) where the victim is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats. As to other defences see: s. 16, insanity; s. 25, use of force in enforcement of law; s. 27, use of force to prevent commission of certain offences; ss. 34 to 37, self defence and defence of person under accused's protection; ss. 38 to 41, defence of property; s. 44, use of force by master of vessel; s. 232, provocation. As to notes respecting the intoxication and necessity defences, see s. 8.

Trial of murder is by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence.

SYNOPSIS

This section defines culpable homicide as murder in three circumstances.

Section 229(a)(i) provides the simplest definition, namely intentionally causing the death of a human being by s. 229(a)(ii), death caused by a person, who means to cause bodily harm that he knows is likely to cause death and is reckless whether death ensues or not, is also culpable homicide. The key elements of the mental element in this offence is the intention to cause the requisite degree of bodily harm, coupled with the necessary recklessness as to its effect.

Section 229(b) deals with the situation in which an unintended victim is killed as a result of accused's acts. The requisite mental element described in s. 229(a) must be proven in this paragraph, except that it is satisfied by proof in relation to the intended victim. If the mental element as well as the fact that the accused caused the death of the unintended victim are proven, then the fact that the death of that person is caused by accident or mistake is irrelevant and the acts will still render the accused guilty of culpable homicide. The paragraph specifically states that it is culpable homicide, even if the accused did not intend to cause death or inflict any bodily harm upon the person who was killed.

Section 229(c) deals with homicides which occur while a person commits another unlawful object. If a person does anything for an unlawful object that he knows or ought to know is likely to cause death and death results from this act, it is culpable homicide. The fact that the accused wanted to carry out the purpose without any death or bodily injury to anyone is legally irrelevant for the purposes of this paragraph. The unlawful object desired by the accused must be some additional object beyond the very act which resulted in the death.

ANNOTATIONS

Proof of intent – There is no such thing as a presumption of law that a person intends the natural consequences of his acts. At most it is an inference of fact that may be drawn: R. v. Giannotti (1956), 115 C.C.C. 203, 23 C.R. 259 (Ont. C.A.).

Notwithstanding that the accused's primary defence is self-defence where there is also evidence of alcohol consumption and provocation the jury should be directed to consider the cumulative effect of that evidence in determining whether the requisite intent is made out: R. v. Desveaux (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 88, 51 C.R. (3d) 173 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Clow (1985), 44 C.R. (3d) 228 (Ont. C.A.). Similarly, R. v. Nealy (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 460, 54 C.R. (3d) 158 (Ont. C.A.), where there was evidence of alcohol consumption, provocation, anger and fear.

Where the trial judge has clearly directed the jury as to the requirement of proof of intent there is no requirement for a “residual direction” as to the effect of self-defence and provocation. The judge could, however, give such a direction having regard to the equities and needs of a particular case: R. v. Ferber (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 157 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused loc. cit. To a similar effect, see R. v. Smith (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 94 N.S.R. (2d) 361 (C.A.).

Paragraph (a)(ii) represents only a slight relaxation of the mens rea for murder and requires proof of a subjective intent to cause bodily harm and subjective knowledge that the bodily harm is of such a nature that it is likely to result in death. Further, this mens rea must be concurrent with the impugned act. However, it is not always necessary for the guilty act and the intent to be completely concurrent or that the requisite mens rea persist throughout the entire commission of the wrongful act. If death results from a series of wrongful acts that are part of a single transaction, then it must be established that the requisite intent coincided at some point with the wrongful acts: R. v. Cooper (1993), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 289, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 146, 18 C.R. (4th) 1.

In the case of a genuine suicide pact, the surviving party should have a defence to murder. This defence will only be available when the parties are in such a mental state that they have formed a common and irrevocable intent to commit suicide together simultaneously and by the same act where the risk of death is identical and equal for both: R. v. Gagnon (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 143, 24 C.R. (4th) 369, [1993] R.J.Q. 1716 (C.A.).

Intoxication defence [Also see notes under s. 8] – The rules in D.P.P. v. Beard (1920), 14 Cr. App. R. 159 (H.L.) violate ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter because they limit the defence of intoxication to the capacity of an accused to form the specific intent. Before a trial judge charges a jury on the issue of intoxication, the judge must be satisfied that the effect of the intoxication was such that its effect might have impaired the accused’s foresight of consequences sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt. Once this threshold test is met, the judge must make clear to the jury that the issue is whether the Crown has satisfied them beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused had the requisite intent. In most circumstances, a one-step charge which omits any reference to “capacity” or “capability” and focuses the jury on the question of “intent in fact” is appropriate. Consequently, the jury must consider whether the accused possessed the requisite specific intent having regard to the evidence of intoxication, along with all of the other evidence in the case. In certain cases, however, in light of the facts of the case and/or the admission of expert evidence, a two-step charge may be appropriate. In this case, the jury is charged both with regard to the capacity to form the requisite intent and with regard to the need to determine in all of the circumstances whether the requisite intent was in fact formed by the accused. In these circumstances, the jury might be instructed that their overall duty is to determine whether or not the accused possessed the requisite intent for the crime. If, on the basis of the expert evidence, the jury is left with a reasonable doubt as to whether, as a result of the consumption of the alcohol, the accused had the capacity to form the requisite intent then that ends the inquiry and the accused must be acquitted of the offence and consideration must then be given to any included lesser offences. If the jury is not left with a reasonable doubt as a result of the expert evidence as to the capacity to form the intent then they must consider and take into account all the surrounding circumstances and the evidence pertaining to those circumstances in determining whether or not the accused possessed the requisite intent for the offence. Furthermore, the presumption that a person intends the natural consequences of their act refers only to a common-sense and logical inference that the jury can but is not compelled to make. Where there is some evidence of intoxication, the trial judge must link the instructions on intoxication with the instruction on the common-sense inference so that the jury is specifically instructed that evidence of intoxication can rebut the inference: R. v. Robinson (unreported, March 21, 1996, S.C.C.) [096/085/063-70 pp.]. See also R. v. McMaster (unreported, March 21, 1996, S.C.C.) [096/085/062-26 pp.].

It is essential in a case where the Crown relies upon the intent described in para. (a)(ii) that the jury receive an explanation of the essential difference between that intent and the intent in para. (a)(i), namely, that the former requires foresight of the likely consequences of the acts which cause bodily harm combined with recklessness as to that consequence: R. v. Korzepa (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 489 (B.C.C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Young (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 305, 20 C.R. (3d) 325, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 39 (5:4), that the fact that the trial Judge related the defence of drunkenness to the accused's "capacity" to form the requisite intent did not constitute grounds for interfering with the accused's conviction for murder. Further, where the only defence relied upon was drunkenness and the accused's acts were such as, in the normal course of events, to give rise to a probability of serious injury that would likely cause death, then in the absence of any indication that the accused lacked the normal intent which accompanies such acts the inference to be drawn from the facts, absent drunkenness, was that the accused intended to cause bodily harm which he knew was likely to cause death and was reckless as to whether death ensued or not. It did not constitute fatal non-direction for the trial Judge not to direct the jury that manslaughter was an available verdict if apart from drunkenness the jury had a reasonable doubt as to the accused's intent.

A psychiatrist may give opinion evidence that an accused lacked capacity to form the intent required for murder, provided that there is a proper basis for such opinion. Thus, the psychiatrist may not express an opinion that the accused as a normal person did not have the capacity to form the required intent, based on his conclusion that the personality of the accused is such that he could not have had the intent requisite for murder in committing a crime of such brutality as was involved in the particular case. Such an opinion does not involve the application of knowledge within the expertise of the psychiatrist. On the other hand, an opinion that, for example, the accused had an organic amnesia as the result of the consumption of alcohol is within the expertise of a psychiatrist: R. v. Gowland (1978), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 303 (Ont. C.A.).

Liability of party – The accused's liability as a party to a killing cannot be determined simply by application of a principle that the accused was party to some single ongoing transaction. In the case of an accused who aids or abets in the killing of another, the requisite intent that the aider or abettor must have to warrant conviction for murder must be the same as that of the principal offender. The aider or abettor must intend that he or the perpetrator cause bodily harm of a kind likely to result in death and be reckless whether death ensues or not. If the intent of the aiding party is insufficient to support a conviction for murder, then the party may still be convicted of manslaughter if the unlawful act which was aided or abetted is one he knows is likely to cause some harm short of death: R. v. Kirkness (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 1 C.R. (4th) 91, 116 N.R. 81 (S.C.C.) (5:2).

Transferred intent [para. (b)] – Even where the provisions of this paragraph apply the Crown must prove a concurrence of mens rea and actus reus; that at the time of the act, which killed the deceased, the accused had the specified intent with respect to the proposed victim: R. v. Droste (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 52, 18 C.R. (3d) 64 (Ont. C.A.).

An accused's intention to kill himself is sufficient to trigger the operation of this paragraph. Thus, an accused, who while attempting to kill himself accidentally kills another, may be convicted of murder: R. v. Brown (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 571 (Ont. H.C.J.).

Homicide in course of effecting unlawful purpose [para. (c)] – Liability for murder cannot be based on any mens rea less than subjective foresight of death and, accordingly, that part of para. (c) allowing for a conviction upon proof that the accused ought to have known that death was likely to result is unconstitutional: R. v. Martineau (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 79 C.R. (3d) 129, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 633 (5:2).

MURDER IN COMMISSION OF OFFENCES.

230. Culpable homicide is murder where a person causes the death of a human being while committing or attempting to commit high treason or treason or an offence mentioned in section 52 (sabotage), 75 (piratical acts), 76 (hijacking an aircraft), 144 or subsection 145(1) or sections 146 to 148 (escape or rescue from prison or lawful custody), section 270 (assaulting a peace officer), section 271 (sexual assault), 272 (sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm), 273 (aggravated sexual assault), 279 (kidnapping and forcible confinement), 279.1 (hostage taking), 343 (robbery), 348 (breaking and entering) or 433 or 434 (arson), whether or not the person means to cause death to any human being and whether or not he knows that death is likely to be caused to any human being, if

- (a) he means to cause bodily harm for the purpose of
  - (i) facilitating the commission of the offence, or
  - (ii) facilitating his flight after committing or attempting to commit the offence, and the death ensues from the bodily harm;
- (b) he administers a stupefying or overpowering thing for a purpose mentioned in paragraph (a), and the death ensues therefrom; or
- (c) he wilfully stops, by any means, the breath of a human being for a purpose mentioned in paragraph (a), and the death ensues therefrom; R.S., c. C-34, s. 213; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 13, c. 105, s. 29; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 15; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 40(2); 1991, c. 4, s. 1.
- (d) [Repealed. 1991, c. 4, s. 1.]

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional considerations – In two cases, R. v. Vaillancourt (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 118, 47 D.L.R. (4th) 399, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 636, 60 C.R. (3d) 289, 68 Nfld. & P.E.I.R., 81 N.R. 115, 32 C.R.R. 18, and R. v. Martineau (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 353, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 633, 79 C.R. (3d) 129, the Supreme Court has considered the constitutionality of the provisions of this section. In the latter case, a majority of the court held that liability for murder cannot be based on any mens rea less than subjective foresight of death and that, accordingly, all of this section is unconstitutional.

In the subsequent case of R. v. Siu (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.) the court confirmed the scope of its earlier decisions and, in particular, held that para. (c) is of no force and effect.

CLASSIFICATION OF MURDER / Planned and deliberate murder / Contracted murder / Murder of peace officer, etc. / Hijacking, sexual assault or kidnapping / Second degree murder.

231. (1) Murder is first degree murder or second degree murder.

(2) Murder is first degree murder when it is planned and deliberate.

(3) Without limiting the generality of subsection (2), murder is planned and deliberate when it is committed pursuant to an arrangement under which money or anything of value passes or is intended to pass from one person to another, or is promised by one person to another, as consideration for that other's causing or assisting in causing the death of anyone or counselling another person to do any act causing or assisting in causing that death.

(4) Irrespective of whether a murder is planned and deliberate on the part of any person, murder is first degree murder when the victim is

- (a) a police officer, police constable, constable, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace, acting in the course of his duties;

- (b) a warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, jailer, guard or other officer or a permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties; or
- (c) a person working in a prison with the permission of the prison authorities and acting in the course of his work therein.

(5) Irrespective of whether a murder is planned and deliberate on the part of any person, murder is first degree murder in respect of a person when the death is caused by that person while committing or attempting to commit an offence under one of the following sections:

- (a) section 76 (hijacking an aircraft);
- (b) section 271 (sexual assault);
- (c) section 272 (sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm);
- (d) section 273 (aggravated sexual assault);
- (e) section 279 (kidnapping and forcible confinement); or
- (f) section 279.1 (hostage taking).

(6) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 35.]

(7) All murder that is not first degree murder is second degree murder. R.S., c. C-34, s. 214; R.S. c. C-35, s. 4; 1973-74, c. 38, s. 2; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 4; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 16; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), ss. 7(2)(b), 35, 40(2).

CROSS-REFERENCES

Note that s. 3 provides that the descriptions in parenthesis after the section number are inserted for convenience of reference only and are no part of the provision.

Murder is defined in ss. 229 and 230. The term "prison" is defined in s. 2. The punishment for murder is, pursuant to s. 235, a minimum of life imprisonment. Eligibility for parole for a person convicted of murder is determined by ss. 742 to 747. [Respecting parole eligibility, see further cross-references under s. 235.] However, note that under s. 742(a.1), a person convicted of second degree murder must be sentenced to life imprisonment without eligibility for parole for 25 years where he has previously been convicted of murder, however described. A person convicted of murder will also be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1). As to included offences, see s. 662. With respect to other notes concerning procedure and evidence, see CROSS-REFERENCES under ss. 229 and 230.

SYNOPSIS

This section classifies convictions for murder into first and second degree murder for the purpose of setting a parole eligibility date.

The effect of subsecs. (1) and (7) is that a murder which does not come within subsections (2) to (5) is second degree murder.

Subsection (2) states that murder is first degree murder when it is planned and deliberate. Subsection (3) deems conduct described in the subsection, which may be generally referred to as contract killings, to be planned and deliberate, and therefore, by definition, first degree murder.

The following two subsections deem murders of specified victims (subsec. (4)) or while committing or attempting to commit specified offences (subsec. (5)) to be first degree murder. Under subsec. (5), only the principal to the offence is guilty of first degree murder. The phrase "while committing" only requires proof that the underlying offence and the death were part of the same transaction, not that they occurred at the same moment.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (2) [Planning and Deliberation] / Meaning of planning and deliberation –

This subsection brings back the concept of “planned and deliberate” which was formerly part of the definition of capital murder. Some of the following cases were decided under the former capital murder sections.

The word “deliberate” means “considered, not impulsive” and as used in the subsection cannot have simply the meaning “intentional” because it is only if the accused’s act was intentional that he can be guilty of murder. The subsection is creating an additional element. Psychiatric evidence that at the critical moment the accused was suffering from a depressive psychosis resulting in impairment of his ability to decide even inconsequential things would have a direct bearing on the issue of whether the act was deliberate and the trial Judge’s failure to adequately deal with this evidence in his charge to the jury necessitated a new trial: R. v. More, [1963] 3 C.C.C. 289, 41 C.R. 98 (5:2) (S.C.C.).

In R. v. Mitchell, [1965] 1 C.C.C. 155, 43 C.R. 391 (S.C.C.) the Court was unanimous (7:0) on the manner in which a trial Judge should instruct a jury to determine whether a murder, which they have found to have been committed by the accused, was “planned and deliberate”. After referring to R. v. More, supra, and R. v. McMartin, [1965] 1 C.C.C. 142, [1964] S.C.R. 484, 43 C.R. 403, Spence, J., wrote at p. 162 C.C.C., p. 393 C.R.:

I am of the opinion that the judgments in these two cases have as their ratio decidendi the principle that in determining whether the accused committed the crime of capital murder in that it was “planned and deliberate on the part of such person” the jury should have available and should be directed to consider all the circumstances including not only the evidence of the accused’s actions but of his condition, his state of mind as affected by either real or imagined insults and provoking actions of the victim and by the accused’s consumption of alcohol.

- (a) the elements of planning and deliberation are separate and must both be found for capital murder;
- (b) the jury must first be instructed as to intent, which includes the question of drunkenness under the doctrine in D.P.P. v. Beard, [1920] A.C. 479, to commit murder and the ameliorating provision as to provocation reducing it to manslaughter and told that if they conclude on canvassing those two issues that murder was committed then they must next determine whether it was planned and deliberate;
- (c) it would be better for the trial Judge in dealing with the element of deliberation to avoid further use of the word “provocation” because the jury might feel obliged to decide the question of an insult and the accused’s state of mind as they affect deliberation within the more confined limits of his previous instruction on provocation; and
- (d) the jury should also be instructed to consider the conduct of the victim towards the accused with any evidence that his passions had been inflamed by alcohol, and also drunkenness falling short of incapacity to form the intent to kill, as having a bearing on the element of deliberation.

In R. v. Widdifield (1961), 6 Crim. L.Q. 152 (Ont. H.C.J.), Gale, J., charged the jury in part as follows:

I think that in the Code “planned” is to be assigned, I think, its natural meaning of a calculated scheme or design which has been carefully thought out, and the nature and consequences of which have been considered and weighed. But that does not mean, of course, to say that the plan need be a complicated one. It may be a very simple one, and the simpler it is perhaps the easier it is to formulate.

The important element, it seems to me, so far as time is concerned, is the time involved in developing the plan, not the time between the development of the plan and the doing of the act. One can carefully prepare a plan and immediately it is prepared set out to do the planned act, or, alternatively, you can wait an appreciable time to do it once it has been formed.

As far as the word "deliberate" is concerned, I think that the Code means that it should also carry its natural meaning of "considered," "not impulsive," "slow in deciding," "cautious," implying that the accused must take time to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of his intended action. That is what, as it seems to me, "deliberate" means.

The direction in R. v. Widdifield, supra, as to the definition of "planned" was approved in R. v. Reynolds (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 22 O.R. (2d) 353 (C.A.).

Planning in this context requires evidence that the killing was the result of a scheme or design previously formulated. A murder committed on a sudden impulse and without prior consideration would not meet this test: R. v. Smith (1979), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 381, 1 Sask. R. 213 (C.A.).

The deliberation required under this subsection must occur before the act of murder commences: R. v. Ruptash (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 182 (Alta. C.A.).

Intoxication – In R. v. Reynolds (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 129, 22 O.R. (2d) 353 (C.A.) it was held that evidence of intoxication was not limited to the question of the accused's ability to plan and deliberate and that it would be open to the jury to find that the accused acted impulsively without deliberation due to the consumption of alcohol and other circumstances even though he was able to plan and deliberate.

In R. v. Wallen (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 383, 75 C.R. (3d) 328, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 827 (3:2) all members of the court agreed that the trial judge must direct the jury to consider the issue of intoxication as it applies to planning and deliberation separately from the issue of intoxication as a defence to murder. However, the court divided on whether it is mandatory in all cases for the trial judge to make it clear that a lesser degree of intoxication may suffice to negative planning and deliberation than to negative the intent to kill. In any event, all members of the court agreed that such a direction will be helpful to the jury.

Mental disorder – The existence of a mental disorder is not incompatible with the commission of a planned and deliberate murder. In particular, the word "deliberate" has not imported a requirement that the accused's previous determination to kill the victim must have been the result of normal thinking or must have been rationally motivated: R. v. Kirkby (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 31, 47 C.R. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.).

Liability of party – An accused sought to be made liable for first degree murder as an aider or abettor must be shown to have intended to aid a planned and deliberate murder: R. v. Peters and Eldridge (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 171 (B.C.C.A.).

Application to murder defined in ss. 229 and 230 – This section does not create a separate substantive offence of first degree murder, but rather constitutes a characterization, for sentencing purposes, of the substantive offence of murder in ss. 229 and 230. A murder is first degree murder within the meaning of this subsection if there is planning and deliberation in relation to the specific mens rea of the applicable section, which in the case of a murder described by s. 229(b) is the intent to cause the death to one person although by accident or mistake, another is killed. While there may be certain mental states specified in ss. 229 and 230 which are incompatible with planning and deliberation, the mens rea of s. 229(b) is not one of them: R. v. Droste (1984), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 404, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 208, 39 C.R. (3d) 26 (7:0).

However, the mental state described in s. 229(a)(ii) is not incompatible with planning and deliberation. There can be no doubt that a person can plan and deliberate to cause terrible bodily harm that he knows is likely to result in death. Nothing is added to the aspect of planning and deliberation by the requirement under s. 229(a)(ii) that the fatal assault be carried out in a reckless manner: R. v. Nygaard and Schimmens (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 72 C.R. (3d) 257, [1990] 1 W.W.R. 1 (S.C.C.).

Subsec. (4) [Murder of police officer, etc.] / *Mens rea – In a case decided under the former s. 202A(2) it was held that knowledge by the accused that the person killed was a police officer or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of public peace is requisite for a conviction under that section: R. v. Shand (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 8, [1971] 3 W.W.R. 573 (Man. C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Collins (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 343, 69 C.R. (3d) 235 (Ont. C.A.), that for the offence to constitute first degree murder pursuant to this subsection, the Crown must prove that the deceased was a person who falls within the designation of the occupations set forth in that subsection acting in the course of his duties to the knowledge of the accused or with recklessness on his part as to whether or not the deceased was such a person so acting.

“Acting in the course of his duties” – Evidence that the victim was a member of a police detachment and performing regular police duties, was assigned to a police cruiser and was in uniform when his body was discovered and that he made a radio transmission shortly before his death was, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, sufficient to discharge the evidentiary burden on the Crown to prove that the deceased was acting in the course of his duties, notwithstanding the lack of any evidence as to exactly what the officer was doing at the time of his death: R. v. Fitzgerald and Schoenberger (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 87, 37 O.R. (2d) 750 (C.A.).

The term “acting in the course of his duty” while wider than the phrase “engaged in the execution of his duty” will generally encompass the whole time-span of a police officer’s tour of duty and would include any activity related to the performance of a duty or to the ability of the officer to perform his duty, including for example having lunch or receiving medical attention during a tour of duty: R. v. Prevost (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 314, 64 C.R. (3d) 188 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused January 19, 1989.

Constitutional considerations – The classification of murder of a police officer as first degree murder thus mandating a life sentence without eligibility for parole for 25 years does not offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, ss. 7, 9, 12 and 15: R. v. Bowen (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 515, 2 C.R. (4th) 225, [1991] 1 W.W.R. 466, 76 Alta. L.R. (2d) 264 (C.A.); R. v. Lefebvre (1989), 71 C.R. (3d) 213 (Que. C.A.).

Subsec. (5) / Unlawful confinement – Notwithstanding the unlawful confinement is ancillary to some other purpose such as robbery it may still constitute a basis for a finding of first degree murder: R. v. Dollan and Newstead (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 240, 25 C.R. (3d) 308 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Gourgon (1979), 19 C.R. (3d) 272 (B.C.C.A.).

There is no basis for directing the jury that the unlawful confinement had ceased and thus that this subsection did not apply where the accused, having held the deceased and her relatives at gunpoint for a substantial period of time, shot his wife a short time after she indicated that she intended to leave: R. v. Francella (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 96n, 41 O.A.C. 268, 114 N.R. 152 (S.C.C.) (5:0), affg 46 C.C.C. (3d) 93 (Ont. C.A.).

The transitory restraint which is implicit in the violence or threatened violence of any robbery attempt is not sufficient to trigger this subsection on the basis that there has been an unlawful confinement: R. v. Strong (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 516, 2 C.R. (4th) 239, 111 A.R. 12 (C.A.). Where, however, during the course of a robbery, the victims are deprived of mobility and placed in an unnatural and helpless position so as to be subject to the will of their captors, such confinement may go beyond that necessarily involved in robbery and amount to an unlawful confinement: R. v. Peer (1995), 100 C.C.C. (3d) 251, 104 W.A.C. 161 (B.C.C.A.).

This subsection applies although the victim of the murder is not the person unlawfully confined: R. v. Green (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 137 (Alta. C.A.).

This section is subservient to s. 229; it classifies for sentencing purposes the offences in that section as either first or second degree murder. Thus, an accused charged with second degree murder may be convicted of that offence even though the facts would support a conviction of first degree murder, as where death ensues as a result of the use of a weapon in the course of an unlawful confinement: R. v. Farrant (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 354, 32 C.R. (3d) 289, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 124 (5:2).

Liability of party – The words “when the death is caused by that person” limit the application of this subsection and a person could not be convicted of first degree murder under this subsection when his liability for murder depended solely on the combined operation of ss. 21(2) and 230. The Court noted that those words had been omitted from the French version of the Criminal Code but adopted the approach that the provision being a penal one the accused was entitled to rely on the interpretation which was most favourable to him, in this case the English version of s. 231(5): R. v. Woods and Gruener (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 220, 19 C.R. (3d) 136 (Ont. C.A.).

The phrase, “when death is caused by that person” is broad enough to include a person who assists in the murder where that person is a substantial cause of the death. The Crown must establish that the accused has committed an act or series of acts which are of such a nature that they must be regarded as a substantial and integral cause of the death. The accused must play a very active, usually physical, role in the killing. In addition, the Crown must show that there was no intervening act of another which resulted in the accused no longer being substantially connected to the death of the victim and that the underlying offence and the murder were a part of the same transaction: R. v. Harbottle, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 306, 84 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 24 C.R. (4th) 137.

“while committing” – There need not be an exact coincidence between the act causing death and the acts constituting the underlying offence. It is sufficient if they form part of one continuous sequence of events forming a single transaction: R. v. Pare (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 60 C.R. (3d) 346, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 618 (7:0).

It was not necessary for the Crown to prove the exact time of death and that the sexual assault occurred prior to death provided it was shown that the sexual assault and the death were part of a continuous sequence of events: R. v. Ganton (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 259, 105 Sask. R. 126 (C.A.).

This subsection does not apply where the murder was committed after the completion of the underlying offence even if to facilitate flight after commission of that offence: R. v. Sargent (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 429, 22 Sask. R. 230 (C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – The combined effect of subsec. (5) and s. 742(a), requiring that a person, convicted of first degree murder where the murder is committed while committing one of the offences specified in subsec. (5), must be sentenced to life imprisonment without eligibility for parole for 25 years, does not infringe ss. 7, 9 and 12 of the Charter: R. v. Luxton (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 449, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 711, 79 C.R. (3d) 193, (7:0); R. v. Arkell (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 79 C.R. (3d) 207, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 695 (7:0).

MURDER REDUCED TO MANSLAUGHTER / What is provocation / Questions of fact / Death during illegal arrest.

232. (1) Culpable homicide that otherwise would be murder may be reduced to manslaughter if the person who committed it did so in the heat of passion caused by sudden provocation.

(2) A wrongful act or an insult that is of such a nature as to be sufficient to deprive an ordinary person of the power of self-control is provocation for the purposes of this section if the accused acted on it on the sudden and before there was time for his passion to cool.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the questions

- (a) whether a particular wrongful act or insult amounted to provocation, and
- (b) whether the accused was deprived of the power of self-control by the provocation that he alleges he received, are questions of fact, but no one shall be deemed to have given provocation to another by doing anything that he had a legal right to do, or by doing anything that the accused incited him to do in order to provide the accused with an excuse for causing death or bodily harm to any human being.

(4) Culpable homicide that otherwise would be murder is not necessarily manslaughter by reason only that it was committed by a person who was being arrested illegally, but the fact that the illegality of the arrest was known to the accused may be evidence of provocation for the purpose of this section. R.S., c. C-34, s. 215.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Culpable homicide is defined in s. 222. Murder is defined by ss. 229 and 230. The punishment for manslaughter is set out in s. 236. It is not unusual for the excuse of provocation to be raised in circumstances where the accused also relies on the defence of intoxication [thus see notes under ss. 8 and 229]; use of force to prevent commission of certain offences [thus see s. 27]; self defence and defence of property [thus see ss. 34 to 42].

A person convicted of manslaughter may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

Section 232 sets out some of the circumstances under which murder will be reduced to manslaughter.

The first three subsections spell out the defence of provocation. Before subsec. (1) becomes relevant, it must be shown that the culpable homicide would otherwise have been murder. Despite the use of the word “may” in the section, murder will be reduced to manslaughter if the murder was committed as a result of provocation. Provocation occurs if the person who committed the act did so in the heat of passion caused by sudden provocation.

Subsection (2) requires the examination of a mix of subjective and objective factors when determining if a wrongful act or insult constituted provocation. The objective aspect of the test is whether the wrongful act or insult is of such a nature as to be sufficient to deprive an ordinary man of self control. Even in this aspect of the test, there appears to be some element of subjectivity as the ordinary person may include some of the general characteristics of the accused such as sex, race or age. The subjective aspect of the test is that the accused did act on the provocation and did so before there was time for his passion to cool. In this second part of the test, the background, temperament, idiosyncrasies or drunkenness of the accused may be considered. The requirement of suddenness must apply both to the provocation and to the accused’s reaction to it.

Subsection (3) states that the issues of whether a particular wrongful act or insult amounted to provocation and whether the accused was deprived of his self-control as a result of the provocation are questions of fact. This means that the jury will ultimately determine these issues, although the judge will first consider, as a question of law, whether there is any evidence which could amount to provocation. The subsection makes it clear that if a person does anything which he has a legal right to do or which he does as a result of incitement by the accused to do for the purpose of providing the accused with an excuse to cause the person death or bodily harm, this does not amount to provocation. One example of a person who has a legal right to do something which might otherwise constitute provocation is a person who is justified in using force against the accused in self-defence.

Subsection (4) deals with the effect of an illegal arrest as it relates to provocation in this section. The fact that a person was arrested illegally does not necessarily reduce what would otherwise be murder to manslaughter. It also provides that an unlawful arrest of a person may constitute provocation if that person was aware of the illegality of the arrest.

ANNOTATIONS

Sufficiency of evidence to raise defence – In R. v. Parnerkar (1973), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 253, 21 C.R.N.S.129 (S.C.C.), the Court affirmed (7:2) a Sask. C.A. order (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 11, 16 C.R.N.S. 347, allowing an appeal by the Crown against a verdict of guilty of the reduced charge of manslaughter and directing a new trial upon the original charge of non-capital murder. Fauteux, C.J.C. (Abbott, Martland, Judson and Pigeon, JJ., concurring), was of the view that under this section it is not the duty of the trial Judge just to determine only whether there is any evidence of wrongful act or insult, but rather he is to determine whether there is any evidence potentially enabling a reasonable jury to find a wrongful act or insult upon which the defence of provocation could be founded. In the second majority judgment Ritchie, J. (Spence, J., concurring), was of the opinion that the trial Judge needs only to determine whether there was any evidence of a wrongful act or insult and that the accused acted upon the sudden as a result of it, but held that in this case there was no such evidence. Laskin, J., dissenting, agreed with the principle expressed by Ritchie, J., but was of the opinion that there was evidence capable of being found to be a wrongful act or insult. Hall, J., agreed with Laskin, J., on the merits of the appeal and expressed the opinion that the trial Judge is only to determine if there is evidence of wrongful act or insult and the question as to whether or not the accused acted upon the sudden is purely a matter of fact.

In R. v. Squire (1976), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 497, 69 D.L.R. (3d) 312 (S.C.C.), the accused's counsel at trial for non-capital murder relied only on the defence of drunkenness. On appeal against the conviction the defence of provocation was successfully raised. On further appeal by the Crown it was held (9:0) that a trial Judge is under no duty to invite a jury to consider defences of which there is no evidence or which cannot reasonably be inferred from the evidence and where, as here, it can be said that no jury acting judicially on the evidence at trial could find a wrongful act or insult sufficient to deprive an ordinary person or self-control the trial Judge was not in error in not charging the jury on the defence of provocation.

An accused, who at the time of the offence had and kept the initiative in a situation where the acts of the deceased, whether they were insults or physical acts, were predictable, cannot avail himself of the defence of "sudden" provocation within the meaning of this section: R. v. Louison (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 266, [1975] 6 W.W.R. 289 (Sask. C.A.), affd 51 C.C.C. (2d) 479n, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 100 (9:0).

The words of the victim terminating her relationship with the accused cannot amount to a wrongful act or insult within this section: R. v. Young (1993), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 538, 117 N.S.R. (2d) 166 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 81 C.C.C. (3d) vi.

Nature of objective test of "ordinary person" – Provocation under this section is subject to a dual test. One must first consider the effect on an ordinary person of the particular wrongful act or insult relied on. This constitutes an objective test. If this first test is satisfied then the subjective test is to determine whether the accused acted actually upon the provocation, on the sudden and before there was time for his passion to cool. While the character, background, temperament, idiosyncracies, or the drunkenness of the accused are matters to be considered in the second test they are excluded from consideration in the first test: R. v. Wright, [1969] 3 C.C.C. 258, [1969] S.C.R. 335 (5:0); R. v. Taylor (1947), 89 C.C.C. 209, [1947] S.C.R. 462; R. v. Olbey (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 257, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1008, 14 C.R. (3d) 44 (6:1).

In relation to the objective element of the test, it is proper to consider the background of the relationship between the deceased and accused, including earlier insults which culminated in the final provocative actions or words. The "ordinary person" must be of the same age and sex, and share with the accused such other factors as would give the act or insult in question a special significance, and must have experienced the same series of acts or insults as those experienced by the accused. The defence may be available even if the insults might induce a desire for revenge so long as immediately before the last insult, the accused did not intend to kill: R. v. Thibert (1996), 104 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1996] 3 W.W.R. 1, 131 D.L.R. (4th) 675 (S.C.C.) (3:2)

The “ordinary person” test merely requires consideration of whether the ordinary person would have lost the power of self-control not whether the ordinary person would have done what the accused did: R. v. Carpenter (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 14 O.R. (3d) 641 (C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Hill (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 322, 51 C.R. (3d) 97, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 313 (6:3) that the ordinary or reasonable person under the objective test has a normal temperament and level of self-control and is not exceptionally excitable, pugnacious or in a state of drunkenness. Further, particular characteristics that are not peculiar or idiosyncratic can be ascribed to an ordinary person without subverting the logic of the objective test. However, the jury need not be instructed that the ordinary person is, for example, someone of the same age, sex or race as the accused, since the jury will naturally as a matter of good sense ascribe to the ordinary person any general characteristics relevant to the provocation in question. For example, if the provocation is a racial slur, the jury will think of an ordinary person with the racial background that forms the substance of the insult. Features such as sex, age or race do not detract from a person’s characterization as ordinary.

Admissibility of expert evidence – At trial for non-capital murder where the defence was provocation the defence psychiatrist on cross-examination agreed that a normal person without the accused’s background would not have been provoked by the deceased’s insult. The accused’s appeal on the question of the admissibility of this evidence was dismissed (2:1:2) with the minority being of the view that the trier of the facts may not rely on the opinion of an expert witness in coming to a conclusion in an objective test; the majority were of the opinion that the deceased’s words were not capable of being construed by an ordinary person as an insult of sufficient nature to deprive him of self-control and accordingly took the position that while it was unnecessary to determine the admissibility question, even if that opinion evidence was improper they would apply s. 613(1)(b)(iii) [now s. 686(1)(b)(iii)]; and the fifth member of the Court, agreeing that in the context of the circumstances the words did not afford evidence of an insult of a nature sufficient to deprive an ordinary person of the power of self-control, took the position that the Crown was entitled to cross-examine the defence psychiatrist as to his standard of comparison with reference to that set out in the first part of subsec. (2) in order to test his credibility, but any further opinion evidence elicited from the psychiatrist would be superfluous: R. v. Clark (1974), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 1, [1975] 2 W.W.R. 385 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.).

Charge to jury [Also see notes on “nature of objective test” above] – It had been held in a series of cases, R. v. Daniels (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 542, 47 A.R. 149, [1983] N.W.T.R. 193 (C.A.); R. v. Conway (1985), 17 C.C.C. (3d) 481 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Desveaux (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 88, 51 C.R. (3d) 173 (Ont. C.A.), that the jury must consider in relation to the objective test the same external pressures of insult by acts or words as were on the accused. Thus, the application of the objective test is not limited to the events which immediately triggered the attack by the accused, but also includes all of the events which put pressure on the accused and may have coloured and given meaning to the final triggering act or insult. These cases were decided prior to R. v. Hill, supra, but were not explicitly overruled. However, to the extent that these decisions like R. v. Hill, in the Ontario Court of Appeal (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 394, 32 C.R. (3d) 88, reflect a mandatory requirement as to the component of the trial judge’s charge, they should be read with care bearing in mind the admonishment from the Supreme Court majority in R. v. Hill that although a direction as to the particular relevant attributes of the “ordinary person” may be helpful in clarifying the application of the ordinary person standard it is neither wise nor necessary to make this a mandatory component of all jury charges on provocation and that whenever possible the court “should retain simplicity in charges to the jury and have confidence that the words of the Criminal Code will provide sufficient guidance to the jury". Again, it must be pointed out that the court was there only specifically considering the necessity of a mandatory direction concerning the age and sex of the "ordinary person".

The word "wrongful" only modifies "act" and not insult since an insult is always wrongful. However a reference to a "wrongful insult" while an error in English usage is not an error of law: R. v. Murdock (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 97, [1978] 3 W.W.R. 313 (Man. C.A.).

It is misdirection to tell the jury that provocation operates to negate the intent for murder. Provocation may reduce murder to manslaughter even if the accused had the intention to kill: R. v. Oickle (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 180, 61 N.S.R. (2d) 239 (S.C. App. Div.).

Although subsec. (1) uses the word "may" the jury does not have a discretion to return a verdict of manslaughter where provocation is made out. Accordingly, it should be made clear to the jury that if they find there is provocation or if they have a reasonable doubt in that regard then the only verdict for what otherwise might be murder is manslaughter: R. v. Leblanc (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 126 (Ont. C.A.).

Mistake of fact and transferred intent – If an accused, acting under such provocation as would reduce murder to manslaughter, shoots at one person with the intention of killing him, but accidentally kills a third person, the intention extenuated by provocation is transferred from the intended victim to the actual victim and the accused is guilty of manslaughter: R. v. Droste (No. 2) (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 418, 34 O.R. (2d) 588 (C.A.), affd on other grounds 10 C.C.C. (3d) 404, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 208, 39 C.R. (3d) 26 (7:0).

Similarly, mistake of fact is relevant to the objective test, if any ordinary person would also have misinterpreted the facts which confronted the accused: R. v. Hansford (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 74, 55 C.R. (3d) 347, 75 A.R. 86 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 79 A.R. 239.

Application to attempted murder – Provocation is not a defence to a charge of attempted murder so as to reduce the offence to one of attempted manslaughter. However, there may be cases where the conduct of the victim amounting to provocation produced in the accused a state of excitement, anger or disturbance as a result of which he might not contemplate the consequences of his acts and might not, in fact, intend to bring about those consequences: R. v. Campbell (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 6, 17 O.R. (2d) 673 (C.A.).

Self-induced provocation [Subsec. (3)] – The phrase "legal right" in subsec. (3) means a right which is sanctioned by law as distinct from something which a person may do without incurring legal liability. The defence of provocation is open to someone who is "insulted", and the words or act put forward as provocation need not be words or acts which are specifically prohibited by the law: R. v. Thibert, supra.

In considering whether a deceased was within his legal rights his action cannot be considered in isolation and in cases of "self-induced" provocation it is only where the actions by the deceased go to extreme lengths in the circumstances that such actions can form the basis of the defence of provocation. Where the only possible interpretation of the events was that the provocative act was self-induced in circumstances in which the deceased had the legal right to use as much force as necessary to attempt to effect his escape or protect his life, then subsec. (3)(b) applied: R. v. Louison (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 266, [1975] 6 W.W.R. 289 (Sask. C.A.), affd 51 C.C.C. (2d) 479n, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 100 (9:0).

Constitutional considerations – The fact that provocation operates as a defence only where the act or insult relied upon as provocation meets a threshold test that an ordinary person would have been deprived of self-control does not infringe the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter. This section does not impose liability where subjective fault does not exist but reduces the liability even when that fault does exist: R. v. Cameron (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 275, 7 O.R. (3d) 545 (C.A.).

INFANTICIDE.

233. A female person commits infanticide when by a wilful act or omission she causes the death of her newly-born child, if at the time of the act or omission she is not fully recovered from the effects of giving birth to the child and by reason thereof or of the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child her mind is then disturbed. R.S., c. C-34, s. 216.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “newly-born child” is defined in s. 2. When a child becomes a human being is defined by s. 223(1). The punishment for infanticide is set out in s. 237. Related offences are as follows: s. 238, killing unborn child in act of birth; s. 242, neglect to obtain assistance in child-birth; s. 243, concealing body of child; s. 215, failing to provide necessities; s. 218, abandoning child. Under s. 223(2) a person commits homicide when she causes injury to a child before or during its birth as a result of which the child dies after becoming a human being. As to other provisions respecting causation, see ss. 224 to 226.

As to included offences, see s. 662(4) which makes the offence under s. 243 an included offence. Reference should also be made to s. 663 which provides for conviction of infanticide although some of the elements of this offence are not made out.

For special provision respecting the plea of autrefois, see s. 610(2) and (4).

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4).

SYNOPSIS

Section 233 defines what constitutes infanticide. It is one of four offences in Part VIII of the Criminal Code which deal with infants as victims of offences (also see ss. 238, 242 and 243).

The principal in this offence is the mother of a newly-born child. The actus reus occurs when the new mother, by wilful act or omission, causes the death of the newly-born child. The offence must occur at a time when the woman has not fully recovered from the effects of giving birth and, as a result of either those effects or lactation following the birth, her mind is disturbed. The child must have been born alive for this section to apply. Unlike murder and manslaughter (the other forms of culpable homicide), infanticide does not have either a minimum or maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Smith (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 224 (Nfld. Dist.Ct.) Cummings, D.C.J., set out the elements of infanticide as follows at pp. 227-8:

For the Crown to prove the offence of infanticide as defined by s. 216 [now s. 233] of the Code, it must establish beyond a reasonable doubt: (a) the accused is a female; (b) the child was born alive (s. 206 [now s. 223] of the Code); (c) the accused caused the death of her child; (d) the death of the child was caused by a wilful act or omission of the accused; (e) the child was newly born; (f) at the time of the act or omission the accused must not have fully recovered from the effects of giving birth to the child; and (g) by reason of giving birth to the child or of the effect of lactation consequent on the birth of the child her mind was then disturbed.

If elements (f) and (g) are not made out then s. 663 comes into play to prevent a female, who was of sound mind when she caused the death of her child by a wilful act, from going free. “Wilful” in this section requires proof that the accused acted with a bad motive or purpose or with an evil intent.

MANSLAUGHTER.

234. Culpable homicide that is not murder or infanticide is manslaughter. R.S., c. C-34, s. 217.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Murder is defined in ss. 229 and 230. Infanticide is defined in s. 233. As to included offences, see s. 662. As to special provisions respecting the plea of autrefois, see s. 610(2) to (4). The punishment for manslaughter is set out in s. 236.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that all culpable homicide which is not murder (s. 229 or 230) or infanticide (s. 233) is manslaughter. Thus, manslaughter is defined both by specific provisions which reduce murder to manslaughter (see s. 232) and by declaring the residual category of acts amounting to culpable homicide to be manslaughter. Drunkenness, which is defined by common law principles and is not dealt with in the Criminal Code, also reduces murder to manslaughter. The mental element varies depending on what principle operates to reduce a culpable homicide to manslaughter. Thus, the intention ranges from the intention to do an unlawful act (s. 222(5)(a)) to the intention to kill which is mitigated by the presence of provocation (s. 232).

ANNOTATIONS

Intent – Once the jury has found that the homicide was culpable it must decide the accused's intent, and if at that stage there is a reasonable doubt that he intended to commit murder they should then consider the offence of manslaughter: R. v. Kuzmack (1955), 111 C.C.C. 1, 20 C.R. 377 (S.C.C.) (8:1).

Unlike the crime of murder which requires proof of a special intent to commit that offence, manslaughter only requires a general intent which, upon proof that the accused did the prohibited act, becomes a presumption which evidence of intoxication falling short of insanity in itself cannot rebut: R. v. Mack (1975), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 29 C.R.N.S. 270 (Alta.S.C.App.Div.) (5:0).

Where there is evidence of mental illness or disorder at the time of the murder it would be prudent for the Judge to instruct the jury that it would be open for them to find that although the accused was not at the time insane, he did not have the mental capacity to form the specific intent to commit murder, but had the general intent to warrant a conviction for manslaughter: R. v. Baltzer (1974), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 118, 10 N.S.R. (2d) 561 (S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Hilton (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 206 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Browning (1976) 34 C.C.C. (2d) 200 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Lechasseur (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 319, 1 C.R. (3d) 190 (Que. C.A.).

Unlawful act manslaughter – The mens rea of unlawful act manslaughter under subsec. (5)(a) is, in addition to the mens rea of the underlying offence, objective foreseeability of the risk of bodily harm which is neither trivial nor transitory. In applying this objective test personal characteristics not directly relevant to an element of the offence such as experience, education and psychological defences serve as a defence only when there is an incapacity to appreciate the risk involved in the conduct. Likewise, the standard is not raised because the particular accused may have special experience or training. On the other hand, the particular activity may impose a higher de facto standard than others: R. v. Creighton (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 632 (S.C.C.).

The unlawful act must also be objectively dangerous, that is, likely to injure another person: R. v. DeSousa (1992), 76 C.C.C. (3d) 124, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 944, 76 C.C.C. (3d) 124, 15 C.R. (4th) 66; R. v. Creighton, supra.

Party to manslaughter – An accused who lacks the necessary mens rea for murder may be convicted of manslaughter by aiding or abetting another in the offence of murder pursuant to s. 21(1), where a reasonable person in all the circumstances would have appreciated that bodily harm was the foreseeable consequence of the dangerous act which was being undertaken. Further, if the accused party did not foresee the probability of murder by the principal offender but a reasonable person in all the circumstances would have foreseen at least a risk of harm to another as a result of carrying out the common intention, the party could be found guilty of manslaughter pursuant to s. 21(2). Liability for manslaughter under s. 21(2) does not depend upon proof that a reasonable person would have foreseen the risk of death: R. v. Jackson, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 573, 86 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 26 C.C.C. (4th) 178.

Manslaughter by criminal negligence / [Also see notes under ss. 219 and 220] – On a trial for murder the verdicts left to the jury were murder, manslaughter due to intoxication and not guilty due to accident. On the accused's appeal from conviction for murder it was argued that the trial Judge should have left with the jury the verdict of manslaughter as a result of criminal negligence. The Court held however that such a theory was based on speculation, that there was no evidence to support criminal negligence as distinct from accident and, accordingly, the defence was not entitled to have this theory placed before the jury: Charbonneau v. The Queen (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 469, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 805 (8:1).

Constitutional considerations – Manslaughter is not one of those offences which because of its gravity or the stigma attached to it requires proof of a minimum mens rea of foreseeability of death to comply with s. 7 of the Charter. Thus, the offence of unlawful act manslaughter as interpreted by the courts and requiring only objective foreseeability of the risk of bodily harm does not violate s. 7. Thus, the so-called “thin skull” rule which renders offenders liable for the unforeseen consequences of their dangerous acts as well does not violate s. 7: R. v. Creighton (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 632 (S.C.C.).

PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER / Minimum punishment.

235. (1) Every one who commits first degree murder or second degree murder is guilty of an indictable offence and shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

(2) For the purposes of Part XXIII, the sentence of imprisonment for life prescribed by this section is a minimum punishment. R.S., c. C-34, s. 218; 1973-74, c. 38, s. 3; 1974-75-76, c. 105, s. 5.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Murder is defined in ss. 229 and 230 and classified as first or second degree murder by s. 231. The determination of parole ineligibility is made in accordance with ss. 742 to 747. That scheme as applied to adults may, however, be briefly summarized as follows. A person convicted of first degree murder is liable to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for 25 years [s. 742(a)], but may apply for judicial review of the period of ineligibility after 15 years [s. 745]. A person convicted of second degree murder is liable to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for a period between 10 and 25 years [s. 742(b)]. This period is set by the trial judge under s. 744 after taking the recommendation, if any, from the jury [where the case has been tried by a jury] pursuant to s. 743. Note, however, that where an accused is convicted of second degree murder, the period of parole ineligibility must be set at 25 years where the accused was previously convicted of murder however described under the Criminal Code [s. 742(a.1)] [Note s. 664 which prohibits reference in the indictment to the previous conviction. However, s. 665 which requires service of notice of intention to seek greater punishment does not apply.] Again, the accused may apply for judicial review of the period of ineligibility after 15 years where the period set under s. 744 exceeds 15 years [s. 745]. A person convicted of murder will also be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1). Pursuant to s. 744.1, where the accused was under 18 years of age at the time of the offence but has been transferred to the ordinary courts then the period of parole ineligibility may be between five and ten years whether the accused is convicted of first or second degree murder.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats. As to other notes respecting defences to murder, see ss. 229 and 230. As to included offences, see s. 662.

This offence may be the basis for an application for an authorization to intercept private communications by reason of s. 183 or a warrant to conduct video surveillance by reason of s. 487.01(5), and falls within the definition of "enterprise crime offence" in s. 462.3 for the purposes of Part XII.2.

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 431 [official premises, etc.]. A threat to commit an offence under this section against an internationally protected person (defined in s. 2) is an offence under s. 424.

Special provision respecting the plea of autrefois see s. 610(2) to (4).

Pursuant to s. 582, no person may be convicted of first degree murder unless he is specifically charged with that offence in the indictment. Under s. 589, no count that charges an offence other than murder shall be joined in an indictment to a count that charges murder.

Trial of murder is by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) where the victim is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the punishment for committing murder. All murders, both first and second degree, attract a minimum punishment of life imprisonment. There are also provisions in the Criminal Code which set out minimum periods of imprisonment before a person convicted of murder may be considered eligible for parole (see. s. 742).

MANSLAUGHTER.

236. Every person who commits manslaughter is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for life and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and
- (b) in any other case, to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 219; 1995, c. 39, s. 142.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Manslaughter is defined by ss. 232, 234 and 263(3).

Section 7(3) enacts special jurisdictional rules for commission of this offence outside Canada when the offence is in relation to an internationally protected person or property referred to in s. 432 [official premises, etc.]. Firearm is defined in s. 2.

As to included offences see s. 662(5). For special provision respecting the plea of autrefois, see s. 610(2) to (4).

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) where the victim is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. An accused convicted of this offence may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment for during any period that the court considers proper, where the offence under this section was committed by means of a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260. In some circumstances, the accused will also be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1).

SYNOPSIS

Section 236 provides that the maximum sentence upon conviction for manslaughter is life imprisonment. This is to be contrasted to the punishment for murder for which the minimum sentence is life, and for which there are restrictions in the Criminal Code regarding eligibility for parole. There is no minimum sentence for manslaughter except where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence. In such a case, the minimum punishment is four years' imprisonment.

PUNISHMENT FOR INFANTICIDE.

237. Every female person who commits infanticide is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 220.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Infanticide is defined in ss. 233 and 663.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. In some circumstances, the accused will also be liable to the discretionary prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(2).

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4). For other notes concerning the offence of infanticide, see s. 233.

ANNOTATIONS

Where the expert evidence indicated that the accused was seriously mentally ill at the time of the offence (even raising doubts as to her liability for this offence) the court on appeal against a prison sentence allowed the appeal and substituted a conditional discharge. The principle of deterrence simply had no application in the circumstances, the only real consideration being rehabilitation: R. v. Szola (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 572 (Ont. C.A.).

KILLING UNBORN CHILD IN ACT OF BIRTH / Saving.

238. (1) Every one who causes the death, in the act of birth, of any child that has not become a human being, in such a manner that, if the child were a human being, he would be guilty of murder, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life.

(2) This section does not apply to a person who, by means that, in good faith, he considers necessary to preserve the life of the mother of a child, causes the death of that child. R.S., c. C-34, s. 221.

CROSS-REFERENCES

As to when a child becomes a human being, see s. 223(1). The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. Murder is defined in ss. 229 and 230. The offence of infanticide is defined in s. 233. Related offences are as follows: s. 243, neglect to obtain assistance in child-birth; s. 243, concealing body of child; s. 215, failing to provide necessities; s. 218, abandoning child.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the indictable offence of killing an unborn child in the act of birth. This offence applies in circumstances where the death was caused in such a way that, had the child become a human being (see s. 223), the crime would have been murder. The maximum sentence upon conviction is imprisonment for life.

Section 238(2) provides an exception to liability for such acts dealing with cases in which the act, resulting in the death of the unborn child, was done to save the life of the mother. The person doing the act must consider in good faith that such act was necessary for that purpose.

ATTEMPT TO COMMIT MURDER.

239. Every person who attempts by any means to commit murder is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (a) where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, to imprisonment for life and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years; and
- (b) in any other case, to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 222; 1995, c. 39, s. 143.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Attempt is defined in s. 24. Firearm is defined in s. 2.

Section 17 limits the availability of the statutory defence of compulsion by threats. Under s. 662(2), an accused may be convicted of "attempted second degree murder" on an indictment charging first degree murder. Presumably, where the indictment charges second degree murder then the accused can be convicted of attempted second degree murder by virtue of s. 662(1)(b). Under s. 661, where an attempt is charged but the evidence proves commission of the full offence, the accused may be convicted of the attempt.

The accused's spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) where the victim is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of attempted murder will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1). While s. 239 is not listed in s. 183 as an "offence" for the purposes of obtaining an authorization to intercept private communications, an authorization may be obtained in respect of an attempt to commit any of the offences listed in s. 183 and "235 (murder)" is listed in s. 183. Similarly, while s. 239 is not listed in s. 462.3 as an "enterprise crime offence" for the purposes of Part XII.1, "section 235 (punishment for murder)" is listed in s. 462.3 and s. 462.3(c) provides that an attempt to commit any of the offences listed in the section is as well an enterprise crime offence. A person convicted of attempted murder may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

Section 239 makes it an indictable offence to attempt to commit murder. This part of the section is redundant as s. 24(1) would create such an offence. The key aspect of this section provides that the maximum sentence upon conviction is life imprisonment. This is a departure from the general rule expressed in s. 463(a) that a person is liable to a sentence of 14 years upon conviction for attempting to commit an offence which would be punishable by life imprisonment upon completion of the full offence. No minimum sentence is prescribed except where a firearm is used in the commission of the offence, in which case the minimum sentence is four years. The mental element for this offence is the intention to kill.

ANNOTATIONS

Intent – A conviction for attempted murder requires proof of the specific intent to kill. No lesser mens rea will suffice, and in particular a conviction under this section may not be based on the lesser intents described in s. 229(a)(ii) or s. 230: R. v. Ancio (1984), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 385, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 225, 39 C.R. (3d) 1 (7:1).

Neither excessive force in self-defence nor provocation are defences to this charge so as to reduce the offence to one of attempted manslaughter. However, the conduct of the victim may be a relevant piece of evidence on the question of whether the accused had the requisite intent to kill if the provocation by the victim produced in the accused a state of anger, excitement or disturbance to the extent that he did not contemplate the consequences of his act and did not intend those consequences: R. v. Campbell (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 6, 17 O.R. (2d) 673 (C.A.).

To make out the offence under this section the Crown must prove that the accused, having the specific intent to cause the death of a human being, did anything for the purpose of carrying out that intent, by any means. The Crown need not prove that the accused had the specific intent to murder each of the victims, specified in the indictment, by name in a case where the accused intending to kill an occupant of a tavern returned to the tavern and opened fire on the area in which a number of patrons were standing: R. v. Marshall (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 151 (N.S.C.A.).

Liability of party – A party cannot be convicted of this offence based on the objective foreseeability under s. 21(2). Accordingly, the words “ought to have known” in s. 21(2) are inoperative where liability is sought to be imposed on a party for the offence in this section: R. v. Logan (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 391, 73 D.L.R. (4th) 40 (S.C.C.).

Included offences – An indictment charging attempted murder simpliciter only includes the offence of attempting to unlawfully cause bodily harm: R. v. Simpson (No. 2) (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 122, 20 C.R. (3d) 36 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Colburne (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 235, [1991] R.J.Q. 1199 (C.A.).

ACCESSORY AFTER FACT TO MURDER.

240. Every one who is an accessory after the fact to murder is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 223.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The definition of accessory after the fact is in s. 23. Sections 23.1 and 592 deal with the trial of and charging of the accessory although the principal has not or cannot be convicted. Murder is defined in ss. 229 and 230.

Trial of accessory after the fact to murder is by the superior court of criminal jurisdiction (defined in s. 2) by virtue of ss. 468 and 469. By virtue of s. 522, only a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction may release an accused charged with this offence. A person convicted of this offence may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1).

While s. 240 is not listed in s. 183 as an “offence” for the purposes of obtaining an authorization to intercept private communications, an authorization may be obtained for being an accessory after the fact in relation to any of the offences listed in s. 183 and “235 (murder)” is listed in s. 183. Similarly, while s. 240 is not listed in s. 462.3 as an “enterprise crime offence” for the purposes of Part XII.1, “section 235 (punishment for murder)” is listed in s. 462.3 and s. 462.3(c) provides that being an accessory after the fact in relation to any of the offences listed in the section is as well an enterprise crime offence.

The accused’s spouse is a competent and compellable witness at the instance of the Crown by virtue of s. 4(4) where the victim is under the age of 14 years. Age is determined by reference to s. 30 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21.

SYNOPSIS

This section provides that it is an indictable offence to be an accessory after the fact to the commission of a murder. This aspect of the section is redundant in light of s. 23 of the Criminal Code. The important aspect of the section is one which places the maximum sentence, upon conviction, at life imprisonment. This is an exception to the general rule as stated in s. 463(a) that the punishment for being an accessory after the fact is punishable by 14 years, if the sentence, to which the principal accused is subject, is life imprisonment. For a description of what constitutes being an accessory after the fact, see s. 23.

ANNOTATIONS

The offence of being an accessory after the fact to manslaughter under s. 463(1) is a lesser and included offence to that of being an accessory after the fact to murder: R. v. Webber (1995), 102 C.C.C. (3d) 248, 106 W.A.C. 161 (B.C.C.A.).

Suicide

COUNSELLING OR AIDING SUICIDE.

241. Every one who

(a) counsels a person to commit suicide, or

(b) aids or abets a person to commit suicide, whether suicide ensues or not, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 224; R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 7(3).

CROSS-REFERENCES

"Counsel" is defined in s. 22(3). Note that s. 14 provides that no person is entitled to consent to have death inflicted on him and such consent does not affect the criminal responsibility of any person, by whom death may be inflicted, on the person, by whom consent is given. While s. 14 would seem to make a person who aids suicide guilty of culpable homicide, including first degree murder, apparently the predecessor to this offence was inserted in the 1892 Code expressly to avoid the problem that, at common law, suicide was murder and thus, a person who aided suicide was guilty of murder and liable to the death penalty. [See excerpt from Report of the Imperial Commissioners, respecting the English Draft Code of 1878, quoted in Martin's Criminal Code, 1955 at p. 397.] and in London Life Insurance Co. v. Lang Shirt Co.'s Trustee, [1929] S.C.R. 117, [1929] 1 D.L.R. 328, it was held that a successful suicide was not a "homicide" within what is now s. 222.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to counsel the act of suicide or to assist in such an act. At one time, attempting suicide was an offence, but this section has been repealed so that the person who attempts to commit suicide does not commit an offence: only the person who counsels or assists is guilty of a crime. The offence is made out, regardless of whether the suicide ensues. A person convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a period of not more than 14 years.

ANNOTATIONS

On a charge of aiding suicide, the Crown must prove an intent to aid suicide and drunkenness is a defence to the charge: R. v. Loomes (unreported January 6, 1975, (Ont. C.A.)).

This section does not violate the rights of a terminally ill person under s. 7 of the Charter by prohibiting a physician from assisting suicide: Rodriguez v. British Columbia (Attorney General), [1993] 3 S.C.R. 519, 85 C.C.C. (3d) 15, 24 C.R. (4th) 281 (5:4).

In the case of a genuine suicide pact, the surviving party should have a defence to murder. This defence will only be available when the parties are in such a mental state that they have formed a common and irrevocable intent to commit suicide together simultaneously and by the same act where the risk of death is identical and equal for both. The survivor may, however, be liable to be convicted of the offence under this section: R. v. Gagnon (1993), 84 C.C.C. (3d) 143 (Que. C.A.).

Neglect in Child-birth and Concealing Dead Body

NEGLECT TO OBTAIN ASSISTANCE IN CHILD-BIRTH.

242. A female person who, being pregnant and about to be delivered, with intent that the child shall not live or with intent to conceal the birth of the child, fails to make provision for reasonable assistance in respect of her delivery is, if the child is permanently injured as a result thereof or dies immediately before, during or in a short time after birth, as a result thereof, guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 226.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Related offences are infanticide, defined in s. 237, killing unborn child in act of birth in s. 238 and concealing body of child in s. 243. See s. 223(2) as to when causing death to child during or before birth amounts to homicide.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

A person convicted of this offence may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1).

SYNOPSIS

Section 242 makes it an indictable offence to neglect to obtain help in child-birth if the act or omission is done with the requisite intent, and the consequences to the child are as specified in the section. The pregnant woman is liable as a principal if she is about to give birth and fails to make provision for reasonable assistance for the delivery. This liability only attaches if the woman fails to get assistance with the intention that the child should not live or to conceal the birth and certain results follow. The consequences which must be proven are that the child dies immediately before, during or in a short time after the birth or is permanently injured as result of the woman's failure to obtain assistance. The maximum sentence on conviction for this offence is five years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

The death or injury must be a direct result of deliberate failure to obtain reasonable assistance at birth: R. v. Bryan (1959), 123 C.C.C. 160, [1959] O.W.N. 103 (C.A.) (2:1).

CONCEALING BODY OF CHILD.

243. Every one who in any manner disposes of the dead body of a child, with intent to conceal the fact that its mother has been delivered of it, whether the child died before, during or after birth, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 227.

CROSS-REFERENCES

By virtue of s. 662(4), this offence is an included offence where a count charges murder of a child or charges infanticide.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

Related offences are infanticide, defined in s. 237, killing unborn child in act of birth in s. 238 and neglecting to obtain assistance in child birth in s. 243.

Bodily Harm and Acts and Omissions Causing Danger to the Person

CAUSING BODILY HARM WITH INTENT — FIREARM.

244. Every person who, with intent

(a) to wound, maim or disfigure any person,

(b) to endanger the life of any person, or

(c) to prevent the arrest or detention of any person, discharges a firearm at any person, whether or not that person is the person mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c), is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years and to a minimum punishment of imprisonment for a term of four years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 228; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 17; 1995, c 39, s. 144.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "firearm" is defined in s. 2. Related offences are as follows: s. 239, attempted murder; s. 129, resisting arrest; s. 270(1)(b) assault with intent to resist arrest; s. 267, assault causing bodily harm and assault with a weapon; s. 268, aggravated assault; s. 269, unlawfully causing bodily harm; s. 272, sexual assault with a weapon and sexual assault causing bodily harm; s. 273, aggravated sexual assault.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

A person convicted of this offence may be liable to the mandatory or discretionary prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1) or (2) respectively, depending on the circumstances. A person convicted of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to discharge a firearm with one of the intentions specified in the section. The doing of any of the aforementioned acts with any of the intentions set out in paras. (a) to (c), namely, wounding, maiming or disfiguring any person, endangering the life of anyone or of preventing the arrest of a person, makes out the offence. The offence is made out even if the person referred to in paras. (a) or (b) is not the person who was in fact fired at. Quaere whether this section would apply to an attempted suicide by firearm. The maximum punishment to which one is liable upon conviction is fourteen years and the minimum punishment is four years' imprisonment.

ANNOTATIONS

In R. v. Schultz (1962), 133 C.C.C. 174, 38 C.R. 76 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.), the Court considered various definitions of the word "maim" all to the effect that the person is maimed when he is rendered less able to fight. In that case it was held that the breaking of a man's leg is a sufficiently serious injury to amount to a maiming.

In R. v. Innes and Brochie (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 544 (B.C.C.A.), Robertson J.A., considered various definitions of the words "wound, maim or disfigure" including that "maim" means to render the victim less able to defend himself and "disfigure" denotes more than a temporary marring of the figure or appearance of a person.

An acquittal on a charge of attempted murder and a conviction on a charge of discharging a firearm with intent to endanger life are not inconsistent verdicts as the intent to endanger life is different from the intent to murder: R. v. Boomhower (1974), 20 C.C.C. (2d) 89, 27 C.R.N.S. 188 (Ont. C.A.).

Assault as defined by s. 265(1)(b) is an included offence of this offence: R. v. Colburne (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 235, [1991] R.J.Q. 1199 (C.A.).

CAUSING BODILY HARM WITH INTENT — AIR GUN OR PISTOL.*244.1. Every person who, with intent

- (a) to wound, maim or disfigure any person,
- (b) to endanger the life of any person, or
- (c) to prevent the arrest or detention of any person, discharges an air or compressed gas gun or pistol at any person, whether or not that person is the person mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c), is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years. 1995, c. 39, s. 144.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The comparable offence where a firearm is used is found in s. 244. The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of this offence may be liable to the firearms prohibition under s. 100.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to discharge an air gun or pistol at any person with one of the intentions specified in the section. The offence is made out even if the person referred to in paras. (a) or (b) is not the person who was in fact fired at. The maximum punishment to which the offender is liable upon conviction is fourteen years.

ADMINISTERING NOXIOUS THING.

245. Every one who administers or causes to be administered to any person or causes any person to take poison or any other destructive or noxious thing is guilty of an indictable offence and liable

- (a) to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years, if he intends thereby to endanger the life of or to cause bodily harm to that person; or
- (b) to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, if he intends thereby to aggrieve or annoy that person. R.S., c. C-34, s. 229.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “bodily harm” is defined in s. 2.

The offence of supplying a noxious thing intended to procure a miscarriage is found in s. 288.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498 where charged with the offence under para. (b).

A person convicted of the offence under para. (a) may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1) and a person found guilty of the offence under para. (b) liable to the discretionary prohibition order under s. 100(2). A person convicted of the offence under para. (a) may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

Section 245 makes it an indictable offence to administer a noxious thing. The actus reus of the offence consists of administering, causing to be administered or causing to be taken a noxious thing, poison or destructive thing. To be guilty of an offence under this section, it must be proven that the accused intended to do the physical acts described. However, for sentencing purposes, a distinction is made between different intentions. If the accused intended that, by doing any of the acts described, he would endanger the life of another or cause that person bodily harm, the maximum sentence is 14 years. If the accused does any of the acts to aggrieve or annoy that person, the maximum sentence is two years.

ANNOTATIONS

The mens rea required by this section is proof that the accused intended a consequence defined in the section. A "noxious thing" is any substance which in the light of all the circumstances attendant upon its administration is capable of effecting or, in the normal course of events, will effect one of the defined consequences. Even an innocuous substance may in some circumstances come within the section. The Crown need not prove that the accused knew the substance was noxious, although this would be relevant in establishing intent, but only that the substance was in fact noxious: R. v. Burkholder (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 214, [1977] 1 W.W.R. 627 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

To a similar effect as to the meaning of "noxious thing" in s. 24 of the Offences Against the Person Act, 1861, see: R. v. Marcus (1981), 73 Cr. App. R. 49 (C.A.).

OVERCOMING RESISTANCE TO COMMISSION OF OFFENCE.

246. Every one who, with intent to enable or assist himself or another person to commit an indictable offence,

(a) attempts, by any means, to choke, suffocate or strangle another person, or by any means calculated to choke, suffocate or strangle, attempts to render another person insensible, unconscious or incapable of resistance, or

(b) administers or causes to be administered to any person, or attempts to administer to any person, or causes or attempts to cause any person to take a stupefying or overpowering drug, matter or thing, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 230; 1972, c. 13, s. 70.

CROSS-REFERENCES

An "indictable offence" will include a hybrid offence, punishable on indictment or on summary conviction: Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 34(1)(a).

Note that where death is caused in the commission of certain offences by means similar to those referred to in this section then the accused will be liable to be convicted of murder under s. 230(b) or (c) [constructive murder]. The related offence of administering a noxious thing is found in s. 245.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of this offence will be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1). A person convicted of this offence may be subject to a dangerous offender application under Part XXIV.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence for any person to overcome resistance for the purpose of committing an indictable offence or to do so to assist another person. The offence is made out by proving that the accused did any of the acts described in paras. (a) or (b) for this purpose. The maximum sentence upon conviction is life imprisonment.

TRAPS LIKELY TO CAUSE BODILY HARM / Permitting traps on premises.

247. (1) Every one who, with intent to cause death or bodily harm to persons, whether ascertained or not, sets or places or causes to be set or placed a trap, device or other thing whatever that is likely to cause death or bodily harm to persons is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) A person who, being in occupation or possession of a place where anything mentioned in subsection (1) has been set or placed, knowingly and wilfully permits it to remain at that place, shall be deemed, for the purposes of that subsection, to have set or placed it with the intent mentioned therein. R.S., c. C-34, s. 231.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “property” is defined in s. 2. The term “bodily harm” is not defined in this section. Some assistance may, however, be obtained from the definition of “bodily harm” in s. 267(2).

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498. A person found guilty of this offence may be liable to the discretionary prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(2), depending on the circumstances in which the offence was committed.

The related offences of criminal negligence causing death and causing bodily harm are found in ss. 220 and 221, respectively. The offences of failing to guard an opening in the ice and failing to guard excavations are found in s. 263.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to set or permit traps and other similar devices which are likely to cause death or bodily harm to any person.

The physical acts which make up the offence are setting, placing a trap, device or other thing or causing this to occur, if the device is likely to cause death or bodily harm to any person. The harm likely to result is to be judged on an objective standard. The requisite intent is to cause death or bodily harm. The offence carries a five year maximum term of imprisonment.

Subsection (2) will result in the intention to commit the offence being deemed to have existed, if a person who was either in occupation or possession of a place where a device was placed knowingly and wilfully permits it to remain.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsec. (2) – This subsection does not set up a rebuttable presumption but rather imposes absolute liability once it has been shown that the land occupier knowingly and wilfully permitted the trap or device on his land: R. v. Besse (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 140 (B.C. Prov. Ct.).

INTERFERING WITH TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

248. Every one who, with intent to endanger the safety of any person, places anything on or does anything to any property that is used for or in connection with the transportation of persons or goods by land, water or air that is likely to cause death or bodily harm to persons is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life. R.S., c. C-34, s. 232.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “bodily harm” is not defined in this section. Some assistance may, however, be obtained from the definition of “bodily harm” in s. 267(2). Related offences are as follows: ss. 76 to 78, offences involving aircraft; ss. 80 to 82, offences involving explosives; ss. 220 to 222, criminal negligence; s. 247, setting trap with intent; ss. 430 to 436, damage to property.

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515. A person convicted of this offence may be liable to the mandatory prohibition order respecting firearms, ammunition and explosives by virtue of s. 100(1), depending on the circumstances in which the offence was committed.

SYNOPSIS

Section 248 creates the indictable offence of interfering with transportation facilities with the intention of endangering the safety of any person. The physical acts outlined in the section are placing anything on, or doing anything to property used in connection with transporting people or goods by land, water or air. In addition to proof of the physical act and the intention, it must be established that the act is likely to cause death or bodily harm. The maximum sentence for this offence is life imprisonment.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "motor vehicle" and "railway equipment" are defined in s. 2. The terms "aircraft", "vessel" and "operates" are defined in s. 214. The term "bodily harm" is defined in s. 2.

With respect to the offence in subsec. (4) and the issue of causation, see ss. 224 to 227. For special jurisdictional rules relating to offences committed on the water or on aircraft in the course of a flight see s. 476. Also see s. 477 respecting offences committed on the territorial sea or on internal waters [defined in s. 3 of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-8]. Section 662(5) makes the offences under this section included offences where the count charges an offence of criminal negligence causing death [s. 220], criminal negligence causing bodily harm [s. 221] or manslaughter [s. 236] arising out of the operation of a vehicle or navigation of a vessel or aircraft. The related offences of impaired driving causing death and bodily harm are found in s. 255. The offence of failing to stop at the scene of an accident is found in s. 252.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on the offence in subsec. (2), dangerous operation, simpliciter, then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. The accused has an election as to mode of trial of the offences in subssecs. (3) and (4) pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

An accused found guilty of these offences may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be, where the offence under this section was committed by means of a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment. The length of the prohibition order is as follows: offence under subsec. (2), during any period not exceeding 3 years; offence under either subsec. (3) or (4), during any period not exceeding 10 years. The procedure respecting the making of the order of prohibition is found in s. 260.

SYNOPSIS

Section 249 makes it an offence to operate motor vehicles, vessels or aircraft in a dangerous manner and provides for punishment upon conviction for these offences.

Section 249(1)(a) makes it an offence to operate a motor vehicle in a manner that is dangerous. To determine if the driving is dangerous, the paragraph indicates that one must consider all of the circumstances such as the nature, condition and the use of the place as well as the amount of traffic that is or might reasonably be expected to be present. In addition, it is essential that there be danger to the public who either were present or who might have been expected to be present. A passenger in the car is part of the public. The mental element for the offence requires proof of an intention to operate the vehicle in a way which, objectively viewed, constitutes a departure from the standard of care expected of a prudent driver in the circumstances.

Section 249(1)(b) creates a parallel offence in relation to the dangerous operation of a vessel or water skis, surf board, water sled or other towed object. The offence may be committed in the internal waters of Canada or on its territorial seas. Section 249(1)(c) creates a parallel offence in relation to the dangerous operation of an aircraft. Finally, s. 249(1)(d) sets out the similar offence of dangerous operation of railway equipment.

Subsection (2) provides that the aforementioned offences may be tried by way of summary conviction procedure or by way of indictment. In the latter case, the maximum sentence is five years' imprisonment.

Subsections (3) and (4) create more aggravated indictable offences which occur when a particular consequence flows from the commission of any of the offences described in subsec. (1). Subsection (3) applies if the acts described in subsec. (1) result in bodily harm to another person and it provides for a maximum sentence not exceeding 10 years. Subsection (4) creates the offence of doing one of the acts described in subsec. (1), when this causes the death of another person. A person convicted pursuant to subsec. (4) is liable to up to 14 years imprisonment. In both subssecs. (3) and (4), there must be a link proven between the accused's acts and the result. Though it is not yet clearly defined how strong a link need be proven, the accused's act must at least be a cause of the consequences.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence of dangerous operation – In R. v. Peda, [1969] 4 C.C.C.245, 7 C.R.N.S.243 (S.C.C.), Judson, J. (Fauteaux, Abbott, Martland and Ritchie, JJ., concurring), held that subsec. (1)(a) contains its own definition of dangerous driving, and a court is not required to charge the jury other than in terms of the subsection itself.

In considering whether the manner of driving endangered the public, it was an error for the trial judge to simply consider the absence of other traffic in the course of a high speed police chase. The passenger in the accused's car and the officer in the police cruiser were included in the public contemplated by this section: R. v. Edlund (1990), 23 M.V.R. (2d) 37, 104 A.R. 354 (C.A.).

It is unnecessary for the Crown to prove that the lives or safety of others were actually endangered. The offence is proved where the Crown establishes that the driving complained of was dangerous to the public, that is, either the public actually present at the time of the offence or the public which might reasonably have been expected to be in the particular vicinity at the time: R. v. Mueller (1975), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 243, 32 C.R.N.S. 188 (Ont. C.A.).

This offence requires proof of a "marked" departure from prudent conduct: R. v. Rajic (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 533, 21 C.R. (4th) 208, 43 M.V.R. (2d) 201 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 83 C.C.C. (3d) vi; R. v. Rai (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 122, 50 M.V.R. (2d) 214, 60 W.A.C. 211 (B.C.C.A.).

Mens rea [fault] – The appropriate mens rea for this offence is based on a modified objective test. As a general rule, personal factors need not be taken into account and the accused may be convicted if it is proven that, viewed objectively, the accused was driving in a manner that was dangerous to the public, having regard to all of the circumstances. In making this assessment, the court should be satisfied that the conduct amounted to a marked departure from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the accused's situation. An explanation, such as the sudden onset of an unexpected illness would negative liability if a reasonable person in the position of the accused would not have been aware of the risk: R. v. Hundal (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 19 C.R. (4th) 169, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 867.

In a series of cases the Supreme Court of Canada had occasion to explore the fault element in cases of so-called "penal negligence" apparently as distinguished from criminal negligence. Dangerous driving would be one of these offences. In R. v. Creighton (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 346, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 632 (S.C.C.) McLachlin J. writing for a majority of the court suggested the following approach to proof of such offences. The first question is whether the actus reus is established. This requires that the negligence constitute a marked departure from the standards of a reasonable person in all the circumstances of the case. This may consist in carrying out the activity in a dangerous fashion, or in embarking on the activity when in all the circumstances it is dangerous to do so. The next question is whether the mens rea is established. Normally the mens rea for objective foresight of risking harm is inferred from the facts. The standard is that of the reasonable person in the circumstances of the accused. The normal inference that a person who committed a manifestly dangerous act failed to direct their mind to the risk and the need to take care may be negated by evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to lack of capacity to appreciate the risk. Short of incapacity, personal factors are not relevant whether those factors might indicate, for example, either a lack of experience or a special experience. Also see: R. v. Gosset (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 494, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 681 (S.C.C.); R. v. Naglik (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 526, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 712 (S.C.C.); and R. v. Finlay (1993), 83 C.C.C. (3d) 513, 105 D.L.R. (4th) 699, [1993] 7 W.W.R. 513 (S.C.C.).

Constitutional considerations – The offence created by para. (1)(a) is not unconstitutionally vague in violation of s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Demeyer (1986), 27 C.C.C. (3d) 575, 40 M.V.R. 231 (Alta. C.A.).

Imposing liability for this offence on the basis of a modified objective test for fault does not infringe s. 7 of the Charter: R. v. Hundal, supra.

Causation [subsecs. (3) and (4)] – In considering the causation problems that may arise under subsec. (3) reference may be made to decisions under s. 285 of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1927, c. 36, which created an offence of causing bodily harm by wanton driving:

R. v. Wilmot (1929), 52 C.C.C. 336, [1930] 1 D.L.R. 778 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Dahl (1936), 67 C.C.C. 37, [1936] 3 W.W.R. 385 (Alta. C.A.).

It was held in relation to the offence of criminal negligence causing death that the element of causation is satisfied if the evidence shows that the criminally negligent conduct of the accused was at least a contributing cause of death outside the de minimis range. It is misdirection to instruct the jury that the conduct must be shown to be a substantial cause: R. v. Pinske (1988), 6 M.V.R. (2d) 19, 30 B.C.L.R. (2d) 114 (C.A.), affd 100 N.R. 399 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

In R. v. F.(D.) (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 357, 73 C.R. (3d) 391, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 62, 100 A.R. 122 (C.A.), the court held that the words “thereby caused” in subsecs. (3) and (4) must demand at least that the unlawful operation of the accused’s vehicle was a real and truly contributing cause of any ensuing injury or death. The court should be chary of allowing speculative inferences alone to stand as the causative link between the driving and the injury. The unlawful driving must demonstrably influence the actual injury accident beyond serving as its backdrop. The court appeared to accept that this was not consistent with the test enunciated in R. v. Smithers (1978), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 427, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 506, 75 D.L.R. (3d) 321 (a manslaughter case noted under s. 222), that the unlawful act must be “at least a contributing cause of death, outside the de minimis range”, which test must be held to represent the law on trial of offences under this section and s. 255 in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada affirming R. v. Pinske, supra. The Smithers test has also been adopted in the following cases: R. v. Larocque (1988), 5 M.V.R. (2d) 221 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Halkett (1988), 73 Sask. R. 241, 11 M.V.R. 109 (C.A.); R. v. Singhal (1988), 5 M.V.R. (2d) 172 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Arsenault (1992), 16 C.R. (4th) 301 (P.E.I.C.A.). Moreover, the Alberta Court of Appeal has itself applied the Smithers test in the following cases: R. v. Colby (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 73, 100 A.R. 142 (C.A.), and R. v. Ewart (1989), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 153, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 55, 100 A.R. 118 (C.A.).

FAILURE TO KEEP WATCH ON PERSON TOWED / Towing of person after dark.

250. (1) Every one who operates a vessel while towing a person on any water skis, surf-board, water sled or other object, when there is not on board such vessel another responsible person keeping watch on the person being towed, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) Every one who operates a vessel while towing a person on any water skis, surf-board, water sled or other object during the period from one hour after sunset to sunrise is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “vessel” is defined in s. 214. For special jurisdictional rules relating to offences committed on the water see s. 476. Also see s. 477 respecting offences committed on the territorial sea or on internal waters [defined in s. 3 of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. T-8].

The trial of these offences is conducted by a summary convictions court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. An accused convicted of this offence may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a vessel during any period not exceeding 3 years. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260.

SYNOPSIS

A person who operates a vessel while towing another person on water skis, surf-board, water sled or other object is guilty of a summary conviction offence: (1) if there is not another responsible person watching the person being towed; or (2) if the towing takes place during the period from one hour after sunset to sunrise.

ANNOTATIONS

Subsection (1) does not apply to an accused being towed behind a remote controlled water-skiing device. While such device is a "vessel" within the meaning of the section, the provision contemplates that "every one" is a person who is actually on board the vessel: R. v. Gatt (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 146 (B.C.S.C.).

UNSEAWORTHY VESSEL AND UNSAFE AIRCRAFT / Defences / Consent of Attorney General.

251. (1) Every one who knowingly

(a) sends or being the master takes a vessel that is registered or licensed, or for which an identification number has been issued, pursuant to any Act of Parliament and that is unseaworthy

(i) on a voyage from a place in Canada to any other place in or out of Canada, or

(ii) on a voyage from a place on the inland waters of the United States to a place in Canada,

(b) sends an aircraft on a flight or operates an aircraft that is not fit and safe for flight, or

(c) sends for operation or operates railway equipment that is not fit and safe for operation and thereby endangers the life of any person, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

(2) An accused shall not be convicted of an offence under this section where the accused establishes that,

(a) in the case of an offence under paragraph (1)(a),

(i) the accused used all reasonable means to ensure that the vessel was seaworthy, or

(ii) to send or take the vessel while it was unseaworthy was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable;

(b) in the case of an offence under paragraph (1)(b),

(i) the accused used all reasonable means to ensure that the aircraft was fit and safe for flight, or

(ii) to send or operate the aircraft while it was not fit and safe for flight was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable; and

(c) in the case of an offence under paragraph (1)(c),

(i) the accused used all reasonable means to ensure that the railway equipment was fit and safe for operation, or

(ii) to send the railway equipment for operation or to operate it while it was not fit and safe for operation was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable.

(3) No proceedings shall be instituted under this section in respect of a vessel or aircraft, or in respect of railway equipment sent for operation or operated on a line of railway that is within the legislative authority of Parliament, without the consent in writing of the Attorney General of Canada. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; c. 32 (4th Supp.), s. 58.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "aircraft", "vessel" and "operates" are defined in s. 214. The term "railway equipment" is defined in s. 2. Section 583(h) provides that a count in an indictment is not insufficient by reason only that it does not state that the required consent has been obtained. [For notes on consent see

s. 583.] The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by the officer in charge under s. 498.

An accused convicted of this offence may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be, during any period not exceeding 3 years. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an indictable offence to endanger the life of any person by knowingly sending or taking a licensed or registered vessel that is unseaworthy on a voyage from a place in Canada to another place in or out of Canada or from a place on the inland waters of the United States to a place in Canada. Similarly, it is an indictable offence to endanger the life of any person by sending or operating an unfit or unsafe aircraft on a flight or by sending or operating railway equipment that is not fit and safe for operation. The maximum penalty for this offence is a term of imprisonment of five years. Subsection (2) provides that no criminal liability will attach to an accused person who establishes that he/she used all reasonable means to ensure that the vessel was seaworthy or that the aircraft or railway equipment was fit and safe. Furthermore, if an accused can establish that the operation of the unseaworthy vessel, or the unfit or unsafe aircraft or railway equipment was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable, he/she cannot be convicted of this offence. The written consent of the Attorney General of Canada is necessary before any proceedings are instituted under this section.

FAILURE TO STOP AT SCENE OF ACCIDENT / Evidence.

252. (1) Every person who has the care, charge or control of a vehicle, vessel or aircraft that is involved in an accident with

(a) another person,

(b) a vehicle, vessel or aircraft, or

(c) in the case of a vehicle, cattle in the charge of another person, and with intent to escape civil or criminal liability fails to stop the vehicle, vessel or, where possible, the aircraft, give his or her name and address and, where any person has been injured or appears to require assistance, offer assistance, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(2) In proceedings under subsection (1), evidence that an accused failed to stop his vehicle, vessel or, where possible, his aircraft, as the case may be, offer assistance where any person has been injured or appears to require assistance and give his name and address is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof of an intent to escape civil or criminal liability. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; 1994, c. 44, s. 12.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term “vehicle” is not defined, although “motor vehicle” is defined in s. 2. The terms “aircraft” and “vessel” are defined in s. 214.

Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on the offence in subsec. (1) then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the offence is then as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Where the offence involved the operation of a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment then an accused found guilty of this offence may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be, during any period not exceeding 3 years. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260. Related offences: s. 249, dangerous operation; ss. 253 and 255, impaired operation and "over 80"; s. 254, failing to comply with screening device or breathalyzer demand; ss. 220 and 221, criminal negligence causing death or bodily harm.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it an offence, for any person who has the care, charge or control of a vehicle, vessel or aircraft that is involved in an accident with another person, vehicle, vessel or aircraft, to fail to stop at the scene of the accident in order to avoid civil or criminal liability. The person who is involved in the accident must give his name and address and, if there are injuries, offer assistance. By subsec. (2), uncontroverted evidence of his failure to do so is proof of an intent to escape civil or criminal liability. The offence is hybrid and punishable on indictment by a maximum term of imprisonment of two years.

ANNOTATIONS

Elements of offence generally – The offence is made out when it is established that the defendant failed to perform any one of the three statutory duties set out in the information. Furthermore, naming the defendant as the driver in the charge is within the designation of one who has care and control of the vehicle: R. v. Steere (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 403, 19 C.R.N.S.115 (B.C.C.A.).

Contemporaneous knowledge of the accident by the accused is an element of this offence which the Crown must prove. It is not sufficient that the accused "should have known" of the accident: R. v. Slessor, [1970] 2 C.C.C. 247, 7 C.R.N.S. 379 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Faulkner (No. 2) (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 217 (N.S. Co.Ct.).

In R. v. Slessor, supra, the majority divided on the liability of a passenger under this subsection. Gale, C.J.O., held that a passenger in the vehicle, including the owner, who is asleep or otherwise unconscious at the time of an accident cannot be convicted of this offence unless, after the automobile has in fact been stopped in compliance with the section, the owner, upon regaining consciousness causes it to be driven off before the other requisites of the section are met. Further, per Gale, C.J.O., apart from joint ventures, only one person in the car would have care, charge or control and if that person is the passenger he must have a degree of exercisable or exercised control over the actual driver. His Lordship would leave open the question whether the subsection is directed solely to the person who has care, charge or control at the moment of impact. Laskin, J.A., held that the subsection could not apply to a person who did not have care, charge or control at the time the car was involved in the accident. Schroeder, J.A., dissenting, held that if both the driver and the owner/passenger had care and control at the relevant time both could be liable for failing to comply with the subsection.

The Court in R. v. Shea (1982), 17 M.V.R. 40, 37 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 457 (Nfld. C.A.) considered that the law was correctly stated by Gale, C.J.O. in R. v. Slessor, supra, and affirmed the acquittal of the owner of the vehicle because of the trial Judge's finding that he only took over driving of the car some distance, albeit a short distance, from the accident scene.

In R. v. Saletes (1985), 39 M.V.R. 41 (Que. S.C.), the accused, a passenger in her own car, was convicted of this offence. While the vehicle was driven by a friend of hers the evidence established that she was in care, charge or control of the vehicle.

Civil or criminal liability – The "civil or criminal liability" contemplated by this offence relates to liability which could arise from the accident not to some liability which the accused may have incurred prior to the accident, such as the risk of being arrested for a robbery: Fournier v. The Queen (1979), 8 C.R. (3d) 248 (Que. C.A.). Or the risk of being arrested on outstanding warrants for unpaid fines: R. v. Hofer (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 236, 18 M.V.R. 230 (Sask. C.A.). Similarly, R. v. MacLean (1982), 40 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 275, 18 M.V.R. 275 (P.E.I.S.C.) risk of being charged for driving while suspended. Contra: R. v. Benson (1987), 50 M.V.R. 131 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

“Accident” – A deliberate act of mischief by the accused in relation to property, here lining up his car behind the car of another and then deliberately pushing it into a wall is not an “accident” within the meaning of this section: R. v. O’Brien (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 528, 67 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 68 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

However, it was held in R. v. Hansen (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 504 (B.C.C.A.), that an “accident” means any incident in which a person operates a motor vehicle so as to cause injury to another person or damage to a vehicle.

This section does not apply where the accident involves the accused’s car and a pole. The reference in subsec. (1)(b) is to another vehicle: R. v. Yellow (1990), 27 M.V.R. (2d) 59 (Ont. Ct. (Prov. Div.)).

Admissibility of statement – The existence of the statutory duty under this subsection does not dispense with the onus upon the Crown to establish that any statement made was not otherwise involuntary: R. v. Fex (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 188, 23 C.R.N.S.368 (Ont. C.A.), and R. v. Cleavelly (1966), 49 C.R. 326, 57 W.W.R. 301 (Sask. Q.B.). Contra: R. v. Smith (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 113, 25 C.R.N.S.246 (Alta. C.A.).

Presumption of intent [subsec. (2)] – This subsection is to be read disjunctively and thus the presumption applies where the accused fails to perform any of the three duties imposed on him: R. v. Roche (1983), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 34 C.R. (3d) 141, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 491 (7:0).

As to the meaning of the phrase “in the absence of any evidence to the contrary” see: R. v. Proudlock (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 449, 5 C.R. (3d) 21 (S.C.C.) noted under s. 348, infra.

Evidence which is not rejected by the trier of fact and which tends to show that the accused may not have had the requisite intent is evidence to the contrary. Evidence of drunkenness may constitute evidence to the contrary: R. v. Nolet (Charette) (1980), 4 M.V.R. 265 (Ont. C.A.).

Evidence that the accused, prior to walking away from the scene of the accident, was under the influence of alcohol and unresponsive to questions was capable of being evidence to the contrary and thus rebut the presumption: R. v. Adler (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 517, [1981] 4 W.W.R. 379 (Sask. C.A.).

Constitutional considerations – This subsection is not an unconstitutional infringement on the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. T (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 125, 43 C.R. (3d) 307, 16 D.L.R. (4th) 753 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Gosselin (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 568, 9 M.V.R. (2d) 290 (Ont. C.A.).

OPERATING WHILE IMPAIRED.

253. Every one commits an offence who operates a motor vehicle or vessel or operates or assists in the operation of an aircraft or of railway equipment or has the care or control of a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, whether it is in motion or not,

- (a) while the person’s ability to operate the vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment is impaired by alcohol or a drug; or
- (b) having consumed alcohol in such a quantity that the concentration in the person’s blood exceeds eighty milligrams of alcohol in one hundred millilitres of blood. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; c. 32 (4th Supp.), s. 59.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “motor vehicle” and “railway equipment” are defined in s. 2. The terms “aircraft”, “vessel” and “operates” are defined in s. 214. The presumption respecting “care or control” is found in s. 258(1)(a). Procedure for making a breathalyzer or approved screening device [A.L.E.R.T.] demand is found in s. 254 and for obtaining a warrant to obtain blood samples in s. 256. The adverse inference respecting the impaired offence for failing to comply with a demand under s. 254 is found in s. 258(3). The presumption respecting the accused's blood alcohol level arising from analysis of a breath sample or blood sample is found in s. 258(1)(c) and (d). Procedure for admission of certificates of an analyst, qualified technician and medical practitioner is in s. 258(1)(e) to (i) and (6) and (7).

The punishment for these offences is set out in s. 255. Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on this offence then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of this offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. In either case, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Where the accused is charged with impaired operation causing death or causing bodily harm under s. 255(2) or (3) then he has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515. An accused found guilty of this offence is subject to an order prohibiting him from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be. The length of the order is as follows: for a first offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than three months; for a second offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than six months; for each subsequent offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than one year. For prohibition order where the accused is convicted of the offence of impaired causing bodily harm or causing death, see notes under s. 255. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260.

ANNOTATIONS

Proof of care or control [Also see notes under s. 258(1)(a)] – An intention to drive is not an element of the care or control offence. Care or control may be exercised without such intent where the accused performs some act or series of acts involving the use of the car, its fittings or equipment, whereby the vehicle may unintentionally be set in motion creating the danger this section is designed to prevent: R. v. Ford (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 392, 13 M.V.R. 237 (S.C.C.) (7:2).

To convict the accused of the care or control offence, it is not necessary to establish some overt action on the part of the accused to indicate that he was involved with the vehicle in a way as to cause danger to the public. Where the accused had the immediate capacity and means of operating the vehicle, there existed the risk that he would put it in motion and become a danger to the public, even though at the time he was found by the police he was asleep in the front seat of the vehicle: R. v. Diotte (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 209 (N.B.C.A.).

Motor vehicle – The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Saunders, [1967] 3 C.C.C. 278, 1 C.R.N.S. 249, that the definition of a motor vehicle in s. 2 contemplates a kind of vehicle, not whether a vehicle is actually operable or effectively functionable, now renders irrelevant all the previous decisions on when a motor vehicle is a motor vehicle in spite of internal or external conditions causing malfunctioning or immobilization of the vehicle.

An automobile which is out of gas is still a motor vehicle for the purposes of this section: R. v. Lloyd, [1988] 4 W.W.R. 423, 6 M.V.R. (2d) 240, 66 Sask. R. 100 (C.A.).

On this issue, also see the note by J. Watson, "Proving the Actus Reus of Motor Vehicle Crimes: What is a Motor Vehicle?", 21 M.V.R. (2d) 93.

Operation of vessel – In R. v. Wade (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 572 (N.S.Co.Ct.), it was considered that a dragger immobilized by its fishing nets being entangled around other vessels' mooring cables was not then navigated or operated by its captain.

However, a person "operates" a vessel which is merely drifting with its engine turned off: R. v. Ernst (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 320, 34 N.S.R. (2d) 318 (S.C. App. Div.).

Proof of impairment [para. (a)] – The Criminal Code does not prescribe any special test for determining impairment such as a “marked departure” from normal behaviour. If the evidence of impairment establishes any degree of impairment ranging from slight to great, the offence is made out: R. v. Stellato (1993), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 380, 18 C.R. (4th) 127, 43 M.V.R. (2d) 120 (Ont. C.A.), affd [1994] 2 S.C.R. 478n, 90 C.C.C. (3d) 160n, 31 C.R. (4th) 60n.

It cannot be assumed, however, that, where a person’s functional ability is affected in some respects by the consumption of alcohol, his ability to drive is also automatically impaired. Where the proof of impairment consists of observations of conduct, in most cases, if the conduct is a slight departure from normal conduct, it would be unsafe to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the ability to drive was impaired by alcohol: R. v. Andrews (unreported, January 8, 1996, Alta. C.A.) [096/016/087].

An accused may be convicted of this offence although his impaired condition is due partly to fatigue and partly to the consumption of alcohol: R. v. Pelletier (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 161 (Sask. Q.B.).

The Court is not entitled to take judicial notice that at a certain blood-alcohol level the accused’s ability to drive would be impaired: R. v. Ostrowski (1958), 122 C.C.C. 196, 29 C.R. 109 (Ont. H.C.J.).

On a charge of impaired driving the trial judge was, however, entitled to take the certificate of analysis into account as part of the whole case and as evidence that prior to being stopped the accused most likely had consumed alcohol. In so doing the judge was not drawing on any technical or special knowledge: R. v. Dinelle (1986), 44 M.V.R. 109 (N.S.C.A.).

The word “drug” includes not only drugs in the medicinal sense, but any substance consumed which will bring about the impairment contemplated by this section. In particular the word includes the ingredient in glue which produces a “high” from glue sniffing and which may impair a person’s ability to drive: R. v. Marionchuk (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 573, 4 C.R. (3d) 178 (Sask. C.A.).

Even if the accused’s rights under ss. 8 and 10(b) of the Charter were infringed in the obtaining of a blood sample, there was no basis for excluding under s. 24(2) of the Charter evidence as to the accused’s impairment obtained prior to the alleged infringements. This evidence, observations by a physician as to the accused’s apparent state of impairment, was not obtained in a manner that infringed any of the accused’s Charter rights: R. v. MacDonald (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 75, 5 M.V.R. (2d) 283, 83 N.S.R. (2d) 210 (C.A.).

Admissibility of opinion evidence of impairment – A qualified breathalyzer technician is not, without further credentials, capable of relating the defendant’s reading to his ability to operate a motor vehicle: R. v. Edson (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 470, [1976] 3 W.W.R. 695 (B.C.Co.Ct.).

A layman or police officer may give his opinion based on his own observations as to whether or not the accused’s ability to drive was impaired. However, a police officer’s opinion is entitled to no special regard: R. v. Graat (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 365, 31 C.R. (3d) 289, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 819 (7:0).

R. v. Graat, supra, was applied in R. v. Polturak (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 89, 90 A.R. 158 (C.A.) upholding the admission of the opinion of police officers with experience in narcotics control that the accused’s ability to drive was impaired by drugs or drugs and alcohol.

Mens rea of impairment offence – In R. v. King (1962), 133 C.C.C. 1, 38 C.R. 52 (S.C.C.), an appeal by the Crown, affirming 129 C.C.C. 391, 34 C.R. 264, the question before the Court was whether mens rea relating to both the act of driving and to the state of being impaired by alcohol or a drug is an essential ingredient of the offence of impaired driving. Ritchie, J. (Martland, J., concurring), decided that neither necessary implication nor express language disclosed any intention of Parliament to rule out mens rea as an essential ingredient of this offence but was of the opinion that (at p. 19 C.C.C.):

... that element need not necessarily be present in relation both to the act of driving and to the state of being impaired in order to make the offence complete. That is to say, that a man who becomes impaired as the result of taking a drug on medical advice without knowing its effect cannot escape liability if he became aware of his impaired condition before he started to drive his car just as a man who did not appreciate his impaired condition when he started to drive cannot escape liability on the ground that his lack of appreciation was brought about by voluntary consumption of liquor or drug.

The mens rea for the care or control offence is the intent to assume care or control after the voluntary consumption of alcohol or a drug and the actus reus is the act of assumption of care or control when the voluntary consumption of alcohol or a drug has impaired the ability to drive: R. v. Toews (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 24, 47 C.R. (3d) 213, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 119 (7:0).

Thus, the necessary mens rea was established where the accused voluntarily consumed a sedative drug which he knew might impair his ability to drive even if the accused as a result of previous experience believed the drug would not take effect until he completed driving: R. v. Murray (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 502, 36 M.V.R. 12 (Ont. C.A.).

Drunkenness is no defence to the charge of impaired care or control under para. (a). The only mental element involved in the offence is voluntary intoxication: R. v. Penno (1990), 59 C.C.C. (3d) 344, [1990] 2 S.C.R. 865, 80 C.R. (3d) 97 (7:0).

Even where the accused is in a state of automatism or "near automatism" brought about by the consumption of intoxicants, it would seem that this is no defence to the charge: R. v. Honish (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 329 (Alta. C.A.).

Mens rea* of "over 80" offence [para. (b)] – The requirement and the actual proof of mens rea are two different matters. This offence requires mens rea, but once there is established driving with an excessive amount of alcohol in his system the defendant then faces the rebuttable presumption of mens rea which may be negated by defence evidence. A mistaken belief by the accused, based on an inaccurate chart as to the progressive absorption of alcohol into the blood, that his blood-alcohol would not exceed .08 was held not to be a defence to this charge: R. v. Penner (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 334, [1974] 3 W.W.R. 176 (Man. C.A.).

The requisite mens rea or fault for this offence is supplied by proof of the accused's voluntary consumption of alcohol. It is not necessary to prove that the accused either knew or was reckless to the fact that his blood-alcohol exceeded the legal limit: R. v. MacCannell (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 188, 6 M.V.R. 19 (Ont. C.A.). Fold: R. v. Lynch (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 88, 38 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 267 (Nfld. C.A.); R. v. Patterson (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 274, 15 M.V.R. 283 (N.S. C.A.).

Proof of "over 80" offence – Where the Crown is unable to rely on the presumption in s. 258(1)(c) the Court cannot take judicial notice of the progressive absorption of alcohol into the blood to prove that a blood-alcohol reading which exceeded .08 at the time of the test exceeded .08 at the time of the offence: R. v. Stevenson (1972), 14 C.C.C. (2d) 412 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. McBurney (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 207, [1975] 2 W.W.R. 448 (Man. C.A.); R. v. Chandok (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 500 (N.S.Co. Ct.); R. v. Wolff (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 337 (Ont. H.C.J.). In the latter case it was also held that the evidence that the accused displayed obvious signs of impairment likewise did not prove the offence under this section, following R. v. Coach (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 333, [1971] 3 O.R. 466 (H.C.J.). Similarly, R. v. Robertson (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 159 (B.C.C.A.).

In R. v. Perossa (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 553 (B.C.S.C.) a conviction for this offence was upheld despite the lack of expert evidence relating the results of analysis of a blood sample back to the time of the offence where there was evidence of erratic driving and a high degree of intoxication. In view of this other evidence the Court distinguished R. v. Stevenson, supra.

Included offences – The care or control offence is included in the offence of driving and thus an accused charged with the driving offence may be convicted of the care and control offence: R. v. Drolet (1988), 14 M.V.R. (2d) 50, 20 Q.A.C. 94, [1989] R.J.Q. 295 (C.A.), affd [1990] 2 S.C.R. 1107n, 26 M.V.R. (2d) 169. Where the charge is care or control evidence that the accused was in fact driving may be sufficient to sustain the conviction on the charge as laid: R. v. Coults (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 29 C.R. (3d) 189 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Pielie (1982), 18 M.V.R. 46 (B.C.S.C.).

However, where the Crown's case on a charge of care or control is based on evidence of the finding of the accused in the driver's seat, a conviction may not be entered on an admission by the accused that at some time prior to his arrest he had been driving the vehicle. The Crown is bound by the case it presents to the Court and when it fails to prove that case, the accused having successfully rebutted the presumption in s. 258(1)(a), it cannot ask for a conviction of another offence disclosed by the accused's own evidence: R. v. Pendleton (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 228, 18 M.V.R. 78 (Ont. C.A.).

In a case subsequent to the enactment of this section it has been held that para. (b) creates two separate offences, of operating and have care and control, of equal gravity and the care or control offence is not included in the operating offence: R. v. Piicher (1988), 6 M.V.R. (2d) 51, 70 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 96 (Nfld. C.A.).

Where the trial Judge finds that although the accused has consumed alcohol he has a reasonable doubt as to her impairment and thus acquits on the charge contrary to para (a), he may still convict on the charge under para. (b). In such circumstances the doctrine of issue estoppel has no application so as to bar a conviction on the latter offence: R. v. Casson (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 506, [1976] 4 W.W.R. 561 (Alta. C.A.).

Multiple convictions – A motorist cannot be convicted of both offences under this section occurring at one time: R. v. Houchen (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 274, 71 D.L.R. (3d) 739 (2:1) (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Boivin (1976), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 203, 34 C.R.N.S. 227 (Que. C.A.).

A motorist may not choose which of the over-eighty or ability-impaired charges he will plead guilty to; the Court will first dispose of the charge on which the Crown seeks a conviction: R. v. Butler (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 26, [1975] W.W.D. 173 (B.C.Prov.Ct.).

A 24-hour driving suspension imposed under provincial legislation does not bar a conviction under this section although the suspension and the charge under this section arose out of the same incident: R. v. Art (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 563, 61 C.R. (3d) 204, 7 M.V.R. (2d) 132 (B.C.C.A.).

Charging offence – In R. v. Hawryluk, [1967] 3 C.C.C. 356, 1 C.R.N.S. 143 (Sask. C.A.), an information that followed the wording of the statute, "... while his ability to drive a motor vehicle was impaired by alcohol or a drug, did unlawfully drive a motor vehicle ...", was held to be valid as it only charged one of the two alternative offences of driving while impaired or having the care or control of a motor vehicle while impaired, and as each offence may be committed in more than one way it is proper to set out both factors, "by alcohol or drug", in the charge.

“qualified medical practitioner” means a person duly qualified by provincial law to practise medicine;

“qualified technician” means,

- (a) in respect of breath samples, a person designated by the Attorney General as being qualified to operate an approved instrument, and

(2) Where a peace officer reasonably suspects that a person who is operating a motor vehicle or vessel or operating or assisting in the operation of an aircraft or of railway equipment or who has the care or control of a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft or of railway equipment, whether it is in motion or not, has alcohol in the person's body, the peace officer may, by demand made to that person, require the person to provide forthwith such a sample of breath as in the opinion of the peace officer is necessary to enable a proper analysis of the breath to be made by means of an approved screening device and, where necessary, to accompany the peace officer for the purpose of enabling such a sample of breath to be taken.

Note: The wording in the following subsec. (3) does not conform to the R.S.C. 1985 convention which converts the former reference in the phrase “on reasonable and probable grounds” to “on reasonable grounds”. A corrective statute is expected to be enacted in the near future.

(3) Where a peace officer believes on reasonable and probable grounds that a person is committing, or at any time within the preceding two hours has committed, as a result of the consumption of alcohol, an offence under section 253, the peace officer may, by demand made to that person forthwith or as soon as practicable, require that person to provide then or as soon thereafter as is practicable

(a) such samples of the person's breath as in the opinion of a qualified technician,
or

(b) where the peace officer has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that, by reason of any physical condition of the person,

(i) the person may be incapable of providing a sample of his breath, or

(ii) it would be impracticable to obtain a sample of his breath, such samples of the person's blood, under the conditions referred to in subsection (4), as in the opinion of the qualified medical practitioner or qualified technician taking the samples are necessary to enable proper analysis to be made in order to determine the concentration, if any, of alcohol in the person's blood, and to accompany the peace officer for the purpose of enabling such samples to be taken.

(4) Samples of blood may only be taken from a person pursuant to a demand made by a peace officer under subsection (3) if the samples are taken by or under the direction of a qualified medical practitioner and the qualified medical practitioner is satisfied that the taking of those samples would not endanger the life or health of the person.

(5) Every one commits an offence who, without reasonable excuse, fails or refuses to comply with a demand made to him by a peace officer under this section.

(6) A person who is convicted of an offence committed under subsection (5) for a failure or refusal to comply with a demand made under subsection (2) or paragraph (3)(a) or (b) in respect of any transaction may not be convicted of another offence committed under subsection (5) in respect of the same transaction. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; c. 1 (4th Supp.), s. 14; c. 32 (4th Supp.), s. 60.

SYNOPSIS

Subsection (1) defines certain terms relating to breath and blood demands. Subsection (2) states that a peace officer may make a demand for a breath sample from a person who is operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment and whom he reasonably suspects has ingested alcohol [the approved screening device or “ALERT” demand]. Under subsec. (3), if the peace officer has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a person is or has, during the preceding two hours, committed an offence under s. 253, the peace officer may make a demand of that person for breath samples [the breathalyzer demand]. When the peace officer has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the physical condition of the person is such that he may not be capable of providing the breath sample or that it would be impractical to do so, a demand may be made that blood samples be taken by or under the supervision of a qualified physician as long as the physician is satisfied that this procedure would not endanger the life of the person [blood demand]. It is an offence to refuse to comply with a peace officer’s demand under this section, pursuant to subsec. (5). Pursuant to subsec. (6), an accused can only be convicted of an offence under this section arising out of the same transaction.

ANNOTATIONS

Editor's Note: While some of the decisions noted below were decided under the predecessor legislation, they were felt to be relevant to these provisions.

Note respecting right to counsel annotations – The Canadian Bill of Rights, s. 2(c)(ii), guarantees a person who has been arrested or detained the right to retain and instruct counsel without delay. There was no requirement that the detainee be informed of this right. Further, the absence of an enforcement mechanism for violations of the Canadian Bill of Rights and the fact that it was, at best, a quasi-constitutional document limited the impact of the Bill of Rights on criminal procedure generally and especially in respect of the admission of evidence. Virtually the only impact that the Canadian Bill of Rights had was that, in some circumstances, violation of s. 2(c)(ii) might constitute a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the breathalyzer demand.

The impact of s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been much more significant for a number of reasons. First, the person arrested or detained not only has the right to consult counsel, but the right to be informed of that right, unless the legislation constitutes a reasonable limit within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter. In addition, the Charter is a constitutional document and contains its own enforcement mechanism in s. 24(2). The cases respecting right to counsel fall into roughly two categories. The first category concerns those cases which attempt to define the circumstances when the s. 10(b) rights attach and the content of those rights. The notes of those cases will, generally speaking, be found under subsec. (2) or (3), as the case may. These cases will, of course, be relevant where an attempt is made to introduce evidence obtained as a result of a demand under these sections. The second category concerns those cases where it is alleged that there has been an infringement of the right in the context of a refusal to comply with a demand under subsec. (2) or (3). Those cases, generally speaking, are noted under subsec. (5). There will obviously be some overlap between the two categories and, therefore, readers should review the cases under any of the right to counsel headings when concerned about a right to counsel issue.

Subsec. (1) / Validity of designation of technician – Designation as a qualified technician by the Deputy Attorney-General is valid: R. v. Bourassa (1972), 6 C.C.C. (2d) 414, 21 C.R.N.S.355 (B.C.S.C.).

The designation in Ontario of a person as a qualified technician by the provincial Solicitor-General is valid by virtue of the combined operation of this subsection and s. 2 which defines "Attorney General" in part as the Attorney General or Solicitor General of the province: R. v. Wilkes; R. v. Foshay (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 362, 2 M.V.R. 289 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused March 17, 1980.

A police officer designated as a qualified technician under the former s. 237 but who was not redesignated under this section, when many other technicians were, was not a qualified technician within the meaning of this section. Section 44(a) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, providing that a person acting under a former enactment shall continue to act, as if appointed under the new enactment, until another is appointed in his stead, could not apply in view of the designation under this section of other technicians: R. v. Schemenauer (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 573, 58 Sask. R. 244, 49 M.V.R. 205 (C.A.).

In R. v. Novis (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 275, 50 M.V.R. 1 (Ont. C.A.), s. 44 of the Interpretation Act was applied to find that the officer's original designation under former s. 237 was valid until his new designation became effective. There was, however, no evidence that another officer had been appointed in his stead.

By virtue of s. 7 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 a designation is valid although made prior to proclamation of this section. The effect of s. 7 is that the designation takes effect when the new provision is proclaimed in force: R. v. Janes (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 209, 7 M.V.R. (2d) 41, 81 N.S.R. (2d) 388 (C.A.).

The flaw in the designation of an officer which referred to him as a "qualified technician" when in fact he was qualified to take only breath samples and not blood samples did not affect the admissibility of his certificate in relation to analysis of breath samples: R. v. MacDonald (1986), 65 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 72, 46 M.V.R. 76 (P.E.I.S.C.), affd 39 C.C.C. (3d) 189, 7 M.V.R. (2d) 128, 67 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 1 (C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Janes (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 209, 7 M.V.R. (2d) 41, 81 N.S.R. (2d) 388 (C.A.).

Proof of designation of technician – If the designation by the Attorney-General of a breathalyzer officer as a "qualified technician" is sought to be proved by Gazette the publication must be before the Court; otherwise the officer's own evidence of his appointment being made and gazetted is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, sufficient: R. v. Leavitt (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 141, 16 C.R.N.S. 304 (Alta. S.C.).

Judicial notice must be taken of a designation made by the Attorney General and duly gazetted: R. v. Betts (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 562, 16 N.B.R. (2d) 317 (S.C.).

The qualified technician's viva voce evidence that he had been so qualified by the Attorney-General and his appointment had been gazetted establishes a rebuttable presumption of his position. In addition judicial notice may be taken that the Borkenstein breathalyzer is an approved instrument: R. v. Leblanc (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 525, 4 N.S.R. (2d) 29 (N.S.C.A.).

Production of an original letter of appointment purportedly signed by the Attorney-General is proof in the absence of any evidence to the contrary that the breathalyzer operator was a qualified technician: R. v. Baskier (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 552, 17 C.R.N.S.26 (Sask. C.A.).

Testimony by the breathalyzer operator that he was a qualified technician and production by him of a letter from the Attorney-General to that effect is sufficient proof in the absence of evidence to the contrary that he is a qualified technician. The designation need not be proved by production of the provincial Gazette containing the designation: R. v. Gettle (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 569 (B.C.C.A.).

The accused does not satisfy the evidential burden upon him to adduce evidence tending to negative the presumption of due appointment of the technician, which is raised by the Crown showing that the officer had acted in the requisite capacity, merely by cross-examination of the officer directed to show that the officer was unsure who had signed the letter notifying him of his appointment: R. v. Adams (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 469, 51 Sask. R. 161 (C.A.).

The statement in the technician's signed certificate as to his designation as a qualified technician by the Attorney-General is evidence of his official character: R. v. Evanson (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 275, [1973] 4 W.W.R. 137 (Man.C.A.); R. v. Novis (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 275, 50 M.V.R. 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Approved container – A vacutainer XF947 was an approved container within the meaning of para. (a), notwithstanding it was used approximately one year after the expiry date printed on the container by the manufacturer. Expert evidence established that the passing of the expiry date did not adversely affect the result of the blood tests: R. v. Roberts (1990), 25 M.V.R. (2d) 156 (Ont. Ct. (Prov. Div.)).

Approved instrument – It was held considering a technician's certificate issued pursuant to the former s. 237 that a statement in the technician's certificate that the breath sample was received into a "Borkenstein Breathalyzer, an approved instrument pursuant to section 237(6)" is sufficient proof that the instrument was approved even though the particular model number of the Borkenstein Breathalyzer was not specified in the certificate: R. v. Gorman (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 222, 15 N.B.R. (2d) 289 (S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Gilbert (1976), 31 C.C.C. (2d) 251 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Pedrotti (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 575n (B.C.S.C.); R. v. Gregorwich (1975), 27 C.C.C. (2d) 267, [1975] W.W.D. 170 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.). Contra: R. v. Foley (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 514 (Sask. Q.B.).

A breathalyzer Model 900A is an approved instrument notwithstanding that the instrument has been modified to eliminate the instrument's susceptibility to radio frequency interference. Minor alterations to improve an instrument's efficiency do not alter the kind of instrument approved. It is only evidence of a modification to the instrument which goes to the issue of the kind, nature or character of the breathalyzer that should create a reasonable doubt as to whether the particular breathalyzer remains in a class of approved instruments: R. v. Bebbington (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 456, 8 M.V.R. (2d) 151 (Ont. C.A.).

Subsec. (2) [Approved screening device demand] / Proof of reasonable suspicion –

The element of reasonable suspicion applies only to whether there is alcohol in the accused's body and not to operation or control. The latter element must be proved to exist in fact and not merely as a matter of reasonable suspicion on the part of the officer: R. v. Swietorzecki (1995), 97 C.C.C. (3d) 285, 80 O.A.C. 149, 11 M.V.R. (3d) 30 (C.A.).

There is no requirement that the officer apprehending the motorist administer the test. A second officer attending the scene subsequently, who forms the requisite belief, may make the demand and administer the test: R. v. Telford (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 322 (Alta. C.A.).

However, the officer who makes the demand must also formulate the opinion as to the adequacy of the sample provided by the motorist: R. v. Shea (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 497, 3 M.V.R. 134 (P.E.I.S.C.).

The test for making the demand is consumption of alcohol alone, and not its amount or behavioural consequence: R. v. Gilroy (1987), 3 M.V.R. (2d) 123, 79 A.R. 318 (C.A.) leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 87 N.R. 236n, 85 A.R. 160n.

Breath sample to be provided “forthwith” – The term “forthwith” suggests that the breath sample is to be provided immediately. Thus, a demand made by a police officer, who is without the device and requires half an hour for the device to arrive, does not satisfy the conditions of this subsection. Since the demand was invalid, the accused was under no obligation to comply with it and his failure to comply could not constitute an offence: R. v. Grant (1991), 67 C.C.C. (3d) 268, 7 C.R. (4th) 388, 5 C.R.R. (2d) 193 (S.C.C.).

The demand did not comply with this subsection where the officer did not have the screening device with him and had to take the accused to the detachment. A total of 14 minutes elapsed between the making of the demand and the time when the device was ready. For the sample to be provided “forthwith” it must be provided immediately, meaning very shortly after the accused has been requested to accompany the officer for the purpose of providing the sample, usually at the side of the road or in the immediate vicinity: R. v. Cote (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 280, 6 O.R. (3d) 667 (C.A.).

Where there is evidence that the officer knew that the suspect had recently consumed alcohol and expert evidence shows that the subsequent screening test would be unreliable due to the presence of alcohol in the mouth, and the officer knows that the resultant test will provide inaccurate results, then the fact that the suspect failed the test could not itself provide the requisite reasonable and probable grounds to make a demand under subsec. (3). However, the officer is not required to wait 15 minutes on each occasion that the officer makes the demand. It is only where the officer had reason to believe that, without waiting, the test may be inaccurate, that the officer needs to delay the administration of the test. Where the particular screening device used has been approved under the statutory scheme, the officer is entitled to rely on its accuracy unless there is credible evidence to the contrary: R. v. Bernshaw, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 254, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 35 C.R. (4th) 201.

The officer is entitled to delay taking the sample where there are grounds to believe that the delay is necessary to obtain accurate results, as where the suspect has recently consumed alcohol: R. v. Dewald; R. v. Pierman (1994), 92 C.C.C. (3d) 160, 19 O.R. (3d) 704, 73 O.A.C. 287 (C.A.), affd (R. v. Dewald) (1996), 103 C.C.C. (3d) 382, 26 O.R. (3d) 480n, 192 N.R. 237 (S.C.C.).

Although the officer did not have the device when he stopped the accused, it was brought to him in less than five minutes at which time the demand was made. This was a valid demand and therefore there was no need to inform the accused of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter: R. v. Misasi (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 339, 12 O.R. (3d) 232, 42 M.V.R. (2d) 12 (C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Higgins (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 232, [1994] 3 W.W.R. 305, 50 M.V.R. (2d) 24 (Man. C.A.).

The fact that the device was not on the person of the police officer or in his police vehicle when the demand was made or that he did not know the time frame for the arrival of the device does not necessarily take the demand outside subsec. (2). The determination of whether the test has been administered forthwith is not a question of the number of seconds which have elapsed from the time the demand was made to the time the test was administered but rather is a question of the circumstances of the case. It would seem that if the time between the demand and the administering of the test is more than 30 minutes then in most situations the demand would be invalid, but if there are no more than 30 minutes between the demand and administering of the test the court must examine the circumstances: R. v. Payne (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 144, 121 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 137, 5 M.V.R. (3d) 189 (Nfld. C.A.).

Proof of contemporaneity of operation or care or control – The demand may be made under this subsection although the officer forms the requisite suspicion only after the motorist has left the vehicle. The phrase “who is driving a motor vehicle” includes a person who “has been” driving and thus the demand may be made if the person was known to have been recently driving a vehicle: Letkeman v. The Queen (1983), 28 Sask. R. 307, 24 M.V.R. 273 (Q.B.); R. v. Cassidy (1987), 2 M.V.R. (2d) 136, 80 N.B.R. (2d) 85 (Q.B.). Contra: MacLellan v. The Queen (1984), 26 M.V.R. 234 (N.B.Q.B.).

Similarly, it was held that where there was only a momentary separation in time between the driving and contact with the police, the demand was properly made: R. v. Burkart (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 32, [1986] 1 W.W.R. 706 (Man. C.A.).

And where the accused was standing near his vehicle after having called a tow-truck and identified himself as the driver he was in immediate care and effective control so as to give the officer power to make a demand under this subsection: R. v. Drapeau (1985), 48 C.R. (3d) 185, 36 M.V.R. 58 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

The demand under this subsection was still valid where although the accused had stopped driving 15 minutes earlier he remained in the vehicle throughout that time: R. v. Johnson, [1987] 3 W.W.R. 765 (Man. C.A.).

While the words “is” and “has” must have some degree of past significance, the justifiable time lapse after the actual care and control has ended, and before the demand is made, should be no longer than is reasonably necessary to enable the police officer to carry out his duties under the provision. The demand should be made as soon as is reasonably possible in the circumstances; R. v. Campbell (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 502, 66 C.R. (3d) 150, 9 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.). However, a demand was properly made under this subsection where although it was made 25 minutes after the actual operation of the vehicle the accused had not relinquished care and control of the motor vehicle: R. v. Lackovic (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 80, 9 M.V.R. (2d) 229 (Ont. C.A.).

Validity of stop / random stops, R.I.D.E., etc. – The random stopping of a motor vehicle as part of a well-publicized programme to reduce impaired driving such as the R.I.D.E. programme is authorized at common law and therefore does not affect the validity of a demand made under this subsection once the officer forms the requisite suspicions: R. v. Dedman (1985), 20 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 46 C.R. (3d) 193, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 2 (4:3).

The random stopping of a motorist for the purposes of a spot check procedure, even if of relatively brief duration, results in a detention within the meaning of s. 9 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and such detention is arbitrary in violation of s. 9 where, although the stop is done pursuant to statutory [provincial] authority and for lawful purposes there are no criteria for the selection of the drivers to be stopped and subjected to the spot check procedure. However, the authorization of such stops by the provincial legislation is a reasonable limit within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter of Rights, having regard to the importance of highway safety and the role to be played in relation to it by a random stop authority for the purpose of increasing both the detection and the perceived risk of detection of motor vehicle offences, many of which cannot be detected by mere observation of driving. Finally, the demand by the police officer that the motorist surrender his driver's licence and proof of insurance for inspection as required by the provincial legislation does not infringe the motorist's right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure as guaranteed by s. 8 of the Charter: R. v. Hufsky (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 398, 63 C.R. (3d) 14, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 621 (7:0).

It was held that although there was no comparable legislation in Saskatchewan to the Ontario legislation considered in R. v. Hufsky, supra, the common law power to stop vehicles in the course of a checkpoint programme also constituted a reasonable limit on the right guaranteed by s. 9 of the Charter. Thus, evidence obtained as to the accused's blood-alcohol level following such a stop is admissible: R. v. Burke (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 434, 68 C.R. (3d) 73, 10 M.V.R. (2d) 44 (C.A.).

Further, even purely random stops, not part of an organized programme such as the R.I.D.E. programme, but permitted by provincial legislation and semble common law, are a reasonable limit on the s. 9 Charter rights where the stop is for a legal reason, such as to check the driver's licence and insurance, the driver's sobriety or the mechanical fitness of the vehicle: R. v. Ladouceur (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 22, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1257, 21 M.V.R. (2d) 165, 77 C.R. (3d) 110, 108 N.R. 171; R. v. Wilson (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 142, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1291, [1990] 5 W.W.R. 188, 77 C.R. (3d) 137, 108 N.R. 207.

Right to counsel under s. 10(b) of Charter – It was held that a motorist required to supply a breath sample under the predecessor to this subsection is detained within the meaning of s. 10 (b) of the Charter, but it is a reasonable limitation on the right to retain and instruct counsel as guaranteed by that provision that the motorist supply the breath sample without being entitled to consult counsel: R. v. Thomsen (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 411, 63 C.R. (3d) 1, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 640, 4 M.V.R. (2d) 185.

Although there is no obligation on the police to inform the motorist of his right to retain and instruct counsel under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, having done so, the police must then give the accused a reasonable opportunity to speak to counsel before requiring him to comply with the demand under this subsection: R. v. Belecque (1989), 13 M.V.R. (2d) 78 (Ont. Dist. Ct.).

The term “forthwith” does not mean “immediately”. While the test should be administered as soon as possible, a delay of perhaps 15 minutes to ensure that the officer can obtain a proper sample, as where the officer knows that the suspect has just recently consumed alcohol, is permissible. The suspect is not entitled to his or her rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter during this type of delay: R. v. Bernshaw (1995), 95 C.C.C. (3d) 193, [1995] 3 W.W.R. 457, 176 N.R. 81 (S.C.C.).

Where the demand is invalid as here because it was not that the accused provide the sample forthwith, it could not constitute a reasonable limit and the accused being detained should have been informed of his rights under s. 10(b): R. v. Grant, [1991] 3 S.C.R. 139, 67 C.C.C. (3d) 268, 7 C.R. (4th) 388.

Right to counsel – sobriety tests other than screening device demand – A motorist who is stopped and required to perform certain sobriety tests is detained within the meaning of s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, it was held in R. v. Saunders (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 532, 63 C.R. (3d) 37, 4 M.V.R. (2d) 199 (Ont. C.A.), that provincial legislation, which by necessary inference permitted a police officer to request performance of these tests to determine whether or not there were grounds for making a demand under this subsection, constituted a reasonable limit on the right of the accused to retain and instruct counsel and to be informed of that right prior to complying with the request to perform the sobriety tests. Like the test with the screening device, the coordination or sobriety tests must be performed quickly if the potential danger of impaired drivers is to be eliminated from the highways. A similar result was reached by the British Columbia Court of Appeal in R. v. Bonin (1989), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 230, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 31 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 50 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 102 N.R. 400n, considering slightly different provincial legislation. It was there held that the operating requirements of the provincial legislation, in particular a provision permitting a 24-hour roadside suspension, constituted a reasonable limit on the rights in s. 10(b) of the Charter. It should be noted that the British Columbia Court of Appeal had earlier held in R. v. Bonogofski (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 457, 4 M.V.R. (2d) 215, that an accused did have the right to be informed of his right to counsel under s. 10(b) before complying with a request to perform sobriety tests. However, as the court noted in R. v. Bonin it was not there asked to consider the effect of the provincial legislation and whether such legislation might constitute a reasonable limit on the s. 10(b) rights. Finally, in R. v. Gallant (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 329, 70 C.R. (3d) 139, 66 Alta. L.R. (2d) 165 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused February 22, 1990, the court noted that in Alberta there was no legislation comparable to that considered by the courts in Ontario and British Columbia and thus no limit prescribed by law within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter to justify the failure to inform the motorist of his right to retain and instruct counsel prior to complying with sobriety tests. The court also considered whether the common law could constitute such a limit but concluded that while the common law permitted the officer to request the sobriety test, the motorist was not bound to comply and no limit on the right to counsel necessarily flowed from the common law duty imposed on the police constable. There was no urgency and nothing to suggest that the sobriety test had to be performed at the scene or forthwith. However, in the particular case, the court held that the evidence obtained could be admitted since, inter alia, there was no evidence that the officer realized that he should advise the accused of his rights.

An accused required to participate in certain sobriety tests is detained within the meaning of s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and there being no common law, nor, in Nova Scotia, any statutory authority which could constitute a reasonable limit on the accused's rights as guaranteed by s. 10(b), the accused must be informed of his right to counsel before being required to do the tests: R. v. Baroni (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 553, 91 N.S.R. (2d) 295, 14 M.V.R. (2d) 186 (C.A.). A similar result was reached with respect to Prince Edward Island where, as well, it appears that there is no applicable legislation: R. v. Hill (1990), 25 M.V.R. (2d) 27, 86 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. (P.E.I.C.A.). However, the contrary result was reached in R. v. Sullivan (1989), 22 M.V.R. (2d) 261 (C.M.A.C.) where it was held that the common law power to investigate offences can, like the statutes in Ontario and British Columbia, constitute a reasonable limit prescribed by law within the meaning of s. 1 of the Charter and thus permit delay in informing the motorist of his right to counsel.

Effect of other Charter of Rights guarantees – Failure to show the accused the results of the test with the roadside screening device does not constitute a violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Tanner (1986), 41 M.V.R. 92 (N.S.C.A.).

This subsection does not violate the guarantee to fundamental justice under s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms despite the lack of criteria in the legislation for determining when the peace officer might reasonably suspect there is alcohol in the person's body. Nor does it authorize an unreasonable search and seizure in violation of s. 8 of the Charter: R. v. Broadhurst (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 27, 38 M.V.R. 35 (Ont. H.C.J.); R. v. Dawson (1986), 28 C.C.C. (3d) 46 (Alta. Q.B.). Contra: R. v. Ward (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 376, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 110 (P.E.I.S.C.).

Subsec. (3)(a) [Breath demand.] / Grounds for demand – The presumption of care or control under s. 258(1)(a) does not apply to this offence. The test to be applied as to whether the officer had a belief based on reasonable and probable grounds that the accused was in care or control and had committed an offence under s. 253 is an objective one. The officer may be justified because of the accused's position in the vehicle in believing that he was the driver. Such belief does not have to be established as correct provided it was reasonable: R. v. Trask (1987), 3 M.V.R. (2d) 6, 81 N.S.R. (2d) 376 (C.A.).

The reasonable and probable grounds do not have to be based upon the actual operation of a vehicle as the officer's observations of the motorist's condition may disclose the grounds to give him the necessary belief: R. v. Conway (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 233, 25 C.R.N.S.69 (P.E.I.S.C.). Further, such grounds may be based on information supplied by third parties, not necessarily fellow police officers, and the officer may testify as to the contents of the conversations which caused him to make the demand: R. v. Strongquill (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 232, 4 C.R. (3d) 182 (Sask. C.A.).

The motorist's failure to pass the test with the roadside screening device pursuant to subsec (2), itself constitutes grounds for the demand under this section. There is no requirement that the device be proved to have been operating properly: R. v. Arthurs (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 573, 25 C.R. (3d) 83 (Sask. C.A.); R. v. Beaudette (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 61, 8 Man. R. (2d) 433 (Co. Ct.); R. v. Hurley (1980), 29 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 263, 9 M.V.R. 46 (Nfld. C.A.); R. v. Yurechuk, [1983] 1 W.W.R. 460, 42 A.R. 176 (C.A.); R. v. Denney (1985), 34 M.V.R. 111 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.); or even that it is an approved instrument: R. v. Seymour (1986), 75 N.S.R. (2d) 174, 45 M.V.R. 132 (S.C. App. Div.).

Where the officer must have known that the screening device test results may be unreliable because he neither waited for 15 minutes nor determined when the accused had his last drink, then he could not have the requisite reasonable and probable grounds to make the breathalyzer demand: R. v. Bernshaw (1993), 85 C.C.C. (3d) 404, 48 M.V.R. (2d) 246, 47 W.A.C. 247 (B.C.C.A.), revd [1995] 1 S.C.R. 254, 95 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 35 C.R. (4th) 201.

Assuming that the taking of breath samples was a violation of s. 8 of the Charter because, at the time the demand was made, the officer did not have the requisite grounds to believe that the accused had committed an offence within the preceding two hours. Nevertheless, the evidence of analysis of the breath samples will be admitted where it is not shown that to admit the evidence would bring the administration of justice into disrepute. In this respect, a relevant consideration was that much of the delay was due to the accused having left the scene of the accident, rather than remaining and giving assistance as required by the Criminal Code and provincial legislation. The accused should not be allowed to profit from his own wrongdoing: R. v. Musurichan (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 570, 107 A.R. 102 (C.A.). [Also see notes under s. 258: Effect of absence of grounds for making demand.]

Validity of demand – A peace officer is only vested with the authority to make a demand in the territorial jurisdiction in which his appointment is effective: R. v. Soucy (1975), 23 C.C.C. (2d) 561, 11 N.B.R. (2d) 75 (S.C.App.Div.); R. v. Arsenault (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 38, 31 N.B.R. (2d) 365 (C.A.).

Even though a demand for blood samples has been made and complied with, if thereafter it became practicable to make a demand under this paragraph for breath samples, then such demand may properly be made and the results of analysis of the breath samples is admissible: R. v. Hiltz (1988), 4 M.V.R. (2d) 84, 82 N.S.R. (2d) 387 (C.A.).

Form of demand – It is unnecessary that the demand be in any particular form provided it is made clear to the accused that he has to give a sample of his breath: R. v. Nicholson (1970), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 170, 27 C.R.N.S. 346 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Flegel (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 55 (Sask. C.A.).

The demand under this subsection must be unequivocal and should not leave the accused with any doubt that he must comply, and that it is not a mere request or invitation: R. v. Boucher (1986), 73 N.B.R. (2d) 113, 47 M.V.R. 173 (Q.B.).

A demand that the accused supply "a sample" of his breath is a sufficient demand under this subsection despite the fact that the subsection refers to "such samples": R. v. Rentoul (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 78 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

Offence committed within preceding two hours – For a demand to be valid, the officer making the demand must form a belief within two hours of the time that he believes that an offence under s. 253 was committed. It is not necessary, however, that the demand be made within the two hour period or that the tests be performed within two hours: R. v. Pavel (1989), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 296, 74 C.R. (3d) 195 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Huchner (1989), 92 A.R. 395, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 37 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Goodyear (1988), 70 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 256 (Nfld. S.C.).

This subsection requires that the judge make two findings, the first being whether the police officer believed the accused had committed an offence within the past two hours and secondly whether he had reasonable and probable grounds to so believe: R. v. Rowland (1989), 14 M.V.R. (2d) 261 (Alta. C.A.).

Demand to be made "forthwith" – This subsection contemplates that the officer must be given a reasonable time to consider whether or not he will make a demand and accordingly imposes a duty on the motorist to remain in the presence of the officer until he has completed the duties imposed on him. Should the motorist flee before the officer has had an opportunity to make the demand, the motorist may be convicted of the offence contrary to s. 129: R. v. Quist (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 207, 11 Sask. R. 28 (C.A.).

Although the word "forthwith" means "within a reasonable time", the ensuing phrase "or as soon as practicable" should not be construed so as to cut down or restrict that word: R. v. MacGillivray (1971), 4 C.C.C. (2d) 244, [1971] 3 O.R.452 (Ont. C.A.).

Failure of police to conduct test – An officer's demand does not oblige the police to conduct a test and the failure to do so does not vitiate other evidence to prove a driving ability offence: R. v. Angelantoni (1975), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 179, 31 C.R.N.S. 342 (Ont. C.A.).

Constitutionality of provision – In a lengthy judgment which considered many of the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights it was held that the compulsory breath test did not offend the Bill and in particular did not offend the provisions with respect to self-crimination, due process and protection of the law: Curr v. The Queen (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 181, [1972] S.C.R. 889 (9:0).

Similarly, these provisions do not offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Altseimer (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 7, 29 C.R. (3d) 276 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Gaff (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 126, 36 Sask. R. 1 (C.A.) leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

Although this section gives the officer the right to detain the motorist for the purpose of complying with the demand, it is open to the officer to arrest the motorist pursuant to s. 495 and such arrest will not violate the accused's rights against arbitrary detention or imprisonment under s. 9 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms where it was not unreasonable to prevent a repetition or continuation of the offence: R. v. Cayer (1988), 6 M.V.R. (2d) 1, 66 C.R. (3d) 30 (Ont. C.A.), or for the accused's own safety: R. v. Faulkner (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 137 (B.C.C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Baker (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 165 (N.S.C.A.).

As to other cases respecting the effect of a police officer or police department policy to arrest all impaired drivers prior to having them comply with the demand under this subsection and whether an arrest in such circumstances violates s. 9 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, see notes under s. 495, infra.

Right to counsel under s. 10(b) of Charter / generally – In R. v. Therens (1985), 18 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 45 C.R. (3d) 97, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 613 (6:2) the court considered whether a motorist to whom a demand under this subsection is made is under detention within the meaning of s. 10(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Estey, J. (Beetz, Chouinard and Wilson JJ. concurring) held that when the police officers administered the breathalyzer test the motorist, who was not under arrest, was detained and accordingly prior to his complying with the demand, the police were required to inform him of his right to counsel. Le Dain J. (Dickson C.J.C., McIntyre and Lamer JJ. concurring on this issue) held that the motorist was under detention when the demand was made under this section to accompany the police officer and submit to a breathalyzer test. He was, accordingly, entitled at the time of his detention to be informed of his right to instruct counsel without delay. As the officers did not inform the accused of his rights under s. 10(b) and he did not consult counsel prior to providing breath samples the majority of the court held that the evidence subsequently obtained from the breathalyzer analysis was inadmissible at the accused's trial for the offence under s. 253(b).

Although breathalyzer evidence is statutorily compellable, its admission can affect the fairness of the trial. The scope of available legal advice in this context is necessarily limited, but it is improper to speculate about the nature of the advice that a detainee would have received and whether the evidence would have been obtained had the right not been infringed. The burden is on the Crown to show that the accused would not have acted any differently had his s. 10(b) rights been fully respected and that, accordingly, the evidence would have been obtained irrespective of the breach. There is sufficient scope for legal advice to a detainee who has received a breathalyzer demand to say that the courts must not speculate about the nature of that advice and whether it would have made any difference to the outcome of the case. One of the purposes of s. 10(b) is to provide detainees with an opportunity to make informed choices about their legal rights and obligations. This opportunity is no less significant when breathalyzer charges are involved: R. v. Bartle, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 173, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 33 C.R. (4th) 1; R. v. Pozniak, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 310, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 472, 33 C.R. (4th) 49.

It is not the case that every breach of the right to counsel will result in the exclusion of evidence obtained as a result of a breathalyzer demand. Where the words used by the officer, which were found to be a breach of s. 10(b), were uttered in an effort, in good faith, albeit misguided, to assist the accused in the exercise of his right before it was too late, then it was not shown that to admit the breathalyzer results would bring the administration of justice into disrepute: R. v. Marshall (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 130 (Ont. C.A.).

Once it was proved that the accused had been informed of his right to counsel and indicated he understood his rights, there was no obligation on the Crown to establish that he waived the right to consult counsel merely because he had not sought legal advice: R. v. Shannon (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 525, 58 C.R. (3d) 117, [1987] N.W.T.R. 214 (C.A.). Also see: R. v. Elgie (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 332, 48 M.V.R. 103 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused September 17, 1987. Similarly, see R. v. Baig (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 181, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 537 (7:0).

In R. v. Stein (1989), 14 M.V.R. (2d) 229 (B.C.C.A.), the court adopted the test approved by the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Baig (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 181, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 537, that absent proof of circumstances indicating that the accused did not understand his right to counsel when he was informed of it, the onus was on the accused to prove that he asked for the right but it was denied or he was denied any opportunity to even ask for it.

There is no burden on the Crown to establish that the accused was advised of his rights under s. 10 of the Charter, rather it is for the accused to put any alleged infringement in issue: R. v. Roach (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d) 262, 49 C.R. (3d) 237, 42 M.V.R. 231 (Alta. C.A.).

Right to counsel / duty to inform – The duty imposed upon the police under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is to inform the accused of his rights at a time when he was capable of understanding them and not to require the accused to provide potentially incriminating evidence prior to affording the accused a reasonable opportunity to make a reasoned choice to retain legal counsel. Thus the accused's rights under s. 10(b) were infringed where the police proceeded with the test under this paragraph at a time that the accused was so drunk that he could not understand what had been said to him: R. v. Mohl (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 435, 56 C.R. (3d) 318, [1987] 4 W.W.R. 31 (Sask.

C.A.), reversed on other grounds [see note below]; R. v. D. (P.A.), [1987] 6 W.W.R. 175, 58 Sask. R. 48 (C.A.), or where as a result of a concussion he was incapable of understanding his right to counsel: R. v. McAvena (1987), 34 C.C.C. (3d) 461, 56 C.R. (3d) 303, [1987] 4 W.W.R. 15 (Sask. C.A.).

Note: an appeal by the Crown was allowed in the case of R. v. Mohl (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 575, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1389, 69 C.R. (3d) 399 (9:0), the court holding that, assuming there had been a violation of s. 10(b), to admit the evidence of the results of the breathalyzer test would not bring the administration of justice into disrepute within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Charter. The court adopted the reasons of Sirois J. in the summary conviction appeal court. Sirois J. had held that it was not appropriate to grant a remedy to an accused who by his own actions has placed himself in a position of being unable to understand his rights under the Charter.

The delay in informing the accused of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter from the time the demand under this section was made until his arrival at the station was so inconsequential as to not warrant exclusion of the results of the breathalyzer test: R. v. Baccarday (1986), 44 M.V.R. 178 (N.S.C.A.).

The accused's right to be informed of his right to counsel under s. 10(b) was infringed where the information was given in English but the accused, to the knowledge of the officer, was French-speaking. The accused testified that he did not understand his right to counsel. Special circumstances existed requiring the officer to reasonably ascertain that the accused's rights were understood by him: R. v. Vanstaceghem (1987), 36 C.C.C. (3d) 142, 58 C.R. (3d) 121, 48 M.V.R. 311 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused's right to counsel is infringed where police inform him that he has the right to retain and instruct counsel without delay and then instruct him that he has the right to make only one telephone call, a statement with the detainee believes to be correct, and he thereupon makes one call which proves to be abortive and which he believes exhausts his right to further endeavour to contact counsel: R. v. Pavel, supra.

The accused, having been informed of his right to counsel in relation to the offence of dangerous driving for which he was arrested, need not again be informed of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms 10 minutes later, prior to the making of a breathalyzer demand under this paragraph: R. v. MacDonald (1986), 25 C.C.C. (3d) 572, 40 M.V.R. 46 (N.S.C.A.).

The officer, having advised the accused of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms before requiring that he comply with the demand to provide samples for analysis in the screening device, need not repeat the rights prior to requiring compliance with the breathalyzer demand: R. v. Scheuchel (1985), 32 M.V.R. 316 (Sask. Q.B.).

The two preceding cases should now be read in light of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in R. v. Black (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 1, [1989] 2 S.C.R. 138, 70 C.R. (3d) 97 (5:0), where the court held that s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms must be considered in light of s. 10(a) which requires the police to inform the detainee of the reason for the detention. A detainee can exercise her s. 10(b) rights in a meaningful way only if she knows the extent of her jeopardy and thus, the accused's rights under s. 10(b) were violated where she was initially arrested on a charge of attempted murder and not re-informed of her rights when the victim died and she was charged with first degree murder. The two charges were "significantly different".

However, in R. v. Schmautz (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 556, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 398, 75 C.R. (3d) 129, [1990] 3 W.W.R. 193, it was held that the accused's rights under s. 10(b) were not infringed in the following circumstances. The police informed the accused of his right to retain and instruct counsel and gave him the usual police caution after informing him that they were investigating an accident. The accused was not detained at that time. After several questions, the officers made a breathalyzer demand and the accused refused. While the accused was detained when the demand was made there was no requirement that he again be informed of his rights under s. 10(b). While there must be a close factual connection or linkage relating the warning to the detention and the reason therefor, here, by giving the accused both the police and Charter warnings at the outset of the short interview, the police alerted the accused that he was suspected and was being investigated in relation to a serious offence. The situation that arose with the breathalyzer demand was directly connected to the investigation. This was not a case where another more serious offence was suddenly being investigated because of changed circumstances external to the encounter. In this case, the demand arose directly and immediately out of the inquiry; it was part of a single incident at which the accused was fully made aware of his rights.

The accused having been informed of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter at the scene of an accident, following the making of a blood demand, he need not again be informed of his rights at the hospital, although the demand itself was repeated at that time: R. v. Scott (1991), 30 M.V.R. (2d) 42, 104 N.S.R. (2d) 112 (C.A.).

In R. v. Brydges (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 330, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 190, 74 C.R. (3d) 129, [1990] 2 W.W.R. 220, 103 N.R. 282 (7:0), a majority of the court, for the first time, laid down the rule that the police, as a matter of routine, must, as part of the duty to inform the accused of his right to counsel under s. 10(b), inform him of the availability of legal aid and duty counsel. Since this resulted in the imposition of a new duty on the police, a transition period of 30 days from the date of release of the judgment [February 1, 1990] was appropriate. The court left open the further question as to the effect this new caution will have on what constitutes due diligence, on the part of the accused, in the exercise of the right to counsel. The court noted, however, that the right to consult counsel of choice upon arrest or detention may now have to be considered, having regard to the immediate availability of duty counsel in most jurisdictions.

The detainee is entitled under the information component of s. 10(b) of the Charter to be advised of whatever system for free and immediate, preliminary legal advice exists in the jurisdiction at the time of detention and how such advice can be accessed: R. v. Pozniak, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 310, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 472, 33 C.R. (4th) 49.

Right to consult counsel in private – The right to privacy is inherent in the right to counsel as guaranteed by s. 10(b). The accused does not waive that right merely by acquiescing to conditions imposed by the police officer: R. v. Lepage (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 171, 54 C.R. (3d) 371, 44 M.V.R. 167 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Rudolph (1986), 32 C.C.C. (3d) 179, 73 A.R. 281, 44 M.V.R. 14 (Q.B.); R. v. Young (1987), 81 N.B.R. (2d) 233 (C.A.); R. v. McKane (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 58 C.R. (3d) 130, 49 M.V.R. 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Violation of the accused's right to consult counsel in private will not in every case require that evidence thereafter obtained must be excluded. Here, the accused followed the advice of his lawyer and complied with the demand. There was no reason to hold that anything had occurred which might result in an unfair trial: R. v. Olak (1990), 55 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 23 M.V.R. (2d) 1, 37 O.A.C. 304 (C.A.).

The right to privacy inherent in s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights is the right to consult counsel and does not necessarily start with the attempt to reach a lawyer: R. v. Standish (1988), 41 C.C.C. (3d) 340, 5 M.V.R. (2d) 239, 24 B.C.L.R. (2d) 323 (C.A.).

The private communication to which the detainee is entitled is not restricted to a communication with his lawyer and includes communication with any person to whom the detainee wishes to speak in the process of exercising his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. McNeilly (1988), 10 M.V.R. (2d) 142 (Y.T.S.C.).

Where the circumstances surrounding the giving of information to an accused with respect to his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter are such as to lead the accused to reasonably believe that he does not have the right to retain and instruct counsel in private or will not be given such right, and where such circumstances are known or ought to be known to the officer and the officer knows or ought to know the effect that such circumstances may reasonably have on the accused, there is a duty on the officer to explain to the accused that he has such right to privacy and that it will be given to him. Again, the failure to give such explanation constitutes a violation of s. 10(b): R. v. Jackson (1993), 86 C.C.C. (3d) 233, 25 C.R. (4th) 265, 48 M.V.R. (2d) 277 (Ont. C.A.).

Opportunity to consult counsel – Section 10(b) does not create a constitutional obligation on governments to ensure that free and immediate, preliminary legal advice is available to all detainees: R. v. Matheson, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 328, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 434, 33 C.R. (4th) 136. Nevertheless, where a detainee has indicated a desire to exercise his right to counsel, the state is required to provide him with a reasonable opportunity to do so. During this period, state agents must refrain from eliciting incriminating evidence from the detainee until he has had a reasonable opportunity to reach counsel. The police are obliged to “hold off” from attempting to elicit criminatory evidence from the detainee until he has had a reasonable opportunity to reach counsel. While there may be compelling and urgent circumstances in which despite a detainee’s being unable to contact a lawyer due to the unavailability of duty counsel, police will not be required to hold off in requiring the detainee to comply with a breathalyzer demand, as the existence of the two-hour evidentiary presumption available to the Crown under s. 258(1)(c)(ii) does not by itself constitute such a compelling or urgent circumstance. Urgency is not created by a mere investigatory and evidentiary expediency in circumstances where duty counsel is unavailable to detainees who have asserted their desire to contact a lawyer and have been duly diligent in exercising their rights: R. v. Prosper, [1994] 3 S.C.R. 236, 92 C.C.C. (3d) 353, 33 C.R. (4th) 85.

Police officers making an arrest in a potentially volatile situation may be justified in denying the detainee the right then and there to call counsel in order to prevent any new factors from entering the situation. Once the police are clearly in control of the situation, however, they must afford the accused an opportunity to contact counsel in private: R. v. Taylor (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 152, 95 N.S.R. (2d) 282 (N.S.C.A.).

For a comprehensive review of the case law respecting the duty to inform the accused of his rights without delay and the circumstances where the evidence will be excluded pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter, see: R. v. Dubois (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 166, 74 C.R. (3d) 216, 22 M.V.R. (2d) 154 (Que. C.A.).

The refusal of the police to permit the accused’s lawyer into the breathalyzer room to observe the administering of the test does not constitute a denial of the right to counsel as guaranteed by s. 10(b) of the Charter: R. v. Atchison (1991), 68 C.C.C. (3d) 241 (B.C.S.C.).

Subsec. (3)(b) [blood demand] – For a demand to be valid under this paragraph, the officer making the demand must have formed a belief within two hours of the time that he believes that an offence under s. 253 was committed. It is not necessary, however, that the demand be made within the two hour period or that the tests be performed within two hours: R. v. Deruelle (1992), 75 C.C.C. (3d) 118, [1992] 2 S.C.R. 663, 15 C.R. (4th) 215. Nor is it necessary that the officer have formed a belief before the expiration of the two hour period that one of the preconditions within subpara. (1) or (ii) existed. Thus, a demand will be valid under this paragraph where, having formed the belief that the accused committed an offence under s. 253 within the preceding two hours, the officer first makes a demand for breath samples but later finds it to be impossible or impracticable to obtain a breath sample and therefore then makes a demand for blood samples, even if this latter demand is made after expiration of the two hour period: R. v. Pavel, supra; R. v. Gale (1991), 13 W.C.B. (2d) 408 (Nfld. C.A.).

It is the officer making the demand who must have formed the belief as to the commission of the offence within the two hour period. Where, initially, a breath demand was made which could not be complied with, a subsequent blood demand by another officer was invalid where this latter officer had no belief that the offence under s. 253 had been committed within the preceding two hours: R. v. Pavel, supra.

A demand for a blood sample was properly made where the motorist, although willing to take a breathalyzer test, had sustained a head injury, was receiving treatment in a hospital and the officer was concerned that the two hour limit would expire before the treatment was completed. The words “any physical condition of the person” give the officer a wide discretion to determine the practicability or capability of the motorist to provide a breath sample: R. v. Wytliuk (1989), 17 M.V.R. (2d) 18 (Man. Q.B.).

A demand made under this paragraph must make reference to the conditions set out in subsec. (4), namely that the samples of blood may only be taken by demand if the samples are taken by or under the direction of a qualified medical practitioner and the practitioner is satisfied that the taking of those samples will not endanger the life or health of the person: R. v. Green (1992), 70 C.C.C. (3d) 285, 11 C.R. (4th) 196, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 614. On the other hand, the officer need not obtain the prior approval of the medical practitioner before making the demand: R. v. Green (1990), 60 C.C.C. (3d) 362, 25 M.V.R. (2d) 281 (N.S.C.A.).

The failure of the officer to make reference to the conditions set out in subsec. (4) did not however effect the admissibility of the results of the blood sample which were taken pursuant to the demand: R. v. Langdon (1992), 74 C.C.C. (3d) 570, 40 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (Nfld. C.A.). Similarly: R. v. Brown (1991), 69 C.C.C. (3d) 139, 107 N.S.R. (2d) 349, 35 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (N.S.C.A.).

An accused, who has been involved in a motor vehicle accident and taken to the hospital because of his serious injuries, is detained within the meaning of s. 10(b) of the Charter when a demand is made by a police officer under this paragraph that he consent to the taking of blood samples. While any actual physical restraint arose from his injuries, there was a detention from the psychological compulsion of the demand: R. v. Harder (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 565, 14 M.V.R. (2d) 205 (B.C.C.A.).

A motorist, confined to hospital as a result of injuries received in the motor vehicle accident under investigation, is not detained when the officer merely asks some questions at the beginning of the investigation. He is only detained when the demand for a blood sample was made and it was only then that he was entitled to be informed of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter: R. v. Kay (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 500 (B.C.C.A.).

The demand under this paragraph need not be made in the presence of the qualified medical practitioner. Further, the word “impracticable” in subpara. (ii) does not mean impossible and connotes a degree of reason and involves some regard for practice: R. v. Pearce (1988), 56 Man. R. (2d) 77, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 116 (Q.B.).

Where a proper demand for a blood sample has been made and the accused has complied, there is no further requirement of proof that the accused “consented” to the taking of the sample: R. v. Knox (1995), 39 C.R. (4th) 362, 13 M.V.R. (3d) 291 (Que. C.A.).

Subsec. (5) [Failure to comply with A.L.E.R.T. demand under subsec. (2).] – The Crown is not required to prove that the device which would have been used, had there been no refusal, was an approved device: R. v. Reimer (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 127, 4 M.V.R. 270 (Sask. Q.B.). R. v. Lemieux (1990), 24 M.V.R. (2d) 157, 41 O.A.C. 326 (C.A.).

The criminalization of the refusal to comply with the demand under subsec. (2) is a reasonable limit on the rights guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Foster (1989), 8 W.C.B. (2d) 144 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused January 18, 1990.

Subsec. (5) [Failure to comply with breath demand.] / Elements of offence – This subsection creates the single offence of non-compliance which may be committed either by failure or refusal, and it is immaterial whether or not a breathalyzer machine was available at the time of the demand: R. v. Kitchemonia (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 225, [1973] 5 W.W.R. 669 (Sask. C.A.).

This subsection creates only one offence, the gravamen of which is non-compliance with a demand, not two offences of “fails” or “refuses” and the word “refuses” is fully comprised in the word "fails": R. v. Gesner (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 252, 24 N.B.R. (2d) 468 (C.A.).

Similarly, the offence may be committed by either refusing to accompany the officer or refusing to supply breath samples and the Crown need only show the offence of refusing to comply with the demand was committed in either one of these modes even though both modes are set out in the information. The additional averment in the information is mere surplusage: R. v. MacNeil (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 46 (Ont. C.A.); B.C. (Attorney General) (Re), [1980] 3 W.W.R. 193 (B.C.S.C.).

The word "refuses" is fully comprised within the word "fails" and thus a verbal refusal to take the test will support a conviction on an information charging that the accused failed to comply: R. v. Gesner (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 252 (N.B. C.A.).

As the combined effect of this section and subsec. 258(1) has been held to require that at least two samples be taken, an accused who refuses to give more than one sample may be convicted of the offence under this subsection and it is no defence to such a charge that the technician considered the first sample satisfactory: R. v. Faulkner (No. 2) (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 217 (N.S. Co. Ct.); R. v. Hatt (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 442 (N.B. C.A.); R. v. Quiring (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 51, 7 C.R. (3d) 180, [1979] 2 W.W.R. 381 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Boswell (1978), 44 C.C.C. (2d) 356 (P.E.I.S.C.); R. v. Hazzard (1978), 51 C.C.C. (2d) 344 (N.W.T.C.A.); R. v. Giroux, supra.

Charging offence – An information which, although it omits the words "without reasonable excuse", is otherwise in the words of the section and sets out the proper section number of the offence, is not defective: R. v. Cote (1977), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 752 (8:0) (S.C.C.).

Change of mind – An offer by an accused to provide a breath sample after consulting his counsel is not a defence to this charge where the accused made two clear and unconditional refusals without giving any reason for refusing: R. v. McGauley (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 419, [1974] 5 W.W.R. 577 (B.C.C.A.). But compare Jumaga v. The Queen, supra, where it was held on the facts that a first refusal really constituted a request to consult counsel and it was so treated by the police and was therefore itself not sufficient to sustain the charge.

In determining whether an accused, who initially refused and later changed his mind, is guilty of this offence, the court ought not to minutely dissect a single conversation or take a single sentence out of context. It would seem that whether there has been a refusal depends on consideration of all the circumstances of each individual case, including the time elapsed and whether it can be said that the deceased's offer to take the test was severable from his earlier words to the contrary: R. v. Cunningham (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 521, 97 A.R. 81, 16 M.V.R. (2d) 181 (C.A.).

The requirement that the accused "comply" with the demand must be read as requiring compliance within a reasonable time, not necessarily forthwith. Where the accused initially refused to accompany the technician but later, within the two-hour period, offered to comply after consultation with a lawyer, the charge was not made out: R. v. Brotton (1983), 24 M.V.R. 76, 28 Sask. R. 78 (C.A.).

Proof of refusal – Since the section simply speaks of a refusal, and not a final or complete refusal the offence is established once the motorist refuses to provide his breath sample regardless of whether or not he changes his mind within the two-hour period: R. v. Rowe (1974), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 24, [1973] 3 W.W.R. 400 (B.C.C.A.).

Where the original refusal was not unequivocal and was closely followed by an offer to provide a sample then the offence is not made out: R. v. Sagh (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 299, [1981] 6 W.W.R. 370 (Alta. Q.B.).

Where, however, the accused unequivocally refuses and only changes his mind 15 minutes later, at which time the technician advised him that it was too late, the charge was made out. The two events were sufficiently separate as to constitute different transactions: R. v. Butt (1983), 23 M.V.R. 273, 44 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 297 (Nfld. C.A.).

The accused was properly convicted of this offence where, prior to speaking to his lawyer, he told the officer he would not comply with the demand. After speaking to his lawyer, the accused did nothing to disabuse the officer of the view that he was refusing and in those circumstances his conditional refusal became unconditional by his own silence: R. v. Sullivan (1991), 65 C.C.C. (3d) 541, 32 M.V.R. (2d) 92, 1 W.A.C. 312 (B.C.C.A.).

The words of refusal need not be proved voluntary and therefore there is no necessity to hold a voir dire to determine the voluntariness of such utterance: R. v. Gallaher (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 191 (B.C. Co. Ct.); R. v. Stapleton (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 231, 26 C.R. (3d) 361, 134 D.L.R. (3d) 239 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Zerebeski (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 284, 26 C.R. (3d) 365, 14 M.V.R. 282 (Sask. Q.B.).

Once the accused supplies breath samples, expert evidence is required to establish that the samples were not sufficient to enable a proper analysis to be made. The evidence of the arresting officer, who was not a technician, that in her opinion the accused was “pretending to blow” and was “not blowing hard enough” is not sufficient to prove the offence: R. v. Schimpf (1980), 7 M.V.R. 161 (Alta. C.A.).

It is a question of fact whether or not the accused blew adequately or whether there is some other explanation for the accused’s failure to provide adequate sample, namely, that the breathalyzer was not operating properly. The Crown is not as a matter of law required to prove that the breathalyzer was in working order: R. v. Leveque (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 559, 37 M.V.R. 166 (B.C.C.A.).

Violation of right to counsel generally – Where the accused immediately refuses after the demand was made and before he was given his rights under s. 10(b) of the Charter, then he should be informed of his right to counsel, that he was not bound by his earlier answers and that it was open to the accused to change his mind and consult counsel if he so wished: R. v. MacIsaac (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 239, 72 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 220 (P.E.I.S.C.).

However, compare R. v. Cote (1988), 8 M.V.R. (2d) 256, 87 N.B.R. (2d) 190 (C.A.), where it was held that while the accused’s refusal was not irrevocable in such circumstances, evidence of the refusal was properly admitted where the accused was advised of her right to counsel, subsequently was given an opportunity to speak to a lawyer and never made a request to take the test. The court was divided on whether, since the original refusal is not irrevocable, the accused should be given another demand.

Also see R. v. Shaw (1988), 4 M.V.R. (2d) 292, 82 N.S.R. (2d) 407 (C.A.), admitting evidence of a refusal notwithstanding breach of the accused’s rights under s. 10(b) because he was not read his rights to counsel until after the refusal. The court described the breach as inadvertent and noted that the accused did not at that time purport to exercise his right to counsel.

Where the act of refusal occurred after the time when the accused should have been informed of his right to counsel under s. 10(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that is, immediately upon the making of the demand, then the accused’s rights under s. 10(b) have been infringed and the evidence of the refusal must be excluded under s. 24(2). It must be assumed that had the accused consulted counsel he would have complied with the demand: R. v. Phillips; R. v. Reid (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 60, 50 C.R. (3d) 315, 42 M.V.R. 186 (Alta. C.A.).

Brownridge v. The Queen (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 417, 18 C.R.N.S.308 (6:3) (S.C.C.), decided the issue whether or not the fact that the police would not allow a suspected impaired motorist to contact his lawyer for advice after their demand for his breath sample was a “reasonable excuse” for his refusal to comply. In the first majority judgment, per Ritchie, J. (Fauteux, C.J.C., Martland and Spence, JJ., concurring), it was held that as there was a genuine reason for the motorist to seek legal advice it would run contrary to s. 2(c)(ii) (the right of a detained person to instruct counsel without delay) of the Bill of Rights to hold that the withholding of that right from him was incapable of constituting a reasonable excuse for him to provide a breath sample. In the second majority judgment Laskin, J. (Hall, J., concurring), held that s. 2 of the Bill of Rights enjoins a construction upon former s. 235 that would infringe any right recognized under the Bill of Rights and if efforts to reach counsel expend the time beyond the two-hour-limitation period primacy must be given the protection accorded by the Bill of Rights over the statutory rule of evidence under s. 258(1)(c)(ii). Moreover, denial of right to counsel does not constitute a "reasonable excuse" rather this right exists independently of those words and its denial vitiates a conviction for this offence. Pigeon, J. (Abbott and Judson, JJ., concurring) dissenting, was of the opinion that regardless of whether or not the suspected motorist was under arrest the denial of his request for counsel was not to be a reasonable excuse for him to refuse to provide his breath sample.

Where a demand is made under subsec. (3) and the accused is not advised of his rights under s. 10(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms then he has a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the demand: R. v. Mackinnon (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 264, 47 C.R. (3d) 1, 34 M.V.R. 45 (P.E.I. C.A.).

Denial of the right to counsel is not a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the demand. Where, however, the accused proves that his right to counsel was violated then he would be entitled to an exclusion of evidence of the refusal if the accused can prove that to admit evidence would bring the administration of justice into disrepute within the meaning of s. 24(2) of the Charter. Since the onus is on the accused to establish the violation on a balance of probabilities, merely raising a reasonable doubt as to whether his right to counsel had been violated would not be sufficient: R. v. Williams (1992), 78 C.C.C. (3d) 72, 17 C.R. (4th) 277, 42 M.V.R. (2d) 212 (Ont. C.A.).

Where an accused, who has been given an opportunity to contact a lawyer but is unable to do so after repeated attempts through no fault of the police, refuses to provide a breath sample he does not have a reasonable excuse for his refusal. The accused in such circumstances has not been deprived of his right to obtain counsel and there is no positive obligation on the police to secure counsel on his behalf: R. v. MacDonald (1974), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 351 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Drouin (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 18, 7 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 107 (P.E.I.S.C.).

The accused's rights were violated when he was charged with refusal despite repeated unsuccessful attempts to reach a lawyer. The accused refused to comply with the demand until he spoke to a lawyer. He had been diligent in asserting his right and there was no urgency, the demand having been made only 45 minutes after he was arrested: R. v. Dunnett (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 14, 26 M.V.R. (2d) 194, 111 N.B.R. (2d) 67 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 62 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 29 M.V.R. (2d) 87n, 116 N.B.R. (2d) 450n.

Where the accused, a visitor from out of the province, was unable to contact her lawyer because it was not possible to make long-distance telephone calls on the only telephone available, she had a reasonable excuse for refusing the demand: R. v. Hogan (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 149, 11 C.R. (3d) 328 (N.S.C.A.).

The refusal of the police to first await the motorist's lawyer's attendance before administering the breathalyzer test following a consultation on the telephone is not a reasonable excuse for the motorist to refuse to take the test: R. v. Bond (1973), 14 C.C.C. (2d) (497), 24 C.R.N.S.273 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Kavanagh (1981), 62 C.C.C. (2d) 518, 25 C.R. (3d) 171 (B.C.S.C.); R. v. Giroux (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 24 C.R. (3d) 101 (Que. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit.

The accused's right to counsel was infringed where he was not given an opportunity to speak to a lawyer after the first lawyer he called, whose name was drawn from a list of lawyers supplied by the police showed no interest in his "plight": R. v. Goodine (1989), 97 A.R. 102, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 330 (C.A.).

Where the accused was informed of his right to counsel and given a reasonable opportunity to counsel, his inability to speak to his lawyer, which he did not communicate to the police, did not constitute a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the demand. Without any request on the part of the accused for more time to consult counsel, the police were entitled to conclude that the accused had refused without reasonable excuse: R. v. Ferron (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 432, 16 M.V.R. (2d) 15 (B.C.C.A.).

Inability to consult in private – Prior to complying with the demand made under subsec. (3) the motorist has the right to consult counsel in private. Failure to permit private consultation is a breach of s. 10(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and may require a remedy such as a stay of proceedings of a charge of refusing to comply with the demand: R. v. Porter (1985), 46 C.R. (3d) 232, 34 M.V.R. 239 (Sask. Q.B.).

As indicated in the cases noted under s. 254(3), supra, it has been held that under s. 10(b) of the Charter of Rights, the right to consult with counsel in private is inherent in the right and there need not be any request for privacy. Nevertheless, it was held in R. v. Young (1987), 38 C.C.C. (3d) 452, 6 M.V.R. (2d) 295, 81 N.B.R. (2d) 233 (C.A.), that having regard to all the circumstances the trial judge did not err in refusing to exclude under s. 24(2) of the Charter the evidence of the accused's refusal notwithstanding the violation of s. 10(b) by reason of the failure of the police officer to move out of earshot. The court did not consider whether the breach of s. 10(b) provided the accused with a reasonable excuse. Also see: R. v. Dempsey (1987), 77 N.S.R. (2d) 284, 46 M.V.R. 179 (C.A.).

The right to consult with counsel includes the right to do so in privacy. The failure of the police to comply with a request for privacy constitutes a denial of the right to counsel and therefore a reasonable excuse to refuse to comply with the demand: R. v. Penner (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 468, 22 C.R.N.S. 35 (Man. C.A.).

But the right to consult in privacy, while requiring that the consultation be out of hearing of other persons, need not be out of sight of other persons: R. v. Walkington (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 553, [1974] 6 W.W.R. 117 (Sask. C.A.); R. v. Doherty (1974), 16 C.C.C. (2d) 494, 25 C.R.N.S. 289 (N.S. C.A.); R. v. Holmes (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 471, 40 O.R. (2d) 707, 18 M.V.R. 92 (C.A.).

That an enclosed glass booth in the police station may not be absolutely soundproof does not establish that a conversation carried on within it between the accused and his lawyer can be overheard. The test to be applied in determining whether the accused's right to consult in private has been complied with is whether the accused was afforded such privacy as would permit a discussion without fear of being overheard: R. v. Miller (1990), 1 C.R. (4th) 57, 25 M.V.R. (2d) 170, 87 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 55 (Nfld. C.A.).

Reasonable excuse / legal advice – An accused's statement that "My lawyer advised me not to take the test" in response to the making of a breathalyzer demand was a refusal within this subsection: R. v. Hurley (1980), 29 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 263, 9 M.V.R. 46 (Nfld. C.A.).

The police officer's refusal to permit the accused's lawyer to verify the results of the first breathalyzer test does not constitute a reasonable excuse, nor does the accused's mistaken belief, based on the advice of the lawyer, that it would constitute a reasonable excuse: R. v. Giroux (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 555, 24 C.R. (3d) 101 (Que. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 40 N.R. 142n.

A motorist's mistaken belief, based on an erroneous judgment of a Provincial Court Judge, that a police officer had no right to make the demand is not a reasonable excuse: R. v. MacIntyre (1983), 24 M.V.R. 67 (Ont. C.A.).

Reasonable excuse / grounds for demand – It is not a "reasonable excuse" for refusing to provide a breath sample that the accused is subsequently acquitted of the charge under former s. 234 [now s. 253], where the demand for the breath sample was lawfully made and the offence under this subsection is otherwise established. "Reasonable excuse" refers to matters which stand outside of the requirements which must be met (i.e., those under subsec. (3)(a)) before a charge can be supported under this subsection: R. v. Taraschuk (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 108, 30 C.R.N.S. 321 (9:0) (S.C.C.). Note, this case overrules: R. v. Canstone (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 539, 15 C.R.N.S. 125, [1971] 5

W.W.R. 191 (B.C.S.C.) and R. v. Mitchell (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 12, [1973] 3 W.W.R. 644 (B.C.S.C.).

While it is a defence to a charge under this subsection that the officer did not have reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the accused had committed an offence under former s. 234 [now s. 253]: R. v. MacDonald (1974), 22 C.C.C. (2d) 350 (N.S. C.A.), to sustain the charge there need not be direct evidence from the officer that he had such a belief. Rather, the existence of the necessary belief can be inferred by the Court: R. v. Fraelic (1977), 36 C.C.C. (2d) 473 (N.S. Co. Ct.); R. v. Blanchette (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 205 (Alta. Dist. Ct.).

It does not constitute a reasonable excuse to refuse to comply with the demand that the officer had no grounds for initially stopping the accused and only formed the requisite belief that the accused had committed an offence under former s. 234 [now s. 253] after the accused had been stopped for a routine check: R. v. Warford (1981), 61 C.C.C. (2d) 489, 11 M.V.R. 198 (Nfld. C.A.).

Reasonable excuse / offer of blood sample – An offer to provide a blood sample in lieu of a breath sample is not a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the demand under subsec. (3)(a): R. v. Wall (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 146, [1974] 5 W.W.R. 634 (Sask. C.A.); R. v. Weir (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d) 538, 120 N.S.R. (2d) 256, 42 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.); R. v. Richardson (1993), 80 C.C.C. (3d) 287, 42 M.V.R. (2d) 261, 62 O.A.C. 393 (C.A.); R. v. Taylor (1993), 43 M.V.R. (2d) 240, 39 W.A.C. 201 (B.C.C.A.).

Where, however, the accused's offer to supply a blood sample is taken up and it is not made clear to him that this is not a suitable alternative to complying with the demand the accused had a reasonable excuse to refuse: Sask. (Attorney General) v. Chrun, [1973] 5 W.W.R. 611 (Sask. Dist. Ct.); R. v. Larkin (1979), 27 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 284, 4 M.V.R. 149 (P.E.I.S.C.).

Reasonable excuse / impairment – Establishment that the defendant's mind was so affected by alcohol or a drug that he could not grasp the demand at all would constitute a reasonable excuse for non-compliance: R. v. Laybolt (1974), 17 C.C.C. (2d) 16, 6 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 85 (P.E.I.S.C.). Contra: R. v. Warnica (1980), 56 C.C.C. (2d) 100, 42 N.S.R. (2d) 108 (C.A.), where it was held that once it was shown that the accused appeared to understand the demand a rebuttable presumption arose that he intended the natural consequences of his own conduct which however may not be rebutted by testimony from the accused that he was too drunk to understand the demand. Further, lack of understanding is not a reasonable excuse.

Reasonable excuse / physical disability – In R. v. Nadeau (1974), 19 C.C.C. (2d) 199, 8 N.B.R. (2d) 703 (N.B.C.A.), Hughes, C.J.N.B., expressed the view that "the 'reasonable excuse' envisaged must be some circumstance which renders compliance with the demand either extremely difficult or likely to involve a substantial risk to the health of the person on whom the demand has been made".

The physical inability of the accused to take the test is a reasonable excuse within this subsection notwithstanding the inability is the result of the voluntary consumption of alcohol: R. v. Henderson (1976), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 40 (Ont. Co. Ct.).

The defence of reasonable excuse should not be confined to matters in the mind of the accused, to the exclusion of dangerous conditions not fully known or recognized by the accused. The defence should include rare situations where there is a reason at the time not to make the demand or to require compliance under threat of prosecution, but that reason is not fully known, either to the investigating officer or to the suspect. There is a reasonable excuse where both police and the accused have been seriously misled by mistaken medical diagnosis on a matter so fundamental to the interests of both. In this case, even though the accused was unaware of the exact nature of his injury, he did know that he was injured, perhaps seriously, and consequently, on the advice of counsel, he refused to comply with the police request until he was examined by a physician whom he knew and trusted. The accused had been examined briefly by a physician who advised the police that the accused was fit to comply with the demand. In fact, the accused had a very serious spinal injury and had he complied with the demand, he might well have become paralyzed. The fact that the accused was unaware of the specific danger to which he was exposed was no basis for a conclusion that he was not fearful for his safety and not justified in accepting the advice of his lawyer: R. v. Moser (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 165, 13 C.R. (4th) 96, 7 O.R. (3d) 737 (C.A.).

Reasonable excuse / generally – The accused's belief that the results of the breathalyzer test would be inaccurate is not a reasonable excuse to refuse to comply with the demand. The accused must rely on the safeguard in s. 258(1) (c) which permits "evidence to the contrary" to rebut the presumption, which arises from the results of the breathalyzer test, taken pursuant to a demand under subsec. (3) that the blood alcohol reading from the breathalyzer is the same as at the time of the offence: R. v. Campbell (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 570, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 507 (Alta. C.A.) (2:1).

The accused's sincere belief that the results would be inaccurate, because he had consumed alcohol after driving is not a reasonable excuse: R. v. Roy (1979), 11 C.R. (3d) 178, 2 M.V.R. 293 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Dunn (1980), 8 M.V.R. 198 (B.C.C.A.).

Anxiety caused by accurate information supplied at the accused's request by the police officer as to the penalty for a second conviction for a drinking and driving offence (including information that a jail term would also result for a conviction under this subsection) is not a reasonable excuse: R. v. Broda (1983), 21 M.V.R. 85, 22 Sask. R. 239 (C.A.).

An extremely helpful review of the various factors which could constitute a "reasonable excuse" is found in the decision of the Court in R. v. Phinney (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 81 (N.S.C.A.) where the majority of the Court concluded that the accused's honest belief based on reasonable grounds that the particular breathalyzer machine might not be functioning properly was a reasonable excuse to refuse to comply with the demand. The Court emphasized, however, that this fear must be based on objective evidence.

Thus the accused's fear that, because he was on medication, the results would be inaccurate is not a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the demand: R. v. Frohwerk (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 214 (Man. C.A.).

Where the accused was to be taken 100 miles away for the breathalyzer test where he would be effectively stranded with no way to get home and no place to stay it was held that he had a reasonable excuse as contemplated by this subsection: R. v. Iron (1977), 35 C.C.C. (2d) 279 (Sask. Q.B.).

A possible financial loss for the accused if he were required to leave his vehicle and accompany the officer is not a reasonable excuse. In this case the accused claimed that he needed to remain with his truck to clean up the spilled cargo of fish otherwise there was risk that the cargo would be condemned resulting in a substantial financial loss: R. v. Gidney (1987), 7 M.V.R. (2d) 90, 81 N.S.R. (2d) 404 (C.A.).

Grounds of compassion, in this case the accused's desire to go to the hospital when he learned that his nephew who was at the hospital was in serious condition, do not constitute grounds for refusing to comply with the demand: R. v. Heim (1989), 98 N.S.R. (2d) 447, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 301 (C.A.).

A genuine religious belief is not an excuse for refusal to provide a breath sample: R. v. Chomokowski (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 562, [1973] 5 W.W.R. 184 (Man. C.A.).

The accused had a reasonable excuse for refusing to comply with the demand because of her concern about sanitation when the officer gave her an unwrapped mouthpiece: R. v. Pittendreigh (1994), 83 W.A.C. 169, 162 A.R. 169, 9 M.V.R. (3d) 236 (C.A.).

Right to production – Failure to provide the accused with the mouthpiece he used in his attempt to blow into the breathalyzer did not violate the accused's rights under s. 7. It was highly improbable that a broken mouthpiece would not have been detected by even a brief inspection: R. v. Mayer (1989), 16 M.V.R. (2d) 174 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

Multiple convictions – The offences under this section and under s. 253(a) constitute separate and distinct acts or delicts and therefore the accused may be convicted of both offences though they arise out of one incident: R. v. Schilbe (1976), 30 C.C.C. (2d) 113 (Ont. C.A.).

PUNISHMENT / Impaired driving causing bodily harm / Impaired driving causing death / Previous convictions / Conditional discharge.

255. (1) Every one who commits an offence under section 253 or 254 is guilty of an indictable offence or an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable,

- (a) whether the offence is prosecuted by indictment or punishable on summary conviction, to the following minimum punishment, namely,
  - (i) for a first offence, to a fine of not less than three hundred dollars,
  - (ii) for a second offence, to imprisonment for not less than fourteen days, and
  - (iii) for each subsequent offence, to imprisonment for not less than ninety days;
- (b) where the offence is prosecuted by indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; and
- (c) where the offence is punishable on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.

(2) Every one who commits an offence under paragraph 253(a) and thereby causes bodily harm to any other person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years.

(3) Every one who commits an offence under paragraph 253(a) and thereby causes the death of any other person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

(4) Where a person is convicted of an offence committed under paragraph 253(a) or (b) or subsection 254(5), that person shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be convicted for a second or subsequent offence, as the case may be, if the person has previously been convicted of

- (a) an offence committed under any of those provisions;
- (b) an offence under subsection (2) or (3); or
- (c) an offence under section 250, 251, 252, 253, 259 or 260 or subsection 258(4) of this Act as this Act read immediately before the coming into force of this subsection.

(5) Notwithstanding subsection 736(1), a court may, instead of convicting a person of an offence committed under section 253, after hearing medical or other evidence, if it considers that the person is in need of curative treatment in relation to his consumption of alcohol or drugs and that it would not be contrary to the public interest, by order direct that the person be discharged under section 736 on the conditions prescribed in a probation order, including a condition respecting the person's attendance for curative treatment in relation to that consumption of alcohol or drugs. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36.

Note: Subsection (5) has been proclaimed in force December 4, 1985 in New Brunswick, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Yukon Territory, and Northwest Territories, proclaimed in force January 1, 1988 in Nova Scotia; and is to come into force on proclamation in the remaining provinces.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Mode of trial – Where the prosecution elects to proceed by indictment on the offences in subsec. (1) then the accused may elect his mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Where the prosecution elects to proceed by way of summary conviction then the trial of the offence is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. In either case, release pending trial is determined by

s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498. Where the accused is charged with an offence under subsec. (2) or (3) then he has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

Causation – With respect to the offence in subsec. (3) and the issue of causation, see ss. 224 to 227. As to case law, in addition to the notes under this section, see the notes under s. 249. The term “bodily harm” is defined s. 2.

Punishment – The maximum fine for the offences in subsec. (1), where the prosecution proceeds by way of summary conviction, is $2000.00 as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). There is no limit on the fine where the prosecution proceeds by way of indictment. Where the prosecution seeks the higher penalty prescribed by para. (a)(ii) or (iii), it must comply with the provisions of s. 665. Section 667 provides one method of proof of the prior conviction. No reference to the prior conviction may be made in the information by virtue of s. 664. Note the extended definition of the meaning of previous convictions in subsec. (4). The wording of para. (4)(c) is somewhat confusing because the numbers refer to the section numbers of R.S.C. 1985 immediately prior to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1985, c. 19, proclaimed in force on December 4, 1985. For convenience, following are set out a description of the offence referred to and in square brackets the R.S.C. 1985 number as used in this subsection followed by the R.S.C. 1970 section number with which readers may be more familiar. Impaired driving and care or control of motor vehicle [250/234]; refusing to comply with roadside screening device demand [251/234.1]; refusing to comply with breathalyzer demand [252/235]; “over 80” re motor vehicles [253/236]; refusal to comply with breath demand re operation of vessel [259/240.1]; “over 80” re vessels [260/240.2]; and impaired operation of vessel [258(4)/240(4)]. By reason of the change in the minimum term from 3 months to 90 days, a person sentenced to the minimum term of 90 days under para. (a)(iii) may be ordered to serve the sentence on an intermittent basis pursuant to s. 737(1)(c). By reason of s. 736, since subsec. (1) prescribes a minimum punishment, a discharge is not available in relation to the offence under s. 254 nor for the offence under s. 253 in provinces where subsec. (5) has not been proclaimed in force.

An accused convicted of the offence under subsec. (2) or (3) may, pursuant to s. 259, be ordered prohibited from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be, during any period not exceeding 10 years. The prohibition order for the offence under subsec. (1) is mandatory by virtue of s. 259(1). The length of the order is as follows: for a first offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than three months; for a second offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than six months; for each subsequent offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than one year. The procedure respecting the making of that order of prohibition is found in s. 260.

ANNOTATIONS

Sentencing under subsec. (1) generally – It was open to the trial court to adopt a series of detailed guidelines for the imposition of penalties in drinking and driving offences, provided that the guidelines are used in conjunction with the appropriate principles and factors as they apply to the situation before the judge in the particular case: R. v. Stephens (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 557, 21 M.V.R. (2d) 153 (P.E.I.C.A.).

In R. v. Bradshaw (1975), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 69, [1976] 1 S.C.R. 162 (8:0), decided prior to the enactment of subsec. (5), it was held that a minimum fine is a minimum punishment within the meaning of s. 662.1 [now s. 736] and therefore a discharge is not available.

Second or subsequent offence [para. (1)(a)(ii) and (iii)] – The increased penalty for a “second” or “subsequent” offence does not apply where the offence is committed prior to the conviction for the offence relied upon as a prior offence even if committed after this prior offence: R. v. Negridge (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 304, 17 C.R. (3d) 14 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Rahko (1983), 29 M.V.R. 37 (B.C.C.A.). Similarly where the accused is convicted on the same day of impaired driving and refusing to comply with a breathalyzer demand arising out of the same transaction he has only one prior conviction for the purposes of penalty and is to be sentenced on the basis of para. (a)(ii) rather than para. (a)(iii): R. v. Skolnick (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 286 (Ont. C.A.), affd 68 C.C.C. (2d) 385, 29 C.R. (3d) 143, 138 D.L.R. (3d) 193, [1982] 2 S.C.R. 47 (9:0).

Constitutionality of minimum punishment – The mandatory jail term prescribed by para. (a) does not offend the fundamental justice guarantee in s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Tardif (1983), 9 C.C.C. (3d) 223, 37 C.R. (3d) 95 (Sask. C.A.), nor s. 15 of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Aucoin (1987), 79 N.S.R. (2d) 32, 48 M.V.R. 154 (S.C. App. Div.).

The minimum punishment of 90 days prescribed by subpara. (1)(a)(iii) does not violate the guarantee to protection against imposition of cruel and unusual punishment under s. 12 of the Charter: R. v. Parsons (1988), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 128, 68 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 206 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

The mandatory minimum jail sentence for repeat offenders will not ordinarily violate ss. 7 and 12 of the Charter and thus subsec. (1)(a)(ii) is not unconstitutional. However, in a particular case, as where there is a very significant time gap between the first and second offences, the minimum punishment may be grossly disproportionate in which case the accused may be entitled to a constitutional exemption under s. 24(1) of the Charter: R. v. Kumar (1993), 85 C.C.C. (3d) 417, 49 M.V.R. (2d) 20, 58 W.A.C. 81 (B.C.C.A.).

Causation [subsecs. (2), (3)] – On the question of causation, see notes by R. Libman, “The Requirement of Causation in the New Offences of Impaired Driving Causing Bodily Harm or Death and Dangerous Driving Causing Bodily Harm or Death” (1987), 48 M.V.R. 211 and 17 M.V.R. (2d) 227.

The accused is properly convicted of the offence under subsec. (2) where it is shown that the drinking was a cause, at least beyond de minimis, of the faulty driving and the injury to the victim: R. v. Larocque (1988), 5 M.V.R. (2d) 221 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Colby (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 73, 100 A.R. 142 (C.A.) and R. v. Ewart (1989), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 153, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 55, 100 A.R. 118 (C.A.), the court held that the test to be applied in determining whether or not the necessary causal link between the impairment and the death or injury has been made out was the test in Smithers v. The Queen (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 427, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 506 (a manslaughter case noted under s. 222(1)) that the unlawful act must be “at least a contributing cause of death, outside the de minimus range”. The Court of Appeal interpreted this test as requiring proof that the accused’s substantial impairment was a “real factor” in the chain of events leading to the death of the victim. To a similar effect see: R. v. Halkett (1988), 73 Sask. R. 241, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 109 (C.A.), where the court as well held that the test enunciated in Smithers should be applied to the offences under this section.

Evidence of impairment per se is not sufficient to satisfy the test of causation even when coupled with expert opinion evidence as to the physiology of alcohol, an opinion, however, which was expressed in terms of averages and statistical probabilities and couched in qualifying language: R. v. Fisher (1992), 13 C.R. (4th) 222, 36 M.V.R. (2d) 6 (B.C.C.A.).

Editor’s Note: Also see cases noted under s. 249(3) and (4).

Rule precluding multiple convictions [Kienapple rule] – Where the act of the accused, which amounts to dangerous driving, is operating her motor vehicle while her ability to do so was substantially impaired by alcohol, the rule precluding multiple convictions enunciated in Kienapple v. The Queen, [1975] 1 S.C.R. 725 applies and the accused cannot be convicted of this offence and the offence under s. 249(4). Since a conviction for the offence under this subsection more accurately describes the delict, the conviction should be entered on that charge and the charge under s. 249(4) stayed: R. v. Colby (1989), 52 C.C.C. (3d) 321, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 73, 100 A.R. 142 (C.A.).

The rule precluding multiple convictions does not prevent the conviction of the accused for the offence under subsec. (2) and the offence of criminal negligence causing bodily harm, although the injuries underlying both offences were to the same victim. The evidence disclosed facts concerning both the accused's manner of driving and, as well, her capacity to drive. The act of impaired operation did not encompass the manner of driving which, in this case, formed a part of the sequence of actions which constituted criminal negligence: R. v. Andrew (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 301, 78 C.R. (3d) 239, 46 B.C.L.R. (2d) 325, 24 M.V.R. (2d) 85 (C.A.).

Discharge for curative treatment [subsec. (5)] / Constitutional considerations – While the validity of the selective proclamation of this subsection has been attacked as a violation of the equality rights in s. 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, most courts have held either that there is no violation or that the courts have no power to, in effect, proclaim this provision in force: R. v. Killen (1985), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 40, 49 C.R. (3d) 242, 37 M.V.R. 180 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Ellsworth (1988), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 442, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 129 (Que. C.A.); R. v. Van Vliet (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 38 C.R.R. 133, 10 M.V.R. (2d) 190 (B.C.C.A.). Moreover, in R. v. Turpin (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 8, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1296, 69 C.R. (3d) 97 (6:0), the court doubted the correctness of the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Hamilton; R. v. Asselin; R. v. McCullagh (1986), 30 C.C.C. (3d) 257, 54 C.R. (3d) 193, 44 M.V.R. 72 where that court had found a violation of s. 15 and in effect proclaimed this subsection to be in effect. Thus in R. v. Alton (1989), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 252, 74 C.C.C. (3d) 124, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 186 (Ont. C.A.), the court reversed the decision in R. v. Hamilton, supra, and held that this subsection is not available to an accused in Ontario.

Circumstances where discharge should be granted – Where this subsection has been proclaimed in force, the Court is entitled to assume that adequate facilities will be provided for curative treatment. Before invoking this subsection the Court must be satisfied on a balance of probabilities that the accused is in need of curative treatment and that a discharge would not be contrary to the public interest. However, notwithstanding the accused has a lengthy record for Criminal Code driving offences this subsection may be resorted to where evidence adduced shows that the appropriate treatment for the accused's addiction is available and that the accused is now well-motivated and has a good chance of overcoming his alcoholism: R. v. Beaulieu (1980), 53 C.C.C. 342, 7 M.V.R. 9 (N.W.T.S.C.).

In considering whether a curative discharge would be contrary to the public interest, the court should consider, among other things, the circumstances of the offence and whether the accused was involved in an accident causing death, bodily harm or significant property damage; the bona fides of the accused; the accused's criminal record as it relates to alcohol-related driving offences; whether the accused was subject to a driving prohibition at the time of the offence; whether the accused had received the benefit of a prior curative discharge and what, if anything, the accused had done to facilitate his rehabilitation under the prior discharge: R. v. Storr (1995), 102 W.A.C. 65, 33 Alta. L.R. (3d) 163, 174 A.R. 65 (C.A.).

It will not always be contrary to the public interest to grant a discharge under this subsection to a recidivist. In some cases public protection may well be best served by effective measures to reduce the risk of repetition of the offence through rehabilitation of the offender. On the other hand it would be contrary to the public interest to grant a discharge if there was a real risk of repetition of the offence: R. v. Wallner (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 358, 66 C.R. (3d) 79, 9 M.V.R. (2d) 7 (Alta. C.A.).

It was improper for the trial judge to adjourn the sentencing of the accused for a lengthy period of time presumably to determine whether he was an appropriate candidate for a discharge for curative treatment by seeing whether he would stop drinking. If the evidence was not sufficient at the time of the application for the discharge, then the judge should have invited the accused to call medical or other evidence: R. v. Kidder (1992), 38 M.V.R. (2d) 98, 127 A.R. 136 (C.A.).

Note: The following case was decided prior to the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in R. v. Alton, supra, where that court reversed its earlier decision in R. v. Hamilton, supra, and held that this subsection is not available to an accused in Ontario. The note of this case is included, however, since it sets out guidelines for granting of the discharge for curative treatment which may be of value in those provinces and territories where this subsection has been proclaimed in force.

In those narrow circumstances where the evidence demonstrates that the accused is in need of curative treatment and that his rehabilitation is probable, then it would not be contrary to the public interest to grant a discharge subject to stringent terms of probation, notwithstanding the accused has a prior record. Among the considerations relevant to the question of whether a given case is sufficiently exceptional to warrant recourse to the curative treatment/conditional discharge are:

1. The circumstances of the offence and whether offender was involved in an accident which caused death or serious bodily injury. The need to express social repudiation of an offence where the victim was killed or suffered serious bodily injury will generally militate against the discharge of the offender.
2. The motivation of the offender as an indication of probable benefit from treatment. The important question is the bona fides of the offender in giving an undertaking to take treatment. The efforts of the offender to obtain treatment before conviction is of some importance. If the accused has a history of alcohol-related driving offences and has never before sought treatment, then the court may regard with some suspicion efforts to obtain treatment at this stage.
3. The availability and calibre of the proposed facilities for treatment and the ability of the accused to complete the programme.
4. The probability that the course of treatment will be successful and that the accused will never again drive a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol.
5. The criminal record and, in particular, the alcohol-related driving record of the offender. Normally, where the offender has a previous record of alcohol-related driving offences there is a high risk of the offence being repeated and a greater need for a sentence emphasizing specific and general deterrence.

However, the repeat offender may well be a more suitable candidate for curative treatment because of his chronic alcoholism or drug addiction. The fact that he has on a number of prior occasions received fines or sentences of imprisonment may lead the court to conclude that these penalties have had no deterrent effect and that the public interest would best be served by directing curative treatment under a formal supervised programme. If a discharge is considered appropriate it should be accompanied by a lengthy term of probation with stringent terms requiring, inter alia, the accused to abstain from consumption of alcohol: R. v. Ashberry (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 138, 68 C.R. (3d) 341, 30 O.A.C. 376 (C.A.).

WARRANTS TO OBTAIN BLOOD SAMPLES / Form / Information on oath / Duration of warrant / Facsimile to person.

256. (1) Subject to subsection (2), where a justice is satisfied, on an information on oath in Form 1 or on an information on oath submitted to the justice pursuant to section 487.1 by telephone or other means of telecommunication, that there are reasonable grounds to believe that

- (a) a person has, within the preceding four hours, committed, as a result of the consumption of alcohol, an offence under section 253 and the person was involved in an accident resulting in the death of another person or in bodily harm to himself or herself or to any other person, and
- (b) a qualified medical practitioner is of the opinion that
  - (i) by reason of any physical or mental condition of the person that resulted from the consumption of alcohol, the accident or any other occurrence related to or resulting from the accident, the person is unable to consent to the taking of samples of his blood, and

- (ii) the taking of samples of blood from the person would not endanger the life or health of the person, the justice may issue a warrant authorizing a peace officer to require a qualified medical practitioner to take, or to cause to be taken by a qualified technician under the direction of the qualified medical practitioner, such samples of the blood of the person as in the opinion of the person taking the samples are necessary to enable a proper analysis to be made in order to determine the concentration, if any, of alcohol in his blood.

(2) A warrant issued pursuant to subsection (1) may be in Form 5 or 5.1 varied to suit the case.

(3) Notwithstanding paragraphs 487.1(4)(b) and (c), an information on oath submitted by telephone or other means of telecommunication for the purposes of this section shall include, instead of the statements referred to in those paragraphs, a statement setting out the offence alleged to have been committed and identifying the person from whom blood samples are to be taken.

(4) Samples of blood may be taken from a person pursuant to a warrant issued pursuant to subsection (1) only during such time as a qualified medical practitioner is satisfied that the conditions referred to in subparagraphs (1)(b)(i) and (ii) continue to exist in respect of that person.

(5) Where a warrant issued pursuant to subsection (1) is executed, the peace officer shall, as soon as practicable thereafter, give a copy or, in the case of a warrant issued by telephone or other means of telecommunication, a facsimile of the warrant to the person from whom the blood samples were taken. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; 1992, c. 1, s. 58; 1994, c. 44, s. 13.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “peace officer” and “justice” are defined in s. 2 and the terms “qualified medical practitioner” and “qualified technician” in s. 254. The reference to s. 487.1 is to the telewarrant procedure set out in that section. The term “bodily harm” is defined in s. 2.

The normal procedure for obtaining blood samples by demand is set out in s. 254. Section 257 protects the medical practitioner and qualified technician from criminal and civil liability when proceeding under this section.

The presumption respecting the accused’s blood alcohol level arising from analysis of a blood sample is found in s. 258(1)(d). Procedure for admission of certificates of an analyst, qualified technician and medical practitioner is set out in s. 258(1)(e) to (i) and (6) and (7). Note s. 258(4) which provides for summary application to a judge, within 3 months of the date the blood sample was taken, for an order releasing one of the samples for the purpose of testing by the defence.

Section 489.1 [which incorrectly refers to s. 258 rather than this section] requires that the peace officer make a report to a justice as soon as practicable following execution of the warrant.

SYNOPSIS

This section authorizes a justice who has reasonable grounds to believe: (a) that a person has committed an offence under s. 253 within the preceding four hours; (b) that the person has been involved in an accident resulting in bodily harm to himself or anyone else or death to another person; (c) that a physician is of the opinion that the person is physically or mentally unable to consent to the taking of blood samples; and (d) that the physician is also of the opinion that the taking of the blood samples would not endanger the life or health of the person, to issue a warrant authorizing a peace officer to require a physician to take or to supervise the taking of sufficient blood from the person to allow analysis for the concentration of alcohol. The information to obtain the warrant must be in Form 1 or, if obtained by telephone or other means of telecommunication, pursuant to s. 487.1, modified to contain a statement setting out the alleged offence and the identity of the person from whom blood samples are to be taken. The warrant may be in Form 5 or 5.1, varied to suit the case. The warrant may only be executed if the physician continues to be satisfied that the condition of the person precludes consent and that the person's health will not be endangered. If blood is taken pursuant to the warrant, the peace officer must give a copy or a facsimile of the warrant (as soon as practicable) to the person from whom the samples are obtained.

ANNOTATIONS

Constitutional considerations – The non-consensual taking of a blood sample from an unconscious motorist without a warrant and without any statutory authority is a serious intrusion into the person's privacy and this violation of s. 8 of the Charter of Rights warrants exclusion of the evidence obtained: Pohoretsky v. The Queen (1987), 33 C.C.C. (3d) 398, 58 C.R. (3d) 113, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 945 (7:0). [Note: This case arose prior to the statutory amendments providing for the taking of blood samples in certain cases.] Similarly: R. v. Tomaso (1989), 70 C.R. (3d) 152, 14 M.V.R. (2d) 10, 33 O.A.C. 106 (Ont. C.A.).

To a similar effect, see R. v. Dyment (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 244, 66 C.R. (3d) 348, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 417 (5:0), where a blood sample originally taken from the accused for medical reasons was turned over to a police officer. The physician held the blood sample subject to a duty to respect the patient's privacy and this was sufficient to qualify the police officer's taking of the sample as a seizure. The officer had no warrant to seize the sample and the Crown adduced no evidence to justify a warrantless seizure. The seizure was unlawful and unreasonable under s. 8 of the Charter and the results of the analysis of the sample were inadmissible pursuant to s. 24(2) of the Charter of Rights.

Similarly, R. v. Dersch, [1993] 3 S.C.R. 768, 85 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 25 C.R. (4th) 88 where it was held that the accused's rights were violated when the police, without consent or a warrant, obtained confidential information from the physician as to the results of a blood alcohol test. The accused had repeatedly refused to provide a blood sample and the sample was only obtained, for medical purposes, when the accused was unconscious. Also, R. v. Colarusso, [1994] 1 S.C.R. 20, 87 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 26 C.R. (4th) 289 where it was held that the accused's rights under s. 8 of the Charter were violated when the results of analysis of blood samples originally obtained by the coroner for his purposes were appropriated for use in a criminal prosecution.

There was no violation of the Charter where the officer merely asked hospital personnel to not destroy a blood sample taken for medical purposes until the officer could obtain a warrant. The hospital staff were not agents of the state and the subsequent seizure pursuant to the warrant was valid: R. v. Lunn (1990), 61 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 26 M.V.R. (2d) 209 (B.C.C.A.).

It was proper for the police officer to take control of one of several blood samples taken by hospital personnel for medical purposes to preserve its continuity until a search warrant could be obtained. Such action did not violate s. 8 of the Charter of Rights where the officer had reasonable and probable grounds to protect the blood sample: R. v. Katsigiorgis (1987), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 256, 4 M.V.R. (2d) 102, 62 O.R. (2d) 441 (C.A.).

Procedural requirements – The failure of the officer to file the written report as required by s. 487.1(9) did not invalidate the warrant nor render inadmissible the results of analysis of a blood sample taken pursuant to the warrant: R. v. Skin (1988), 13 M.V.R. (2d) 130 (B.C. Co. Ct.).

NO OFFENCE COMMITTED / No criminal or civil liability.

257. (1) No qualified medical practitioner or qualified technician is guilty of an offence only by reason of his refusal to take a sample of blood from a person for the purposes of section 254 or 256 and no qualified medical practitioner is guilty of an offence only by reason of his refusal to cause to be taken by a qualified technician under his direction a sample of blood from a person for those purposes.

(2) No qualified medical practitioner by whom or under whose direction a sample of blood is taken from a person pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3) or a warrant issued under section 256 and no qualified technician acting under the direction of a qualified medical practitioner incurs any criminal or civil liability for anything necessarily done with reasonable care and skill in the taking of such a sample of blood. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “qualified medical practitioner” and “qualified technician” are defined in s. 254. As to protection of persons enforcing the law generally, see s. 25.

SYNOPSIS

This section makes it clear that neither a physician nor a qualified technician will be guilty of a criminal offence for refusing to take, or for causing to be taken, a blood sample from a person pursuant to s. 254 or 256. Similarly, no physician or qualified technician, acting under the directions of a physician, will incur criminal or civil liability for anything necessarily done with reasonable care and skill in taking the blood sample.

PROCEEDINGS UNDER SECTION 255 / No obligation to give sample except as required under section 254 / Evidence of failure to comply with demand / Release of specimen for testing / Testing blood for presence of drugs / Attendance and right to cross-examine / Notice of intention to produce certificate.

258. (1) In any proceedings under subsection 255(1) in respect of an offence committed under section 253 or in any proceedings under subsection 255(2) or (3),

- (a) where it is proved that the accused occupied the seat or position ordinarily occupied by a person who operates a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft or any railway equipment or who assists in the operation of an aircraft or of railway equipment, the accused shall be deemed to have had the care or control of the vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be, unless the accused establishes that the accused did not occupy that seat or position for the purpose of setting the vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment in motion or assisting in the operation of the aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be;
- (b) the result of an analysis of a sample of the breath or blood of the accused (other than a sample taken pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3)) or of the urine or other bodily substance of the accused may be admitted in evidence notwithstanding that, before the accused gave the sample, he was not warned that he need not give the sample or that the result of the analysis of the sample might be used in evidence;
- (c) where samples of the breath of the accused have been taken pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3), if

Note: Subparagraph (i), enacted by 1968-69, c. 38, s. 16; re-enacted by 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 18(1); re-enacted by R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36 is to come into force on proclamation. The unproclaimed text reads as follows:

- (i) at the time each sample was taken, the person taking the sample offered to provide to the accused a specimen of the breath of the accused in an approved container for his own use, and, at the request of the accused made at that time, such a specimen was thereupon provided to the accused,*
- (ii) each sample was taken as soon as practicable after the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed and, in the case of the first

- sample, not later than two hours after that time, with an interval of at least fifteen minutes between the times when the samples were taken,
- (iii) each sample was received from the accused directly into an approved container or into an approved instrument operated by a qualified technician, and
  - (iv) an analysis of each sample was made by means of an approved instrument operated by a qualified technician,
- evidence of the results of the analyses so made is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that the concentration of alcohol in the blood of the accused at the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed was, where the results of the analyses are the same, the concentration determined by the analyses and, where the results of the analyses are different, the lowest of the concentrations determined by the analyses;
- (d) where a sample of the blood of the accused has been taken pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3) or otherwise with the consent of the accused or pursuant to a warrant issued under section 256, if
    - (i) at the time the sample was taken, the person taking the sample took an additional sample of the blood of the accused and one of the samples was retained, to permit an analysis thereof to be made by or on behalf of the accused and, at the request of the accused made within three months from the taking of the samples, one of the samples was ordered to be released pursuant to subsection (4),
    - (ii) both samples referred to in subparagraph (i) were taken as soon as practicable after the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed and in any event not later than two hours after that time,
    - (iii) both samples referred to in subparagraph (i) were taken by a qualified medical practitioner or a qualified technician under the direction of a qualified medical practitioner,
    - (iv) both samples referred to in subparagraph (i) were received from the accused directly into, or placed directly into, approved containers that were subsequently sealed, and
    - (v) an analysis was made by an analyst of at least one of the samples that was contained in a sealed approved container, evidence of the result of the analysis is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that the concentration of alcohol in the blood of the accused at the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed was the concentration determined by the analysis or, where more than one sample was analyzed and the results of the analyses are the same, the concentration determined by the analyses and, where the results of the analyses are different, the lowest of the concentrations determined by the analyses;
  - (e) a certificate of an analyst stating that the analyst has made an analysis of a sample of the blood, urine, breath or other bodily substance of the accused and stating the result of that analysis is evidence of the facts alleged in the certificate without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate;
  - (f) a certificate of an analyst stating that the analyst has made an analysis of a sample of an alcohol standard that is identified in the certificate and intended for use with an approved instrument and that the sample of the standard analyzed by the analyst was found to be suitable for use with an approved instrument, is evidence that the alcohol standard so identified is suitable for use with an approved instrument without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate;
  - (g) where samples of the breath of the accused have been taken pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3), a certificate of a qualified technician stating

- (i) that the analysis of each of the samples has been made by means of an approved instrument operated by the technician and ascertained by the technician to be in proper working order by means of an alcohol standard, identified in the certificate, that is suitable for use with an approved instrument,
- (ii) the results of the analyses so made, and
- (iii) if the samples were taken by the technician,

Note: Clause (A), enacted by 1968-69, c. 38, s. 16; re-enacted by 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 18(2); re-enacted by R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36 is to come into force on proclamation. The unproclaimed text reads as follows:

- (A) that at the time each sample was taken the technician offered to provide the accused with a specimen of the breath of the accused in an approved container for his own use and, at the request of the accused made at that time, the accused was thereupon provided with such a specimen,
  - (B) the time when and place where each sample and any specimen described in clause (A) was taken, and
  - (C) that each sample was received from the accused directly into an approved container or into an approved instrument operated by the technician,
- is evidence of the facts alleged in the certificate without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate;
- (h) where a sample of the blood of the accused has been taken pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3) or otherwise with the consent of the accused or pursuant to a warrant issued under section 256,
    - (i) a certificate of a qualified medical practitioner stating that
      - (A) the medical practitioner took the sample and that before the sample was taken he was of the opinion that the taking of blood samples from the accused would not endanger the life or health of the accused and, in the case of a demand made pursuant to a warrant issued pursuant to section 256, that by reason of any physical or mental condition of the accused that resulted from the consumption of alcohol, the accident or any other occurrence related to or resulting from the accident, the accused was unable to consent to the taking of his blood,
      - (B) at the time the sample was taken, an additional sample of the blood of the accused was taken to permit analysis of one of the samples to be made by or on behalf of the accused,
      - (C) the time when and place where both samples referred to in clause (B) were taken, and
      - (D) both samples referred to in clause (B) were received from the accused directly into, or placed directly into, approved containers that were subsequently sealed and that are identified in the certificate,
    - (ii) a certificate of a qualified medical practitioner stating that the medical practitioner caused the sample to be taken by a qualified technician under his direction and that before the sample was taken the qualified medical practitioner was of the opinion referred to in clause (i)(A), or
    - (iii) a certificate of a qualified technician stating that the technician took the sample and the facts referred to in clauses (i)(B) to (D)
- is evidence of the facts alleged in the certificate without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate; and
- (i) a certificate of an analyst stating that the analyst has made an analysis of a sample of the blood of the accused that was contained in a sealed approved container identified in the certificate, the date on which and place where the sample was analyzed and the result of that analysis is evidence of the facts alleged in the certificate without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed it.

Transitional provision

Note: R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 204, proclaimed in force December 4, 1985, provides as follows:

204. Paragraphs 258(1)(f) and (g) of the Criminal Code, as they read immediately before the coming into force of the amendments to those paragraphs, as enacted by section 36 of this Act, continue to apply to any proceedings in respect of which a certificate referred to in those paragraphs was issued prior to the coming into force of the amendments to those paragraphs.

(2) No person is required to give a sample of urine or other bodily substance for analysis for the purposes of this section except breath or blood as required under section 254, and evidence that a person failed or refused to give such a sample or that such a sample was not taken is not admissible nor shall such a failure or refusal or the fact that a sample was not taken be the subject of comment by any person in the proceedings.

(3) In any proceedings under subsection 255(1) in respect of an offence committed under paragraph 253(a) or in any proceedings under subsection 255(2) or (3), evidence that the accused, without reasonable excuse, failed or refused to comply with a demand made to him by a peace officer under section 254 is admissible and the court may draw an inference therefrom adverse to the accused.

(4) A judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a court of criminal jurisdiction shall, on the summary application of the accused made within three months from the day on which samples of the blood of the accused were taken, order the release of one of the samples for the purpose of an examination or analysis thereof, subject to such terms as appear to be necessary or desirable to ensure the safeguarding of the sample and its preservation for use in any proceedings in respect of which it was retained.

(5) Where a sample of blood of an accused has been taken pursuant to a demand made under subsection 254(3) or otherwise with the consent of the accused or pursuant to a warrant issued under section 256, the sample may be tested for the presence of drugs in the blood of the accused.

(6) A party against whom a certificate described in paragraph (1)(e), (f), (g), (h) or (i) is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the qualified medical practitioner, analyst or qualified technician, as the case may be, for the purposes of cross-examination.

(7) No certificate shall be received in evidence pursuant to paragraph (1)(e), (f), (g), (h) or (i) unless the party intending to produce it has, before the trial, given to the other party reasonable notice of his intention and a copy of the certificate. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; c. 32 (4th Supp.), s. 61; 1994, c. 44, s. 14.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms "peace officer", "motor vehicle", "railway equipment", "superior court of criminal jurisdiction" and "court of criminal jurisdiction" are defined in s. 2. The terms "aircraft", "vessel" and "operates" are defined in s. 214. The terms "analyst", "approved container", "approved instrument", "qualified medical practitioner" and "qualified technician" are defined in s. 254. The offence of impaired operation is defined in ss. 253 and 255, of "over 80" in s. 253 and refusing to comply with a breath or blood demand in s. 254.

Section 25(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 provides that "Where an enactment provides that a document is evidence of a fact without anything in the context to indicate that the document is conclusive evidence, then, in any judicial proceedings, the document is admissible in evidence and the fact is deemed to be established in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.”

As to proof of service by affidavit, see s. 4(6).

SYNOPSIS

This section states that where the prosecution establishes in proceedings under s. 255(1) with respect to an offence under s. 253 or in proceedings under s. 255(2) or (3) that the accused was sitting in the operator's seat of the vehicle, the accused is deemed to have care or control of that vehicle. This presumption can be overturned if the accused is able to establish that the purpose of occupying that seat was not for setting the vehicle in motion.

In addition, the result of an analysis of a breath or blood sample along with samples of urine or other bodily substances, may be admitted in evidence even if there was no warning prior to the taking of the sample that the accused need not consent to the procedure, nor that the result might be used in evidence. No person is required, however, to give a sample of urine or other bodily substance except as required under s. 254 and evidence of a failure or refusal to give such a sample is not admissible at trial nor may it be made the subject of comment. When the technical requirements described in s. 258(1)(c) and (d) are met, the evidence of the results of analysis is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof of the concentration of alcohol in the accused's blood at the time of the offence. If more than one sample is analyzed and the results are different, the evidence of the lowest of the concentrations will be used in the proceedings.

Paragraphs 1(e), (f), (g), (h) and (i) provide that the certificates of analysts, medical practitioners and qualified technicians are themselves evidence of the facts set out therein without the need to prove the signature or the official character of the person signing the certificate. The accused may apply to a judge of a superior court or court of criminal jurisdiction within three months of the date upon which the blood samples were taken for an order for the release of one of the samples for analysis. The party intending to produce the certificate as evidence must, prior to trial, give the other party reasonable notice of his intention along with a copy of the certificate. An accused person may, with leave of the court, require the attendance for cross-examination of the medical practitioner, analyst or technician who signed the certificate. In proceedings under s. 255(1) in respect of an offence committed under s. 253(a) or in proceedings under s. 255(2) or (3), evidence of failure by the accused to comply with a demand made under s. 254 is admissible. The court may draw an inference adverse to the accused from such evidence.

ANNOTATIONS

Presumption of care or control [subsec. (1)(a)] – Proof of indecision on the part of the accused is not sufficient to rebut the presumption in subsec. (1)(a). While it may be that the accused need not establish on a balance of probabilities that he had a settled purpose at the time of initially occupying the driver's seat other than that of setting the vehicle in motion, he must nevertheless prove on a balance of probabilities that he did not occupy that seat for the purpose of putting the vehicle in motion: R. v. George (1994), 90 C.C.C. (3d) 502, 120 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 237, 5 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (Nfld. C.A.).

The fact that the accused is able to rebut the presumption in this paragraph does not entitle him to an acquittal where the Crown is able to establish that he had care or control without reliance on the presumption. This paragraph does not import into the care or control offence an intent to drive and the accused may be convicted of that offence where although he does not have an intent to drive he performs some act or series of acts involving the use of a car, its fittings or equipment, whereby the vehicle may unintentionally be set in motion: Ford v. The Queen (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 392, 13 M.V.R. 237 (S.C.C.) (7:2).

The Crown does not have to make a formal election before it can rely on the presumption in this paragraph: R. v. Journeaux (1992), 38 M.V.R. (2d) 323 (Ont. C.A.).

The Crown was not entitled to rely on the presumption in this paragraph where the accused was lying across the seat with his head on the passenger side and his legs were encased in a sleeping-bag under the steering wheel. It could not be said that he was occupying the seat ordinarily occupied by the driver. It was further held that the Crown had not otherwise made out care or control. Acts of care or control, short of driving, are acts which involve some use of the vehicle or its fittings, or some course of conduct associated with the vehicle which would involve the risk of putting the vehicle in motion so that it could become dangerous, and in this case the accused was asleep in the sleeping-bag: R. v. Toews (1985), 21 C.C.C. (3d) 24, 47 C.R. (3d) 213, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 119 (7:0).

Constitutionality of care or control presumption – It has been held that the predecessor to this paragraph, although it required the accused to prove on a balance of probabilities that he did not enter the vehicle with the intention of setting it in motion, is a reasonable limit on the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and is therefore valid: R. v. Whyte (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 64 C.R. (3d) 123, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 3 (6:0).

Right to production of ampoules, etc. – In Duke v. The Queen (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 474, 18 C.R.N.S.302 (S.C.C.), it was held (9:0) that because Parliament specifically proclaimed the predecessor to this section in force, in the manner that it did, the failure of the Crown to provide the suspected driver with a sample of his breath did not deprive him of his right to a fair hearing.

Similarly, the routine non-malicious destruction of the ampoules so that the accused is unable to conduct his own tests of the ampoules does not deprive the accused of a fair hearing or of his rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: Re Potma and The Queen (1983), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 383, 31 C.R. (3d) 231, 144 D.L.R. (3d) 620 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused D.L.R. loc. cit.

Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms requires the Crown to make disclosure and discovery of relevant materials and in this case this included providing representative samples of the ampoules from the same lot as those used to test the accused so that independent tests could be conducted to ascertain the reliability and accuracy of the machine when such ampoules are used. In this case the ampoules were not those recommended for use by the machine's manufacturer: R. v. Bourget (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 371, 56 C.R. (3d) 97, 46 M.V.R. 246 (Sask. C.A.).

However, it was held in R. v. Eagles (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 129, 68 C.R. (3d) 271, 88 N.S.R. (2d) 337 (C.A.), that the accused was not entitled to a sample of the ampoule in the absence of some factual foundation or other basis shown indicating that production and examination of the representative ampoule would advance the defence. And, a similar test was applied in R. v. Delaney (1989), 48 C.C.C. (3d) 276, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (N.S.C.A.), where an application was made by the accused for an order permitting access by a defence expert to the breathalyzer machine upon which the accused had been tested. It was held that the application should have been dismissed, the first request for inspection not having been made in a timely fashion and it not being shown in what way mere inspection of the machine might assist the accused's case.

Similarly, in R. v. Lefebvre (1988), 90 A.R. 334, 9 M.V.R. (2d) 304 (Q.B.), it was held that failure to furnish representative samples of the ampoules was not a violation of s. 7. In this case, the evidence indicated that the warning referred to in R. v. Bourget, supra, had been withdrawn by the manufacturer. Further, evidence accepted by the trial judge indicated that it was highly unlikely that a random sample of the ampoule would be found to be faulty and even if it were it could not affect the tests administered by the technician. The standard alcohol test would demonstrate the accuracy of the breathalyzer. Finally, the ampoule actually used in the test of the accused is of no value.

It was held in R. v. Hodgson (1990), 57 C.C.C. (3d) 278, 78 C.R. (3d) 333, 24 M.V.R. (2d) 42 (B.C.C.A.) that there was no reasonable basis for concluding that the failure to preserve a representative sample of the alcohol standard infringed the accused's rights to make full answer and defence and to be tried in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice as guaranteed by s. 7 of the Charter. Counsel could only speculate that independent analysis of the sample could have disclosed that it was not suitable for use in the breathalyzer and there were other means to determine the issue, for example, by obtaining the chemical composition from the analyst who prepared it or by resorting to the opinion of an expert. Further, the Crown had acted fairly by informing defence counsel of the name of the analyst and offering to provide a sample if the particular lot had not been exhausted.

Failure of the prosecution to supply the accused with a sample of the alcohol standard does not violate s. 7 of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Gascon (1987), 50 M.V.R. 213 (Ont. Prov. Ct.). Contra: R. v. Kalafut (1988), 70 Sask. R. 94, 8 M.V.R. (2d) 185 (Q.B.).

Failure of the officer to show the accused the reading on the breathalyzer did not deprive the accused of a fair trial. The officer had been willing to do so but, by the time the request was made, the reading had been erased: R. v. Cabanela (1989), 25 M.V.R. (2d) 161 (Ont. C.A.).

The accused's rights under ss. 7 and 11(d) of the Charter were infringed when his polite request to view the breathalyzer gauge at the time the tests were being administered was refused. Viewing the readings would have assisted the accused in making full answer and defence and would not have interfered in the administration of the tests: R. v. Selig (1991), 4 C.R. (4th) 20, 27 M.V.R. (2d) 166, 101 N.S.R. (2d) 281 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Gillis (1994), 91 C.C.C. (3d) 575, 63 W.A.C. 395, 149 A.R. 395 (C.A.).

Also see Lucas, D.M. "Production of Breathalyzer Material", (1989), 1 J.M.V.L. 103.

On this issue, also see the note by C. Finley, "Production Requests: The Crown's Duty to Provide", 21 M.V.R. (2d) 65.

Subsec. (1)(c), (d) [presumption of blood-alcohol level] / Constitutionality of presumption – The presumption in this paragraph is not an unconstitutional violation of the presumption of innocence as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Phillips (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 150, 64 C.R. (3d) 154, 4 M.V.R. (2d) 239 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Hamilton (1984), 28 M.V.R. 127 (Alta. Q.B.); R. v. Sturge (1987), 2 M.V.R. (2d) 189 (N.B.Q.B.); R. v. Ballem (1990), 58 C.C.C. (3d) 46, 22 M.V.R. (2d) 14 (P.E.I. C.A.).

Applicability of presumption – The Crown may rely on the presumption in this subsection not only where it proceeds by way of certificate under subsec. (1)(g) but where the technician gives viva voce evidence: R. v. Lightfoot (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 414, 24 C.R. (3d) 323, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 566 (9:0).

When the Crown proceeds by way of viva voce evidence of the qualified technician and seeks to rely on the presumption in this subsection it need only meet the requirements of this subsection and therefore, inter alia, the provisions of subsec. (1)(f) have no application: R. v. Walters (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 56, 11 N.S.R. (2d) 443 (App. Div.).

Where the Crown is unable to rely on the presumption in this subsection it may still prove the offence by adducing expert evidence as to the progressive absorption of alcohol into the bloodstream in order to relate the readings in the certificate back to the time of the offence: R. v. Bozek (1977), 34 C.C.C. (2d) 457 (Sask. Dist. Ct.); R. v. Burnison (1979), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 38 (Ont. C.A.).

When proceeding by way of viva voce evidence from the breathalyzer technician rather than by certificate there is no requirement of proof as to the suitability of the substance or solution before the Crown may rely on the presumption in this subsection: Lightfoot v. The Queen (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 414, 24 C.R. (3d) 323, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 566 (9:0).

The presumption in this paragraph applies to the trial of an offence laid prior to the proclamation of this section: R. v. Copley (1988), 43 C.C.C. (3d) 396, 6 M.V.R. (2d) 40 (Ont. C.A.).

The burden imposed on the accused by subsec. (1)(c) is merely to adduce evidence to the contrary which raises a reasonable doubt, that might reasonably be true or that suggests a reasonable possibility of innocence. There is no persuasive burden placed on the accused: R. v. Dubois (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 90, 25 M.V.R. (2d) 21 (Que. C.A.).

Requirement of two samples – The words “each sample” must be interpreted in conjunction with s. 254(3) meaning each sample which in the opinion of the qualified technician is necessary to enable a proper analysis to be made. It would not include for example, a breath sample a portion of which escapes due to a malfunction in the machine and which in the opinion of the technician will not give a proper analysis: R. v. Perrier (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 506, 29 M.V.R. 92 (Ont. C.A.).

Despite the use of the superlative “lowest” the Crown may still rely on the presumption where only two samples were taken. It is not necessary that three or more samples be taken: R. v. Schultz (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 39 (Ont. H.C.J.).

It was held in R. v. Norman (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 27, [1978] 3 W.W.R. 542 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.) that considering the certificate as a whole the fact that the certificate referred to the results of analysis of “one of the said samples” and “another of the said samples” did not leave open as a reasonable conclusion that a third sample was taken the results of which were not given in the certificate. In the absence of anything to suggest to the contrary “another” is to be read in the sense of “the other”. Folld: R. v. Grace (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 301 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

Similarly, the fact that the printed form of the certificate has spaces for the results of three breath tests, only two of which were filled out does not give rise to an inference that a third sample was taken but that the results were not recorded: R. v. Dempsey (1979), 45 C.C.C. (2d) 267 (N.B.S.C. App. Div.).

Similarly, the mere fact that the accused blew into the breathalyzer three times is not evidence that more than two “samples” were taken: R. v. Mangialaio (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 331, 29 M.V.R. 244 (B.C.C.A.).

Where only one breath sample was obtained, although the Crown may not rely on the technician's certificate or the presumption in this section, it may still secure a conviction under s. 253(b) by proceeding by viva voce expert evidence where the technician is able to testify that the one sample was suitable: R. v. Jones (1976), 33 C.C.C. (2d) 50, 16 N.B.R. (2d) 32 (S.C. App. Div.).

Requirement samples received directly into approved instrument [para. (c)(iii)] – Evidence from the technician, merely that samples were received into a “breathalyzer instrument” is not proof that the samples were received directly into an approved instrument as required by subpara. (iii): R. v. Alatyppo (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 514, 20 M.V.R. 39 (Ont. C.A.).

The court may take judicial notice of the workings of the Borkenstein Breathalyzer, or at least refer to standard textbooks on the subject, and so take note of the fact that the only way to introduce the breath sample is by blowing directly into a tube attached to the machine. Thus, evidence that the breath sample was “introduced” is proof that it was received “directly” into the breathalyzer: R. v. Walters (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 56, 11 N.S.R. (2d) 443 (App. Div.).

Time element / interval of 15 minutes between samples – It was held by Seaton, J.A., in R. v. Perry (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 182, 33 N.R. at p. 108 (C.A.), that there was no basis for extending the provisions of s. 25(2) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. 1-23 to minutes and thus breath tests taken at 3:00 a.m. and 3:15 a.m. complied with the requirement that the breath samples be taken “at least 15 minutes” apart. This holding, which was contrary to the conclusion reached by several other provincial appellate courts, was apparently upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada which dismissed the appeal by the accused on June 11, 1980, 51 C.C.C. (2d) 576n, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1104, N.R. loc. cit. p. 106, in brief reasons to the effect that the Court was in agreement with the reasons of Taggart, J.A. Taggart, J.A., concurred in the reasons of Seaton, J.A., but in addition relied on a finding of fact by the trial Judge that the actual time between the tests was 15 complete minutes.

In R. v. Taylor (1983), 7 C.C.C. (3d) 293, 22 M.V.R. 295 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., the court considered the judgments in R. v. Perry, supra, and the majority of the Court concluded that while a bare 15 minutes is sufficient for compliance, that interval is the interval of time from the point when everything necessary to complete the taking of the first sample has been done and the point when the first act is done to commence the taking of the second sample. The requirement will not be met by a certificate which merely states that the samples were taken at, for example, 3:00 a.m. and 3:17 a.m. since such a certificate is open to the conclusion that the taking of the samples commenced at those two times and without additional information as to the length of time needed to finish taking the first sample, the trial Judge would not be able to determine the interval between them. Folld: R. v. Dawson (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 152, 27 M.V.R. 252, 47 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 295 (P.E.I.S.C. in banco); not followed: R. v. Kornak (1984), 12 C.C.C. (3d) 182, 27 M.V.R. 152, 30 Alta. L.R. (2d) 193 (C.A.); R. v. Moore (1984), 13 C.C.C. (3d) 281, 28 M.V.R. 23 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Scott (1984), 36 Sask. R. 216 (C.A.); R. v. DeCoste (1984), 15 C.C.C. (3d) 289, 65 N.S.R. (2d) 61 (S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Hepdich (1989), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 286, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 101, 75 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 201 (Nfld. C.A.).

In a subsequent case, R. v. Hayes (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 569, 32 M.V.R. 126 (Ont. C.A.), the court held that for the purpose of this paragraph the sample is taken once the accused's breath sample is inside the breathalyzer and in computing the time interval it is not necessary to take into account the period of time for the machine to analyze and indicate the results of each sample. Similarly, R. v. Daly (1985), 32 M.V.R. 213 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Atkinson (1986), 42 M.V.R. 78 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Arsenaault (1986), 43 M.V.R. 287 (P.E.I.S.C.).

The requirement that the samples were taken at least 15 minutes apart applies to samples of which in the opinion of the technician a proper analysis can be made. Thus, where a "sample" is taken but not analyzed because the machine was not properly hooked up, the technician need not wait 15 minutes to take a proper sample: R. v. Weselowski (1984), 11 C.C.C. (3d) 574 (B.C.C.A.); Denton v. The Queen (1985), 32 M.V.R. 250 (Sask. Q.B.).

Time element / as soon as practicable and within two hours – A breath sample was taken "as soon as practicable" where it was taken one hour after the accused's arrival at the police station where the delay was due to the necessity of repairing the breathalyzer: R. v. Finlayson (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 511, [1975] W.W.D. 57 (Sask. C.A.).

The test for determining whether or not breath samples were taken as soon as practicable is whether they were taken within a reasonably prompt time under the circumstances. The court must take into account both subjective and objective factors, including whether the police officer involved acted reasonably: R. v. Van Der Veen (1988), 44 C.C.C. (3d) 38, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 251, 89 A.R. 4 (C.A.).

The phrase "as soon as practicable" does not require that the tests be taken at the very earliest moment. In the circumstances a 20-minute delay while the accused was kept under observation was permissible: R. v. Mudry; R. v. Coverly (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 518 (Alta. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Carter (1980), 55 C.C.C. (2d) 405, 8 M.V.R. 108 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Ashby (1980), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 348 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Cander (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 490, 28 B.C.L.R. 376 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 38 N.R. 450n. Similarly: R. v. Phillips (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 150, 64 C.R. (3d) 154 (Ont. C.A.).

Similarly, a 21-minute delay between the time of the arrival at the police station and the time of the first test is not evidence that the tests were not taken as soon as practicable. The requirement that the tests be taken as soon as practicable must be applied with reason. There is no need to explain every incident which occurred from the time of the offence to the time the samples were taken unless the trial Judge is not satisfied on the evidence before him that the samples were taken as soon as practicable: R. v. Carter (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 450, 10 M.V.R. 187 (Sask. C.A.). Folld: R. v. Cambrin (1982), 1 C.C.C. (3d) 59, [1983] 2 W.W.R. 250, 18 M.V.R. 160 (B.C.C.A.).

The critical issue in each case, where it is alleged that the tests were not taken as soon as practicable, is whether the conduct of the police was reasonable, having regard to all the circumstances. The act of the arresting officer in commencing the preparation of the alcohol influence report for a period of nine minutes before turning the accused over to the breathalyzer technician, was not an unreasonable procedure: R. v. Payne (1990), 56 C.C.C. (3d) 548, 23 M.V.R. (2d) 37, 38 O.A.C. 161 (C.A.).

Similarly, the conduct of the arresting officer, who was also a qualified technician, in waiting for another technician to conduct the test to ensure objectivity was reasonable. Accordingly, the test was taken as soon as practicable: R. v. Clarke (1991), 27 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Although the officer has grounds to make an immediate demand under s. 254(3), the fact that he first makes a demand under s. 254(2) does not prevent the samples subsequently obtained pursuant to the s. 254(3) demand from being obtained as soon as practicable: R. v. Jensen (1982), 2 C.C.C. (3d) 11, 18 M.V.R. 52 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

Judicial notice – It was held in R. v. Dickson (1973), 5 N.S.R. (2d) 240 (S.C. App. Div.) that the trial Judge erred in taking judicial notice of the tolerance for error in the Borkenstein Breathalyzer.

And, it was held to be an error for the Judge to base his decision in part on a breathalyzer manual which he obtained from the police and which was not properly introduced into evidence: R. v. Robertson (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 159 (B.C.C.A.).

A judge cannot take judicial notice of the amount by which the subsequent consumption would affect the breathalyzer reading and the Crown would still be entitled to rely on the presumption in this paragraph in the absence of further evidence raising a reasonable doubt as to whether the results of the breathalyzer accurately depict the blood alcohol level at the time of the offence as being above the permissible limit: R. v. Batley (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 382, 32 M.V.R. 257 (Sask. C.A.). Similarly: R. v. White (1986), 41 M.V.R. 82 (Nfld. C.A.).

To a similar effect is R. v. Kays (1987), 62 C.R. (3d) 193, 82 N.S.R. (2d) 18 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 88 N.R. 400n, holding that while the court may take judicial notice of the fact that consumption of alcohol increases the blood-alcohol level, it cannot take notice as to the extent to which the consumption will affect the breathalyzer reading.

Evidence to the contrary / generally – As to the meaning generally of the words “any evidence to the contrary” see R. v. Proudlock (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 321, 5 C.R. (3d) 21, 91 D.L.R. (3d) 449 (S.C.C.) noted under s. 348, infra.

“Evidence to the contrary” must be evidence which tends to establish that the proportion of alcohol in the accused’s blood at the time of the offence was not the same as indicated by the approved instrument. No evidence is “evidence to the contrary” when its only effect is to demonstrate in general terms the possible uncertainty of the elements of the legislative scheme established by these provisions or the inherent fallibility of the instruments which are approved under statutory authority. Thus, for example, evidence that the particular type of Borkenstein Breathalyzer is subject to a possible margin of error is not evidence to the contrary: R. v. Moreau (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 525, 89 D.L.R. (3d) 449, [1979] 1 S.C.R. 261 (5:4).

Similarly, evidence merely showing that the accused’s blood-to-breath alcohol partition ratio was different from the average upon which the breathalyzer is based so that the machine would over-estimate the accused’s actual blood-alcohol level is not of itself evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption in this paragraph. The evidence must go further and raise a reasonable doubt as to whether the accused’s blood-alcohol level exceeded the permissible limit. This could take the form of expert evidence as to the blood-alcohol level based on the amount of alcohol consumed by the accused on the day in question: R. v. Star (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 363, 26 M.V.R. 95, 61 N.S.R. (2d) 132 (S.C. App. Div.).

Evidence to the contrary means simply evidence that the blood-alcohol level at the time of the test was different from the level at the time of the offence. There is no requirement that the evidence additionally shows that the accused's blood-alcohol level was below .08. However, the mere fact that the presumption is rebutted does not render the breathalyzer certificate inadmissible. It is still open to the trial judge to convict if, on the basis of all the evidence, the judge is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused was over the limit at the time of driving. On the other hand, the effect of normal biological processes of absorption and elimination of alcohol cannot of and by itself constitute evidence to the contrary, because Parliament can be assumed to have known that blood-alcohol levels constantly change, yet saw fit to implement the presumption: R. v. St. Pierre, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 791, 96 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 36 C.R. (4th) 273.

Evidence to the contrary / expert evidence – It is not the mere adducing of evidence capable of being “evidence to the contrary” which rebuts the presumption in this paragraph. Rather, it is only if the evidence is not rejected and raises a doubt as to guilt that the presumption no longer applies. Evidence of a simulation test which attempted to duplicate the conditions on the day of the offence and which resulted in a blood alcohol level less than .08 at the time of the offence is capable of being evidence to the contrary: R. v. Hughes (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 42, 30 C.R. (3d) 2 (Alta. C.A.); R. v. St. Pierre (1982), 70 C.C.C. (2d) 453, 23 M.V.R. 316 (Alta. C.A.).

Expert evidence based on the accused's testimony as to the amount of alcohol consumed that his blood-alcohol level would not have exceeded the prescribed limit at the time of the offence constitutes “evidence to the contrary” notwithstanding such evidence by implication casts doubt on the accuracy of the particular breathalyzer: R. v. Kucher (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 115 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.); R. v. Andrews (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 519, 22 M.V.R. 213 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

Expert evidence based on testimony from the accused which is accepted by the trial judge that the accused's blood alcohol level would not have exceeded .08 at the time of the offence is evidence to the contrary, notwithstanding this evidence also means that the analysis of the blood sample must be wrong. The accused is not required to speculate where the error may have occurred: R. v. Carter (1985), 19 C.C.C. (3d) 174, 31 M.V.R. 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Evidence to the contrary includes evidence as to the amount of alcohol consumed, coupled with expert opinion evidence which tends to show that, at the time of the offence, the proportion was within the permitted limit. The fact that the same evidence tended to show that the blood alcohol level could be over the permitted limit does not mean that the evidence is not capable of being evidence to the contrary. Thus, expert evidence that, based on the amount of alcohol consumed by the accused, his blood alcohol reading at the time of the offence, which was approximately 50 minutes prior to the breathalyzer test, would have been in a range of .058 at the low end to .107 at the high end, was capable of being evidence to the contrary. The expert testified that the range was intended to take into account the uncertainty that exists as to whether the accused was a slow absorber and fast eliminator of alcohol, which would place him at the low end of the scale, or a fast absorber and a slow eliminator, which would put him at the high end of the scale. The expert could not say which of these characteristics the accused possessed and further testing of the accused would not have assisted, since an individual can vary from day to day or even during an evening: R. v. Gibson (1992), 72 C.C.C. (3d) 28, 13 C.R. (4th) 165 (Sask. C.A.).

Subsection (1)(c) does not impose any persuasive burden upon the accused, it being sufficient if the evidence adduced raises a reasonable doubt, might reasonably be true, or suggests a reasonable possibility of innocence. It was an error for the trial judge to resolve the conflict between the breathalyzer evidence and the credible evidence to the contrary by simply assuming that the breathalyzer result reflected accurately the quantity of alcohol consumed and concluding for that reason that the accused's witnesses must be mistaken as to the amount of alcohol consumed by the accused, although they had testified honestly and to the best of their recollection. The defence evidence, while not absolutely precise, provided a sufficient basis for the expert opinion that the accused's blood-alcohol level would have been within the permitted level at the time of the driving and it was not for the accused to speculate as to where the error occurred which resulted in the breathalyzer readings: R. v. Dubois (1990), 62 C.C.C. (3d) 90, 25 M.V.R. (2d) 21 (Que. C.A.).

Evidence to the contrary / alcohol consumption after operation of vehicle – Evidence that the accused took a drink of alcohol between the time of the offence and the time of administering the breathalyzer may constitute evidence to the contrary as the effect of such drinking would be to increase the blood-alcohol level and would tend to show that the blood-alcohol level at the time of the offence was different than at the time of the tests: R. v. St. Pierre, [1995] 1 S.C.R. 791, 96 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 36 C.R. (4th) 273.

Evidence to the contrary / proper functioning of approved instrument – While proof that the breathalyzer was operating properly is not a condition precedent to the admissibility of the certificate under subsec. (1)(g), evidence that the particular instrument was not functioning properly would constitute “evidence to the contrary”. However such evidence must tend to show an inaccuracy in the breathalyzer or in the manner of its operation on the occasion in question of such a degree and nature that it could affect the results of the analysis to the extent that it would leave a doubt as to the accused's blood-alcohol being over the prescribed limit. The fact that the technician did not ensure that the temperature of the standard alcohol solution was within 1°C of the room air temperature, as recommended in the breathalyzer manual, even when coupled with expert evidence that the two temperatures could differ is not evidence to the contrary, particularly where the expert is unable to say what effect, if any, this would have on the tests: R. v. Crosthwait (1980), 52 C.C.C. (2d) 129, [1980] 1 S.C.R. 1089, 111 D.L.R. (3d) 431 (7:0).

The possibility that there may have been a mistake in the concentration of the standard alcohol solution does not constitute “evidence to the contrary”: R. v. Rahkola (1979), 48 C.C.C. (2d) 196, 11 C.R. (3d) 138 (B.C.C.A.).

Evidence to the contrary / other notes – In R. v. Kozun (1981), 64 C.C.C. (2d) 62, 12 M.V.R. 285 (Sask. C.A.) it was held that the fact that a third test was taken, the results of which were not disclosed in the certificate did not constitute evidence to the contrary.

A second reading at variance with the first reading is not in itself evidence to the contrary: R. v. Westman (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 355, [1973] 5 W.W.R. 580 (Sask. C.A.); R. v. Underwood (1982), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 94, 18 M.V.R. 226 (B.C.C.A.).

The fact that the accused passed the test with the A.L.E.R.T. device is not in itself evidence to the contrary: R. v. Fraser (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 273, 20 M.V.R. 241 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

Rounding down or truncating the breathalyzer reading to the second digit does not produce a false result nor constitute evidence to the contrary: R. v. Hanson (1989), 75 C.R. (3d) 110, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 172 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Goosen (1985), 34 Man. R. (2d) 242, 35 M.V.R. 145 (Q.B.).

Subsec. (1)(d) [Special considerations re blood samples] Sub-paragraph (i) requires that the accused have notice within the three-month period that he is charged with an impaired driving offence, that the Crown has had a sample of the accused's blood analysed and that a second sample was taken and is available to permit an analysis of it by him or on his behalf. If the accused is given notice within this three-month period and then does not exercise his right to request production then, absent special circumstances, this would foreclose any complaints that the prosecution was later unable to produce the sample by reason of its destruction following the expiry of the three-month period. The most appropriate and convenient way to notify the accused of the existence of the second sample is by service of the certificate of the qualified technician or certificate of the qualified medical practitioner as the case may be. This does not mean that notice by other means cannot be given so long as it is to the same effect and it is proved in accordance with the criminal standard that the accused was made aware in a timely fashion. The accused must receive the information with enough time to apply for an order releasing the sample for analysis under subsec. (4). However, where the accused has been given proper notice of the availability of the second sample then the fact that he did not apply for its release for testing would not effect the availability of the presumption: R. v. Egger, [1993] 2 S.C.R. 451, 82 C.C.C. (3d) 193, 21 C.R. (4th) 186.

Where no application is made for a blood sample prior to trial and no application is made for adjournment of the trial to bring such an application the accused's right to obtain a blood sample for independent analysis is not violated because the trial takes place less than three months after the offence: R. v. Corning (1987), 5 M.V.R. (2d) 207, 81 N.S.R. (2d) 53 (C.A.).

The "offence" referred to in para. (d)(ii) means not only the offence specified in the information but also any other offence properly included therein: R. v. Cyr (1983), 25 M.V.R. 62, 60 N.S.R. (2d) 159 (S.C. App. Div.).

Where the Crown does not rely on the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the obtaining of blood samples and proof of the blood alcohol level pursuant to this section, but rather relies on an analysis made at the hospital, the evidence of the hospital technologists as to the results of the analysis performed by the hospital equipment is admissible, notwithstanding that the technologists were unable to give evidence as to the capability or reliability of the equipment nor as to the accuracy of the results of the analyses. It is not necessary for evidence to be given to explain precisely how the machine operates, it being sufficient that the expert operating the machine establishes that the machine is capable of making the required measurements or producing the required data, that the machine was in good working order at the relevant times, and that it was properly used: R. v. Redmond (1990), 54 C.C.C. (3d) 273, 21 M.V.R. (2d) 1, 37 O.A.C. 133 (C.A.). Contra: R. v. Bird (1989), 71 C.R. (3d) 52, 76 Sask. R. 275, 16 M.V.R. (2d) 46 (C.A.).

The fact that the blood samples, taken from the accused for hospital purposes, were destroyed before the accused could apply for release of a sample for independent testing did not result in violation of the accused's rights under s. 7, although the Crown relied upon the analysis performed at the hospital to prove the accused's blood alcohol level. The Crown was not seeking to rely on the presumption in this paragraph and thus there was no reason for requiring that a blood sample should have been preserved for analysis: R. v. Redmond, supra.

Subsec. (1)(e) [certificate of analyst] – It is not necessary for the certificate to name the defendant but it must identify the bodily substance in such a way so that that substance may be linked to the defendant by other evidence: R. v. Larson (1971), 3 C.C.C. (2d) 537, 15 C.R.N.S.398 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

Subsec. (1)(f) [certificate of analyst re alcohol standard] – A rubber stamp facsimile of the analyst's signature is not the equivalent of his signature: R. v. Faber (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 353, [1972] 6 W.W.R.629 (B.C.S.C.).

This subsection is merely evidentiary providing the Crown with the means by which to rebut any evidence that the substance or solution was unsuitable: R. v. Ware (1975), 30 C.R.N.S. 308 (Ont. C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(g) [qualified technician's certificate] / Identification of suitable alcohol standard – Note: Several cases below were decided under a former provision which required identification of a suitable solution.

The suitable solution is sufficiently identified for the purposes of subpara. (i) where it is referred to by lot number. There is no requirement that the technician's certificate set out the chemical composition of the solution: R. v. Genero (1979), 50 C.C.C. (2d) 312, [1980] 2 W.W.R. 182 (B.C.S.C.), affd 53 C.C.C. (2d) 159, [1980] 4 W.W.R. 237 (B.C.C.A.).

The identification of the suitable solution required by this paragraph must be such that it is meaningful when read with a certificate pursuant to para. (1)(e). If the solution is simply referred to by lot number it is not identified by a distinctive number. The suitable solution should be identified as a manufacturer might on its label, for example BDH Potassium Dichromate Breath Test Solution Lot No. "X": R. v. Pearce (1982), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 434, 19 M.V.R. 3 (Ont. C.A.).

An identification of the solution by manufacturer, type and lot or batch number is sufficient. The chemical elements or components of the solution need not be included in the description: R. v. Janzen (1986), 41 M.V.R. 1 (Sask. C.A.); R. v. McEwan (1988), 39 C.C.C. (3d) 572, 62 C.R. (3d) 222, 3 M.V.R. (2d) 153 (Ont. C.A.).

The qualified technician's certificate is itself sufficient to prove the suitability of the solution and it is not necessary to prove the suitability of the solution by resort to a certificate of an analyst or testimony from an analyst: R. v. Lightfoot (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 414, 24 C.R. (3d) 323, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 566 (9:0).

There is no requirement of proof by means of a separate certificate from an analyst under subsec. (1)(f) that the testing standard was suitable. Absent evidence to the contrary, the technician is the judge of the suitability of the standard and the technician's statement as to the suitability of the alcohol standard is sufficient. Further, unless there is some evidence that the certificate under s. 258(1)(g) is not reliable, there is no duty on the Crown to produce at or before trial a certificate under subsec. (1)(f) or to disclose that the standard used was suitable: R. v. Squires (1994), 87 C.C.C. (3d) 430, 114 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 157, 2 M.V.R. (3d) 295 (Nfld. C.A.). Similarly, the technician's testimony that he had ascertained that the breathalyzer was in proper working order by means of alcohol standard was sufficient even though the operator testified that he did not personally examine the analyst's certificate accompanying ampoules of the standard alcohol solution: R. v. Harding (1994), 88 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 17 O.R. (3d) 462, 50 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (C.A.).

An analyst's certificate stating that the solution was suitable for use in a Borkenstein Breathalyzer "an approved instrument" without specifying the model number is sufficient evidence of the suitability of the solution in the particular model number of Borkenstein Breathalyzer referred to in the technician's certificate: R. v. Frankland (1978), 43 C.C.C. (2d) 365, [1978] 6 W.W.R. 268 (B.C.C.A.).

Further, a concession by the technician that his statement as to the suitability of the solution was based on the certificate accompanying the solution and that he had no personal knowledge as to its suitability does not render his certificate inadmissible nor does such testimony constitute "evidence to the contrary" within the meaning of para. (1)(c): R. v. Moore (1981), 63 C.C.C. (2d) 135, 12 M.V.R. 40 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused C.C.C. loc. cit., 31 NR. 104n; R. v. Simpson (1982), 3 C.C.C. (3d) 371, 18 M.V.R. 40 (P.E.I. C.A.); R. v. Paulson (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 336, 21 M.V.R. 57 (Sask. C.A.).

Other prerequisites to admissibility – The "place" is adequately identified for the purposes of subpara. (iii) (B) where the municipality in which the tests were administered is set out in the certificate: R. v. Padula (1981), 59 C.C.C. (2d) 572, 10 M.V.R. 201 (Ont. C.A.).

The certificate is inadmissible when only one breath sample was taken nor semble may the Crown rely on the presumption in subsec. (1)(c) when only one sample was taken: R. v. Noble (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 193, 80 D.L.R. (3d) 69, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 632 (9:0).

While proof that samples of the accused's breath were taken and that they were taken pursuant to a demand under s. 254 may be prerequisites to the admissibility of the certificate, these conditions may be established by circumstantial evidence an important element of which is the act of tendering the certificate: R. v. Walsh (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 568, 6 M.V.R. 125 (Ont. C.A.).

The necessary nexus between the certificate and the charge may be inferred from circumstantial evidence based on the arresting officer's testimony as to the times of the tests and the identity of the technician and the contents of the notice of intention with the certificate of analysis attached thereto. In any event, it would seem that in determining the evidentiary link and the certificate's admissibility, the judge may refer to the contents of the certificate itself: R. v. Andraishek (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 121 (Alta. C.A.).

The only conditions precedent to the admissibility of the technician's certificate are that samples of breath be taken and that they be taken pursuant to a demand under s. 254. There is no further requirement that there be viva voce evidence from the technician that suitable samples had been taken by him: R. v. Hall (1981), 57 C.C.C. (2d) 305, 26 A.R. 313 (C.A.).

It is not necessary for the Crown to prove by extrinsic evidence that two or more samples were taken. While the Crown, to have the benefit of this paragraph, must establish a link between the breathalyzer demand and the test which resulted in the analysis, that link is established by proof that the test dealt with in the certificate was made pursuant to the demand: R. v. Schlegel (1985), 22 C.C.C. (3d) 436 (B.C.C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused February 28, 1986.

Subparagraph (iii)(B) does not require that the certificate record the time when the taking of the first sample commenced, where the certificate did set out the time when the taking of the first sample was complete and when the taking of the second sample commenced: R. v. Eggen (1988), 42 C.C.C. (3d) 94, 5 M.V.R. (2d) 163, 66 Sask. R. 124 (C.A.); R. v. Hogg (1990), 25 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.).

Errors in certificate – Even though it seems obvious that there is only a minor typographical error an inaccurate certificate must be rejected: R. v. Gosby (1974), 26 C.R.N.S.161, 8 N.S.R. (2d) 183 (C.A.).

It was held, however, in R. v. Bykowski (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 398, 23 A.R. 426, (C.A.) (2:1) that what was obviously a typographical error in the certificate the dates of the two samples being given as March "1978" and March "1979" could be "corrected" by evidence of a person other than a qualified technician, such as evidence from the arresting officer that all events occurred in March, 1979.

Effect of absence of grounds for making demand – While absence of reasonable and probable grounds for belief of impairment [or seem as result of the recent amendments, belief that the offence under s. 253(b) was committed] may afford a defence to a charge under s. 254(5) it does not render inadmissible certificate evidence of a qualified technician on a charge under s. 237: R. v. Rilling (1975), 24 C.C.C. (2d) 81, 31 C.R.N.S. 142, [1976] 2 S.C.R. 183 (5:3). [However, consider now the impact of ss. 8 and 24(2) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.]

The amendment to [now] s. 254 to authorize a demand not only for an alleged breach of the impaired offence but also the "over 80" offence has not changed the effect of R. v. Rilling, supra, and thus, subject to the possible effect of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the law remains that the certificate is admissible although the Crown fails to prove that the officer had the requisite reasonable and probable grounds: R. v. Lintell (1991), 64 C.C.C. (3d) 507 (Alta. C.A.).

The question of whether or not the decision in R. v. Rilling, supra, can still represent the law in light of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and especially the guarantee to protection against unreasonable search and seizure in s. 8, has been considered by a number of courts. For example, the following courts have held that Rilling is no longer the law: R. v. Bajkov (1988), 8 M.V.R. (2d) 213 (B.C.S.C.); R. v. Wilson (1985), 42 Sask. R. 181, 22 C.R.R. 32, 37 M.V.R. 203 (Q.B.); R. v. Dennehy (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 339 (Y. Terr. Ct.), while the following courts have continued to apply Rilling; R. v. Kiskotagan (1986), 49 Sask. R. 10, 41 M.V.R. 161 (Q.B.); In R. v. Marshall (1989), 91 N.S.R. (2d) 211, 13 M.V.R. (2d) 251 (C.A.), the issue was left open because no application had been made at trial pursuant to s. 24 of the Charter. On the other hand, in R. v.

Wason (1987), 35 C.R.R. 285, 7 M.V.R. (2d) 88 (Ont. C.A.), the court, without referring to Rilling, excluded evidence obtained as a result of a breathalyzer demand because the officer had no reasonable and probable grounds for making the demand which had been based on an improper approved screening device demand under s. 254(2).

It was held in R. v. Dwernychuk (1992), 77 C.C.C. (3d) 385, 135 A.R. 31, 42 M.V.R. (2d) 237 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 79 C.C.C. (3d) vi, 14 C.R.R. (2d) 192n, 151 N.R. 400n that until the Supreme Court of Canada reconsiders R. v. Rilling, supra, the lower courts are bound by that decision and thus the lack of reasonable and probable grounds does not affect the admissibility of the certificate.

The absence of reasonable and probable grounds to make the demand will not necessarily result in a violation of the guarantee against arbitrary detention under s. 9 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, so as to require a determination whether the evidence of the certificate should be excluded under s. 24(2) of the Charter: R. v. Moore (1988), 45 C.C.C. (3d) 410, 9 M.V.R. (2d) 190 (N.S.C.A.).

Matters not affecting admissibility of certificate – The fact that the samples were not taken at least 15 minutes apart does not affect the admissibility of the certificate. This only precludes the Crown from relying on the presumption in subsec. (1)(c): R. v. Andrushko (1977), 37 C.C.C. (2d) 273 (Man. C.A.). O'Sullivan, J.A., differed from the majority as to the effect of the words "at least" in subsec. (1)(c) and therefore considered a second question, i.e., whether the fact that the sample was taken pursuant to a demand under s. 235(1) could be proved by a statement to that effect in the certificate itself. His Lordship held that as this was a condition precedent to the admissibility of the certificate it could not be proved merely by production of the certificate.

For a certificate of a qualified technician to be admissible it is not necessary to have proof independent of the certificate that the maker was in fact a "qualified technician" as defined in s. 254(1): R. v. Tolley (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 380, [1975] 2 W.W.R. 673 (Alta. C.A.).

The certificate is not inadmissible because the demand was not made by a "peace officer" as defined by s. 2: R. v. Harvey (1979), 18 A.R. 382, 5 M.V.R. 41 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 20 A.R. 266n, loc. cit. M.V.R.; R. v. Wright (1980), 6 M.V.R. 80 (P.E.I.S.C. in banco).

Evidentiary effect of certificate – It is not necessary, before the certificate is admissible, to prove by extrinsic evidence the matters set out in subsec. (1)(c) and once the certificate is admitted it is evidence of the statements contained in it, which statements permit the application of the presumption under subsec. (1)(c): R. v. Pickles (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 210, 20 C.R.N.S. 301 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Teague (1972), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 191, 20 C.R.N.S. (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Ferster (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 368 (Sask. C.A.).

Further, the existence of "evidence to the contrary" within the meaning of subsec. (1)(c) is not grounds for rejection of the certificate under this subsection: R. v. Robertson (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 159 (B.C.C.A.).

Section 25(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 applies to this paragraph and has the effect that the facts set out in the certificate are deemed to be established "in the absence of any evidence to the contrary". Evidence to the contrary would include evidence raising a reasonable doubt that the results of the analyses set out in the certificate correctly state the blood alcohol level at the time of those analyses: R. v. Stewart (1983), 8 C.C.C. (3d) 368, [1984] 1 W.W.R. 385 (B.C.C.A.).

Subsec. (1)(h) [certificate re blood samples] – The results of analysis of blood samples, taken for medical purposes and performed on hospital equipment, were inadmissible without some evidence from a qualified person that the machines used were capable of performing the function in question and that, if operated properly, would produce an accurate and reliable result. In the absence of such evidence, the results of the analyses produced by the machines lack any evidentiary value. It was precisely to avoid these problems of proof that this provision and s. 254 were enacted. Where the Crown is unable to rely on these provisions then it must prove its case in the usual way: R. v. Bird (1989), 71 C.R. (3d) 52, 76 Sask. R. 275, 16 M.V.R. (2d) 46 (C.A.).

The certificate of the qualified technician (a registered nurse) was not inadmissible although the technician failed to indicate what class of persons she fell into by marking one of the alternatives on the certificate. The omission was not substantially prejudicial to the accused since the technician signed the certificate and included the initials “R.N.” In addition, the certificate of the qualified medical practitioner referred to the samples having been taken by a “qualified technician”: R. v. Fedun (1993), 50 M.V.R. (2d) 286, 114 Sask. R. 127 (Q.B.).

Subsec. (2) [No legal compulsion to provide samples] – Since this subsection is for the protection of the defence it is not improper for defence counsel to cross-examine to show that the accused’s refusal to take a breathalyzer test reflected an attitude which would make it unlikely that her inculpatory statement was given voluntarily: Re R. v. Lapinsky, [1966] 3 C.C.C. 97, 47 C.R. 346 (B.C.S.C.).

In R. v. Brager, [1965] 4 C.C.C. 251, 47 C.R. 264 (B.C.C.A.), the Court held that if defence counsel had elicited the fact that no physical sobriety tests were made then Crown counsel would be entitled to re-examine to disclose the reasons for that omission, not to prove guilt, but to alleviate any inference that such tests were not made because they would not support the charge.

Subsec. (3) [Adverse inference from refusal to comply with demand] – Where the accused was acquitted of the charge under s. 254(5) and no appeal was taken the Crown is bound to accept the correctness of the verdict and may not rely on the adverse inference in this subsection on the accused’s appeal from his conviction of the offence under s. 253: R. v. Zink (1977), 38 C.C.C. (2d) 97, 2 C.R. (3d) 161 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.).

On the other hand the fact that the Crown by reliance on this subsection secures a conviction for the offence under s. 253(a) is not a bar to a conviction for the offence contrary to s. 254(5): R. v. Mazurek (1978), 41 C.C.C. (2d) 353, 6 Alta. L.R. (2d) 273 (Dist. Ct.).

Where the acquittal on the s. 254 charge is not the result of a finding that the accused did not comply with the demand but rather due to the “technicality” that the Crown failed to prove that the demand was made by the officer named in the information then this subsection may be invoked: R. v. Fredrek (1979), 17 A.R. 613, 5 M.V.R. 1 (C.A.); R. v. Ranger (1983), 26 M.V.R. 83 (B.C.C.A.).

The adverse inference arises merely upon proof that the accused refused without reasonable excuse to comply with the demand. There need not be proof also that the refusal was due to the accused’s fear that the results would show that he was impaired: R. v. Garneau (1982), 66 C.C.C. (2d) 90 (Alta. Q.B.).

Although this subsection refers to proceedings under s. 255(1), which is the penalty provision for the impaired operation offence, it applies to the trial of the offence under s. 253 and is not limited in application to sentencing. The word “committed” is not to be equated with the word “convicted”: R. v. MacDonald (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 191, 98 A.R. 308, 18 M.V.R. (2d) 275 (C.A.).

The adverse inference provided for by this subsection does not offend the guarantee to the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms: R. v. Mackenzie (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 86, 150 D.L.R. (3d) 144 (Alta. Q.B.); R. v. Van Den Elzen (1983), 10 C.C.C. (3d) 532, 7 D.L.R. (4th) 163, 26 M.V.R. 292 (B.C.C.A.).

Subsec. (4) [Application for order releasing sample] – See notes under heading: “Special considerations re blood samples” under subsec. (1)(c), (d) above.

Subsec. (6) [Attendance of technician, etc.] – The analyst or qualified technician testifying under this subsection is a witness for the Crown and his evidence in chief would be the statements in his certificate: R. v. Latter (1971) 2 C.C.C. (2d) 453, 14 C.R.N.S. 151 (N.S.S.C. App. Div.).

This subsection is neither pre-emptive nor exclusive and it is open to the accused to apply to a Justice of the Peace for a subpoena pursuant to s. 698 to compel the attendance of the analyst although the analyst would then be the accused's witness. In determining whether or not to issue the subpoena however, the same test should be applied by the Justice of the Peace as must be met under this subsection: Re R. and Forsythe (1980), 54 C.C.C. (2d) 44, 23 A.R. 589, (Q.B.).

Leave to call the technician should not be given unless there is an indication in the evidence, or an affidavit or in the submissions or undertakings by counsel, of a material irregularity in the testing procedure followed by the technician which, if substantiated, could provide a legal basis for doubting the accuracy of the certificate. Further, it should be apparent that the evidence sought is within the peculiar knowledge of the technician qua technician and not evidence which, for example, could be given by any other officer present at the relevant time: R. v. Davis (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 53, 42 A.R. 185 (C.A.).

Subsec. (7) [Notice of intention to introduce certificate] / Reasonable notice / form and content of notice – The notice does not have to be in writing, but it must be exact for the specific offence proceeded upon. Accordingly notice given for use of a certificate for a s. 253(a) offence is of no avail upon the withdrawal of that charge and the proceeding upon a s. 253(b) offence: R. v. Hannan (1970), 1 C.C.C. (2d) 447, 13 C.R.N.S.223, sub nom. Hannan v. The Queen (Sask. Q.B.).

Written notice which is clear and unambiguous is not nullified by the fact that at the time the police officer serves it, he tells the accused the certificate would be used "if necessary": R. v. Good, Schmidt and Winnipeg; R. v. Neubert (1983), 6 C.C.C. (3d) 105, 44 A.R. 393, 25 M.V.R. 73 (C.A.).

It is not enough for an accused to point to an error in a notice and then allege that, by reason of the error alone, there is ambiguity or confusion which results in the notice not being reasonable. The bald generalization of ambiguity or confusion must be brought down to concrete terms, based on the facts of the case, to show a particular ambiguity or confusion which relates to the reasonableness of the notice. Thus, an accused charged with the offence under s. 253(b) was given reasonable notice, although the notice he was given referred to that charge as well as a charge under s. 253(a). The accused at all times knew he was facing a charge under s. 253(b) and that he had been given a notice which said that the Crown intended to tender the certificate in evidence at the trial on that charge. There was nothing confusing or ambiguous in this information and the superfluous reference to s. 253(a) could in no way have altered the impact of what was undoubtedly a straightforward statement: R. v. McCullagh (1990), 53 C.C.C. (3d) 130 (Ont. C.A.).

A printed notice of intention in which, through an apparent typographical error, the wrong section number was checked off, was not invalid and it was open to the trial judge to find that the accused was given reasonable notice: R. v. Brebner (1989), 49 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 14 M.V.R. (2d) 161, 34 O.A.C. 278 (C.A.).

This provision has no application where the Crown proceeds by way of viva voce evidence of the qualified technician rather than relying on his certificate: R. v. Walters (1975), 26 C.C.C. (2d) 56, 11 N.S.R. (2d) 443 (S.C. App. Div.).

Reasonable notice / time of service – For the purposes of this subsection the trial commences with the taking of the evidence and accordingly service of a notice after plea was taken about one month earlier was held to be sufficient: R. v. Vereschagin (1972), 10 C.C.C. (2d) 529, 21 C.R.N.S.269 (B.C.S.C.).

A certificate of intention to use the resulting certificate of analysis was served upon the defendant a few minutes after he completed his breathalyzer test even though the information against him was not laid until two days later. It was held that since the primary purpose of service was to notify him of the use at trial of the certificate, there would not be any prejudice to him not knowing at the time of service whether he would be charged under the ability impaired or in excess of 80 mg. of alcohol section of the Code: R. v.

Goerz (1971), 5 C.C.C. (2d) 92, [1972] 1 W.W.R. 696 (Alta. C.A.). Folld: R. v. MacIsaac (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 46, 5 N.B.R. (2d) 365 (N.B.C.A.); R. v. Ratto; R. v. Gillis; R. v. McMullin (1972), 9 C.C.C. (2d) 63, 4 N.S.R. (2d) 538 (N.S.C.A.); R. v. Faber (1972), 8 C.C.C. (2d) 10, [1972] 5 W.W.R. 413 (B.C.C.A.); R. v. Ledoux (1972), 7 C.C.C. (2d) 18, [1972] 4 W.W.R. 624 (Sask. C.A.); and R. v. Evanson (1973), 11 C.C.C. (2d) 275, [1973] 4 W.W.R. 137 (Man. C.A.).

The notice of intention and the certificate may be served on the accused prior to the laying of an information and the certificate may be used on the trial of even a third information, where the first and second informations were quashed prior to plea, without service of a new notice, at least where the Crown has proceeded promptly in laying the new information: R. v. Nykiforuk (1981), 60 C.C.C. (2d) 128, 22 C.R. (3d) 303 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 33 A.R. 467n, 39 N.R. 540n.

Similarly, R. v. Koback (1986), 43 M.V.R. 272 (Sask. C.A.), where the Crown withdrew one information charging the care or control offence and promptly relaid another information charging the driving offence.

Similarly, on a re-trial ordered after a successful appeal, the Crown may rely on the original notice of intention: R. v. Nickerson (1984), 27 M.V.R. 124, 64 N.S.R. (2d) 164 (S.C. App. Div.).

In the absence of evidence of the date of service, even though defence counsel did not object, the Court is not entitled to infer that the defendant had been given both reasonable notice of the Crown's intention and a copy of the certificate: R. v. Tunke (1975), 25 C.C.C. (2d) 518 (Alta. S.C.).

Reasonable notice / capacity to understand – In R. v. Hamm (1976), 28 C.C.C. (2d) 257, [1977] 2 S.C.R. 85 (6:3) (S.C.C.), the Court held that the presumption that a person understood what was going on when he was served with the notice under this section was not rebutted merely by the high blood-alcohol reading set out in the certificate of the results of a breathalyzer test performed at the time since the effect of the consumption of alcohol varies among individuals. The trial Judge therefore erred in finding that because of the high reading the accused was so intoxicated at the time of service as to be incapable of being served with reasonable notice. The majority accordingly did not consider the propriety of effecting service on a person in an even more intoxicated state. Spence, J., dissenting, took a different view of the facts and would have upheld the trial Judge's finding of fact of lack of reasonable notice. His Lordship also held that notice under this subsection could not validly be given until an information was laid for it is only then that there is an "accused".

The presumption that the accused understood the notice and certificate which were in English was not rebutted merely by evidence that the demand and other conversation between the accused and the police was in French: R. v. Saulnier (No. 2) (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 237, 38 N.S.R. (2d) 538, (S.C. App. Div.).

The rebuttable presumption that the accused understood the notice was applied where the accused was hard of hearing: R. v. Bender (1980), 3 Sask. R. 277, 6 M.V.R. 44 (C.A.).

Service on persons other than accused – Service of the certificate and the notice of intention on a law student appearing to fix a date is sufficient compliance with this subsection just as service on the accused's counsel would constitute sufficient compliance: R. v. Meyer (1973), 29 C.C.C. (2d) 165 (B.C.C.A.).

Similarly, service on a lawyer who acknowledges that he acts for the accused is compliance with this subsection: R. v. Monty (1981), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 54, [1982] 1 W.W.R. 283 (Alta. Q.B.).

Proof of service – A certificate of an analysis is a document within the meaning of s. 4(6) and therefore proof of service may be by way of affidavit: R. v. Spreen (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 190, 8 M.V.R. (2d) 148, 82 A.R. 318 (C.A.).

Copy of certificate – The copy of the certificate, served along with the notice of intention to produce the original at trial, does not have to be signed as a duplicate original, but is sufficient if it is a true copy in all essential particulars and conveys to the defendant all of the required information: R. v. Glass (1973), 12 C.C.C. (2d) 450, [1973] 5 W.W.R.761 (Sask. C.A.).

Evidence that the copy of the certificate was prepared using a preassembled form containing carbon paper is prima facie proof that the copy given to the accused was a copy of the certificate and there is no requirement that the copy and the certificate have been specifically compared: R. v. Bergstrom (1982), 65 C.C.C. (2d) 351, [1982] 2 W.W.R. 95 (Man. C.A.). Also see: R. v. Pederson (1973), 15 C.C.C. (2d) 323, [1974] 1 W.W.R. 481 (B.C.S.C.).

The service on the accused of the top of three copies of the certificate, the lower two of which are carbon copies, complies with the requirement in this subsection that the accused be served with a “copy” of the certificate: R. v. Walsh (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 568, 6 M.V.R. 125 (Ont. C.A.).

Where the copy was made by means of a carbon and the officer testifies he checked the copy for errors and to his recollection it was accurate there is sufficient proof that the copy was accurate. It was not necessary that the officer also check the copy and the original word for word: R. v. Nawrocki (1974), 21 C.C.C. (2d) 122 (Alta. S.C.T.D.).

259. (1) Where an offender is convicted of an offence committed under section 253 or 254 or discharged under section 736 of an offence committed under section 253 and, at the time the offence was committed or, in the case of an offence committed under section 254, within the two hours preceding that time, was operating or had the care or control of a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft or of railway equipment or was assisting in the operation of an aircraft or of railway equipment, the court that sentences the offender shall, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for that offence, make an order prohibiting the offender from operating a motor vehicle on any street, road, highway or other public place, or from operating a vessel or an aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be.

- (a) for a first offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than three months;
- (b) for a second offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than six months; and
- (c) for each subsequent offence, during a period of not more than three years and not less than one year.

NOTE: Subsection (1) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

(2) Where an offender is convicted or discharged under section 736 of an offence under section 220, 221, 236, 249, 250, 251 or 252, subsection 255(2) or (3) or this section committed by means of a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft or of railway equipment, the court that sentences the offender may, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed for that offence, make an order prohibiting the offender from operating a motor vehicle on any street, road, highway or other public place, or from operating a vessel, an aircraft or railway equipment, as the case may be.

- (a) during any period that the court considers proper, if the offender is liable to imprisonment for life in respect of that offence;
- (b) during any period not exceeding ten years, if the offender is liable to imprisonment for more than five years but less than life in respect of that offence; and
- (c) during any period not exceeding three years, in any other case.

NOTE: Subsection (2) amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

(3) No order made under subsection (1) or (2) shall operate to prevent any person from acting as master, mate or engineer of a vessel that is required to carry officers holding certificates as master, mate or engineer.

(4) Every one who operates a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft or any railway equipment in Canada while disqualified from doing so

- (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; or
- (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(5) For the purposes of this section, “disqualification” means

- (a) a prohibition from operating a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft or any railway equipment ordered pursuant to subsection (1) or (2); or
- (b) a disqualification or any other form of legal restriction of the right or privilege to operate a motor vehicle, vessel or aircraft imposed
  - (i) in the case of a motor vehicle, under the law of a province, or
  - (ii) in the case of a vessel or an aircraft, under an Act of Parliament, in respect of a conviction or discharge under section 736 of any offence referred to in subsection (1) or (2). R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; c. 32 (4th Supp.), s. 62.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The terms “highway”, “motor vehicle” and “railway equipment” are defined in s. 2. The terms “aircraft”, “vessel” and “operate” are defined in s. 214. Where the prosecution seeks the longer prohibition order prescribed by para. (1)(b) or (c), it probably must comply with the provisions of s. 665. Section 667 provides one method of proof of the prior conviction. No reference to the prior conviction may be made in the information by virtue of s. 664. Procedure for making the prohibition order is set out in s. 260(1) to (3). Provision respecting a means of proof of notice of the disqualification and proof of the disqualification is set out in s. 260(4) to (7). Section 261 provides for an order staying the prohibition order pending appeal against a conviction or discharge. An order under this section is within the definition of “sentence” in ss. 673 and 785 for the purposes of appeals in proceedings by indictment and summary conviction respectively.

Where the Crown elects to proceed by indictment on the offence described in subsec. (4) then the intention was that, by virtue of s. 553(c)(vii), the offence be one over which a provincial court judge has absolute jurisdiction which does not depend on the consent of the accused. That is, the accused does not have an election as to mode of trial, although the provincial court judge may, by virtue of s. 555(1), elect to continue the proceedings as a preliminary inquiry, in which case, the accused is deemed to have elected trial by judge and jury pursuant to s. 565(1)(a). However, there is an error in s. 553(c)(vii) and it incorrectly refers to “subsection 263(4) (driving while disqualified)”. Until the legislation is amended, it may be that the accused should be put to his election under s. 536(2) where the prosecution proceeds by way of indictment. Where the Crown elects to proceed by way of summary conviction for the offence under subsec. (4) then the trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the summary conviction offence is as set out in s. 787 and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2). The accused is also liable to imposition of a prohibition order under this section for a period not exceeding 3 years. For all offences under this section, release pending trial is determined by s. 515, although the accused is eligible for release by a peace officer under s. 496, 497 or by the officer in charge under s. 498.

SYNOPSIS

This section describes the circumstances under which a judge is required to impose an order prohibiting an offender from operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment. If an offender is convicted of an offence under s. 253 or s. 254, or discharged of an offence under section 253, and had at the time of the offence, or in the case of an offence under section 254, two hours preceding that time, care or control of or was operating a motor vehicle, a vessel, an aircraft or railway equipment, the judge must impose a prohibition order. Such an order will last for a period of not more than three years and not less than three months for a first offence, not more than three years and not less than six months for a second offence, and not more than three years and not less than one year for each subsequent offence. If an offender is convicted or discharged of an offence under section 220, 221, 236, 249, 250, 251, 252, 255(2) and (3), and 259, the judge may make an order prohibiting the offender from operating the motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment for any period that the court considers appropriate if the offender is liable to a maximum sentence of life imprisonment. If the offender is liable to a sentence greater than five years but less than life imprisonment, the prohibition order may last for a period of up to ten years. In any other case, the maximum length of the order is three years. This section also holds that no order under subsec. (1) or (2) shall prevent a person from acting as master, mate or engineer or a vessel required to carry such qualified individuals. Any person who is convicted of operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft or railway equipment in Canada while disqualified is guilty of a hybrid offence punishable upon indictment to a maximum term of imprisonment of two years. If is an offence under the Criminal Code to drive while disqualified, even if the disqualification was made pursuant to a provincial statute or federal legislation other than the Criminal Code, provided that the disqualification arose from a conviction for an offence referred to in subsec. (1) or (2).

ANNOTATIONS

Principles in making prohibition order – The order made under subsec. (1) is an aspect of the sentence and the duty on the judge is to determine what is a fit period of prohibition applying proper sentencing principles. It is not proper to simply impose a one-year prohibition because the accused, an out-of-province resident, would not otherwise be suspended from driving for the one year prescribed by provincial legislation: R. v. Goulding (1987), 40 C.C.C. (3d) 244, 7 M.V.R. (2d) 188 (N.S.C.A.).

Although there is no minimum period of prohibition set out in subsec. (2)(b) unlike under subsec. (1), Parliament obviously intended that a longer period of prohibition be imposed for an offence under s. 255(2), impaired driving causing bodily harm, and barring very unusual circumstances, the minimum period of prohibition for this offence must be about one year: R. v. Bohachik (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 33, 68 Sask. R. 300 (C.A.).

There is no power to provide for exceptions from the prohibition order to, for example, permit the accused to drive for the purposes of employment: R. v. Girard (1993), 79 C.C.C. (3d), 132 N.B.R. (2d) 87, 42 M.V.R. (2d) 19 (C.A.).

Elements of offence – The offence under former s. 238(3) was held to be a true criminal offence requiring proof of mens rea. Further, the existence of a provincial licence suspension was a question of fact and ignorance of that fact is a defence to this charge, notwithstanding the suspension arises automatically by operation of a provincial law as a consequence of a conviction for a Criminal Code motor vehicle offence: R. v. Prue; R. v. Baril (1979), 46 C.C.C. (2d) 257, 8 C.R. (3d) 68, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 547 (4:3).

An accused whose licence is suspended by virtue of provincial legislation should be convicted of the criminal offence only where he is driving in circumstances in which a licence is required by provincial legislation: R. v. Mansour (1979), 47 C.C.C. (3d) 129, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 916 (9:0).

Both under the provincial legislation and the Criminal Code, upon conviction for the offences specified in the Registrar's certificate, the accused is to be informed by the court that he is disqualified from driving and under the provincial legislation where the accused is a resident of the province, the convicting judge is to secure the driver's licence, if any, from the accused. As well, under the provincial legislation, the accused would not be entitled to reinstatement of his licence so long as he was disqualified from driving. In the circumstances, the doctrine of regularity applies with the result that the only reasonable presumption was that the accused was notified of his disqualification. Accordingly, the Registrar's certificate together with the application of the doctrine of regularity was sufficient to constitute prima facie proof of the mens rea for the offence of driving while disqualified, that is proof that the accused knew he was disqualified from driving: R. v. Larsen (1992), 71 C.C.C. (3d) 335 (Sask. C.A.). [Also see notes under s. 260.]

Procedure – In order to obtain the greater driving prohibition mandated by para. (1)(c) the prosecution must give notice as required by s. 665: R. v. Keldsen (1987), 1 W.C.B. (2d) 75 (B.C.S.C.).

The period of prohibition takes effect when the sentence is imposed and the judge has no power to provide that it operate following his release from the custodial portion of the sentence: R. v. Laycock (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 65, 17 M.V.R. (2d) 1 (Ont. C.A.); R. v. Gruben (1989), 21 M.V.R. (2d) 230 (N.W.T.S.C.). Contra: R. v. Atkinson (1989), 16 M.V.R. (2d) 4 (Alta. C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Boggs (1981), 58 C.C.C. (2d) 7, 19 C.R. (3d) 245, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 49 (7:0), that the predecessor to this subsection (s. 238(3)) was unconstitutional because it had the effect of attaching penal consequences to a breach of an order made under a provincial statute although the provincial order of disqualification did not arise out of a conviction for a criminal offence. This particular problem would seem to have been remedied by the limited definition of “disqualification” in subsec. (5).

This section does not violate the equality rights guaranteed by s. 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms even though a person may be disqualified by reason of para. (5)(b) pursuant to a suspension imposed by provincial legislation and the length of suspension varies from province to province: R. v. Buchanan (1989), 46 C.C.C. (3d) 468, 88 N.S.R. (2d) 320, 11 M.V.R. (2d) 81 (C.A.).

PROCEEDINGS ON MAKING OF PROHIBITION ORDER / Endorsement by offender / Validity of order not affected / Onus / Certificate admissible in evidence / Notice to accused / Definition of “registrar of motor vehicles”.

260. (1) Where a court makes a prohibition order under subsection 259(1) or (2) in relation to an offender, it shall cause

- (a) the order to be read by or to the offender;
- (b) a copy of the order to be given to the offender; and
- (c) the offender to be informed of subsection 259(4).

(2) After subsection (1) has been complied with in relation to an offender who is bound by an order referred to in that subsection, the offender shall endorse the order, acknowledging receipt of a copy thereof and that the order has been explained to him.

(3) The failure of an offender to endorse an order pursuant to subsection (2) does not affect the validity of the order.

(4) In the absence of evidence to the contrary, where it is proved that a disqualification referred to in paragraph 259(5)(b) has been imposed on a person and that notice of the disqualification has been mailed by registered or certified mail to that person, that person shall, after five days following the mailing of the notice, be deemed to have received the notice and to have knowledge of the disqualification, of the date of its commencement and of its duration.

(5) In proceedings under section 259, a certificate setting out with reasonable particularity that a person is disqualified from

- (a) driving a motor vehicle in a province, purporting to be signed by the registrar of motor vehicles for that province, or
  - (b) operating a vessel or aircraft, purporting to be signed by the Minister of Transport or any person authorized by the Minister of Transport for that purpose
- is evidence of the facts alleged therein without proof of the signature or official character of the person by whom it purports to be signed.
- (6) Subsection (5) does not apply in any proceedings unless at least seven days notice in writing is given to the accused that it is intended to tender the certificate in evidence.
- (7) In subsection (5), "registrar of motor vehicles" includes the deputy of that registrar and any other person or body, by whatever name or title designated, that from time to time performs the duties of superintending the registration of motor vehicles in the province. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The term "offender" is defined in s. 2. The term "motor vehicle" is defined in s. 2. The terms "aircraft", "vessel" and "operate" are defined in s. 214. Procedure for stay of the prohibition order pending appeal is set out in s. 261.

With respect to the notice prescribed by subsec. (6), note s. 27(1) of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21 which provides that, where there is reference to "at least" a number of days between two events, in calculating that number of days, the days on which the events happened are excluded.

Section 25(1) of the Interpretation Act provides that "Where an enactment provides that a document is evidence of a fact without anything in the context to indicate that the document is conclusive evidence, then, in any judicial proceedings, the document is admissible in evidence and the fact is deemed to be established in the absence of any evidence to the contrary."

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the steps that a court must take in imposing a prohibition order under s. 259(1) and (2). The court must ensure that the order is read by or to the offender, that a copy is given to the offender, and that the offender is informed of the criminal consequences of disobeying the order. After these steps are taken, the offender must endorse the order and acknowledge both receipt of it and the fact that the order has been explained. The order will be valid even if the offender fails to endorse it.

Where it is proved that a notice of disqualification as defined in s. 259 has been mailed by registered or certified mail to an offender, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, after five days of the mailing of the notice, the offender is deemed to have received it and to have knowledge of the disqualification, the date of its commencement and its duration. A certificate describing in reasonably particular terms that a person has been disqualified from driving a motor vehicle or operating a vessel or aircraft is evidence of the facts without further proof. The accused must be given at least seven days' notice in writing that the certificate will be used in evidence.

ANNOTATIONS

Note: Some of the decisions noted below, although decided under the predecessor legislation, were felt to be relevant to these provisions.

Procedure in making order [subsec. (1)] – While the judge may delegate to an appropriate official of the court compliance with this subsection, the duties cannot be delegated to the agent of the accused who appeared on his behalf and entered the plea of guilty: R. v. Materi (1987), 35 C.C.C. (3d) 273, 56 Sask. R. 37, 49 M.V.R. 291 (C.A.).

An accused cannot be convicted of the offence contrary to s. 259(4) in the absence of proof of compliance with this subsection, even where there is proof that the accused was aware of the prohibition order: R. v. Kean (1989), 22 M.V.R. (2d) 279, 80 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 159 (Nfld. Prov. Ct.).

Proof of knowledge of disqualification [subsec. (4)] – It was held in relation to former s. 238, which did not contain a provision respecting proof of knowledge, that nevertheless with the establishment of the accused's licence suspension the Crown is entitled to rely on the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his act in order to prove the necessary mens rea and if, in order to make his suspension order effective, the registrar was required to give notice of his suspension to the accused there is no obligation on the Crown to prove that such notice had been served on the accused prior to his driving as, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption that all acts required by law have been taken will apply: R. v. Heisler, [1967] 1 C.C.C. 97, 49 C.R. 297 (N.S.S.C.).

Similarly, it was held that once the Crown proves that the accused drove while disqualified it makes out a prima facie case notwithstanding there is no direct evidence that the accused knew of the suspension. The accused then runs the risk of being convicted unless he discharges the evidential burden of introducing evidence of lack of knowledge although if at the end of the case there is a reasonable doubt with respect to any element of the offence, including such knowledge, he is entitled to be acquitted: R. v. Lock (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 477, 4 O.R. (2d) 178 (C.A.).

Sufficiency of certificate under subsec. (5) – It was held in relation to former s. 238(4), which was worded similarly to this subsection, that the certificate is not admissible to prove additionally that notice of suspension had been given to the accused: R. v. Lock (1974), 18 C.C.C. (2d) 477, 4 O.R. (2d) 178 (C.A.). Quaere, whether the same result would be reached now, in light of subsec. (4).

A notice which complied with the provisions of this subsection but went on to name the wrong date of the offence was held to be valid. This latter piece of information was not essential to the giving of notice and did not vitiate the effectiveness of the notice given: R. v. Spezzano (1976), 32 C.C.C. (2d) 303 (Ont. C.A.).

A stamped impression of the registrar's signature on the certificate is sufficient: R. v. Layton (1978), 40 C.C.C. (2d) 457, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 633 (B.C.S.C.).

However, a form which is pre-printed with the registrar's signature on it and then filled out later and which is never seen by the registrar does not comply: R. v. Zwicker (1979), 49 C.C.C. (2d) 340, 37 N.S.R. (2d) 622 (Mag. Ct.), affd (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 239, 38 N.S.R. (2d) 361 (S.C. App. Div.).

A certificate that referred to the former section number, prior to the renumbering as a result of proclamation of the R.S.C. 1985, was valid: R. v. Lee (1990), 23 M.V.R. (2d) 114, 85 Sask. R. 32 (Q.B.).

Sufficiency of notice under subsec. (6) – Service of the notice of intention in the period between the accused's first appearance and his trial is permissible, provided the notice is given to the accused seven days before the trial date: R. v. Heisler, [1967] 1 C.C.C. 97, 49 C.R. 297 (N.S.S.C.).

The Crown may not resort to provincial legislation which permits the admissibility of documents in the possession of the Registrar without notice: R. v. Delyon (1979), 47 C.C.C. (2d) 173 (Ont. Prov. Ct.), apv'd R. v. Morrison (1980), 53 C.C.C. (2d) 478 (Ont. H.C.J.). See also: R. v. Albright (1987), 37 C.C.C. (3d) 105, 60 C.R. (3d) 97, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 383 noted under s. 645.

Other means of proof of disqualification – A certified copy of an order of driving prohibition, signed by a justice of the peace for the clerk of the court and bearing the seal of the provincial court, although not admissible under subsec. (5) because the notice required by this subsection was not given, is admissible at common law. At common law, judicial documents could be proved by production of the original record or an exemplification under the seal of the court, without notice: R. v. Tatimir (1989), 51 C.C.C. (3d) 321, [1990] 1 W.W.R. 470, 99 A.R. 188, 17 M.V.R. (2d) 321 (C.A.).

It was held in R. v. Gramik (1988), 9 M.V.R. (2d) 141 (Alta. Q.B.), that an order of a driving prohibition made by a court is admissible under the common law public documents exception to the hearsay rule.

However, it was held in R. v. Kuzma (1988), 5 M.V.R. (2d) 232, 66 Sask. R. 153 (C.A.), that a certified copy of the order of driving prohibition was not properly tendered under s. 667 since on its face it was a copy of an order by a clerk of the court and not a certified copy of an order made pursuant to s. 259. The court left open whether if there were a certified copy of a court order of prohibition this would be a certificate within the meaning of s. 667.

STAY OF ORDER PENDING APPEAL.

261. Where an appeal is taken against a conviction or discharge under section 736 for an offence committed under any of sections 220, 221, 236, 249 to 255 and 259, a judge of the court being appealed to may direct that any order under subsection 259(1) or (2) arising out of the conviction or discharge shall be stayed, pending the final disposition of the appeal or until otherwise ordered by that court. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 36; 1994, c. 44, s. 15.

NOTE: Section 261 re-enacted by 1994, c. 44, s. 103 (to come into force when 1995, c. 22, s. 6 comes into force). The text, which is not yet in force and therefore printed in lightface italics, reads as follows:

261. Where an appeal is taken against a conviction or discharge under section 730 for an offence committed under any of sections 220, 221, 236, 249 to 255 and 259, a judge of the court being appealed to may direct that any order under subsection 259(1) or (2) arising out of the conviction or discharge shall be stayed pending the final disposition of the appeal or until otherwise ordered by that court.

NOTE: Amended 1995, c. 22, s. 10 (to come into force by order of the Governor in Council) by replacing the reference to s. 736 with s. 730.

CROSS-REFERENCES

An order under this section is itself within the definition of "sentence" in ss. 673 and 785 for the purposes of appeals in proceedings by indictment and summary conviction respectively.

ANNOTATIONS

The burden is on the appellant to show that a stay of the order should be granted. The appellant must show that the appeal is not frivolous, that continuation of the driving prohibition pending appeal is not necessary in the public interest, and that to grant the stay would not detrimentally affect the confidence of the public in the effective enforcement and administration of criminal law: R. v. Jay and MacLean (1987), 66 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 84, 50 M.V.R. 137 (P.E.I.S.C.).

The court has power to stay the prohibition in part to allow the applicant to drive to and from work. Nevertheless, the effect of such an order is a stay of the prohibition and if the conviction should be upheld then the period of the stay will not count against the period of the driving prohibition: R. v. Smith (1993), 50 M.V.R. (2d) 307, 58 W.A.C. 202 (B.C.C.A.).

IMPEDING ATTEMPT TO SAVE LIFE.

262. Every one who

- (a) prevents or impedes or attempts to prevent or impede any person who is attempting to save his own life, or

(b) without reasonable cause prevents or impedes or attempts to prevent or impede any person who is attempting to save the life of another person, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years. R.S., c. C-34, s. 241.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The accused has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2). Release pending trial is determined by s. 515.

DUTY TO SAFEGUARD OPENING IN ICE / Excavation on land / Offences.

263. (1) Every one who makes or causes to be made an opening in ice that is open to or frequented by the public is under a legal duty to guard it in a manner that is adequate to prevent persons from falling in by accident and is adequate to warn them that the opening exists.

(2) Every one who leaves an excavation on land that he owns or of which he has charge or supervision is under a legal duty to guard it in a manner that is adequate to prevent persons from falling in by accident and is adequate to warn them that the excavation exists.

(3) Every one who fails to perform a duty imposed by subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of

- (a) manslaughter, if the death of any person results therefrom;
- (b) an offence under section 269, if bodily harm to any person results therefrom; or
- (c) an offence punishable on summary conviction. R.S., c. C-34, s. 242; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 18.

CROSS-REFERENCES

The offence of manslaughter is punishable pursuant to s. 236. An accused charged with manslaughter has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

The offence under s. 269, referred to in subsec. (3)(b), is the offence of unlawfully causing bodily harm. "Bodily harm" is defined in s. 267(2). An accused, charged with the offence under s. 269, has an election as to mode of trial pursuant to s. 536(2) and release pending trial is determined under s. 515.

For the offence under subsec. (3)(c), the trial is conducted by a summary conviction court pursuant to Part XXVII. The punishment for the summary conviction offence is as set out in s. 787 [although, note that the maximum fine for a corporation is determined by s. 719(b)] and the limitation period is set out in s. 786(2).

Related offences: ss. 219 to 221, criminal negligence; s. 247, setting traps with intent.

SYNOPSIS

This section sets out the legal requirements incumbent upon anyone who makes a hole in ice that is, or could be used by the public, or who leaves an excavation on land that he owns or supervises. A person who fails to guard such openings in the land or the ice in such manner as to prevent other persons from falling in, and to adequately warn them of the opening, is guilty of a criminal offence punishable on summary conviction.

If a person dies as a result of the failure to comply with this section, the offender will be guilty, upon conviction, of manslaughter. If a person suffers bodily harm, the offender, upon conviction, will be subject to the terms of s. 269.

ANNOTATIONS

This section sets up a statutory duty which if breached will lead to a conviction for manslaughter even in circumstances which would not amount to criminal negligence as defined by s. 219: R. v. Aldergrove Competition Motorcycle Association and Levy (1982), 69 C.C.C. (2d) 183 (B.C. Co. Ct.), affd 5 C.C.C. (3d) 114 (C.A.).

264. (old provision) [Repealed. R.S.C. 1985, c. 27 (1st Supp.), s. 37.]

CRIMINAL HARASSMENT / Prohibited conduct / Punishment.

264. (1) No person shall, without lawful authority and knowing that another person is harassed or recklessly as to whether the other person is harassed, engage in conduct referred to in subsection (2) that causes that other person reasonably, in all the circumstances, to fear for their safety or the safety of anyone known to them.

(2) The conduct mentioned in subsection (1) consists of

- (a) repeatedly following from place to place the other person or anyone known to them;
- (b) repeatedly communicating with, either directly or indirectly, the other person or anyone known to them;
- (c) besetting or watching the dwelling-house, or place where the other person, or anyone known to them, resides, works, carries on business or happens to be; or
- (d) engaging in threatening conduct directed at the other person or any member of their family.

(3) Every person who contravenes this section is guilty of

- (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; or
- (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction. 1993, c. 45, s. 2.

CROSS-REFERENCES

Other related offences are: s. 177, trespassing by night; s. 264.1, uttering threats; s. 372, indecent and harassing telephone calls; s. 423, intimidation; s. 430, mischief. In addition, ss. 810 and 810.1 authorize a provincial court judge to require the defendant to enter into a recognizance and comply with conditions.

SYNOPSIS

This section creates the Crown option offence of criminal harassment. It is an offence to engage in harassing conduct as defined in subsec. (2) knowing that the person is harassed [or being reckless in that respect] that causes the other person to reasonably fear for their safety or the safety of anyone known to them.

ANNOTATIONS

This section does not violate either s. 2(b) or s. 7 of the Charter: R. v. Sillipp (1995), 99 C.C.C. (3d) 394, 42 C.R. (4th) 381, [1995] 9 W.W.R. 552 (Alta. Q.B.).

While there must be proof of a causal connection between the prohibited conduct and the fear which the victim has for his safety or the safety of anyone known to him, it is not necessary that the Crown prove that the accused knew that the other person feared for his safety: R. v. Sillipp, supra.

ANNOTATIONS

Meaning of threat – A “conditional” threat, that if the police officer did not leave he would be shot, comes within the ordinary meaning of “threat” and can constitute an offence under this section. In this case the court adopted a dictionary definition of threat as “a denunciation to a person of ill to befall him; esp. a declaration of hostile determination or of loss, pain, punishment, or damage to be inflicted in retribution for or conditionally upon some course; a menace”: R. v. Ross (1986), 26 C.C.C. (3d) 413, 50 C.R. (3d) 391 (Ont. C.A.).

Serious bodily harm in subsec. (1)(a) means any hurt or injury, whether physical or psychological, that interferes in a substantial way with the physical or psychological integrity, health or well-being of the complainant. The issue to be determined is whether looked at objectively in the context of all the words written and having regard to the person to whom they were directed, would the questioned words convey a threat of serious bodily harm to a reasonable person? A threat to rape is capable of constituting a threat to cause serious bodily harm: R. v. McCraw (1991), 66 C.C.C. (3d) 517, 128 N.R. 299, 7 C.R. (4th) 314 (S.C.C.) (7:0).

Elements of offence generally – Aside from cases where the words might have a secondary, innocent meaning as between the parties it is immaterial whether the “victim” appreciated he was being threatened. The Crown is only required to prove the accused uttered the threat by one of the means specified: R. v. Carons (1978), 42 C.C.C. (2d) 19 (Alta. C.A.).

In determining whether or not the accused’s statements were a threat, the words are to be viewed objectively in the context or circumstances in which they were spoken, the issue being whether they would convey a threat of serious bodily harm to a reasonable person. The mens rea of the offence is that the words to be spoken or written as a threat to cause death or serious bodily harm; that is, they were meant to intimidate or to be taken seriously. Words spoken in jest or in such a manner that they could not be taken seriously could not lead a reasonable person to conclude that the words conveyed a threat. There is no requirement that the intended victim of the threat be aware of the threat: R. v. Clemente, [1994] 2 S.C.R. 758, 91 C.C.C. (3d) 1, 31 C.R. (4th) 28.

In R. v. Leblanc (1989), 50 C.C.C. (3d) 192n, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1583, 70 C.R. (3d) 94 (7:0), the court overturned the decision of the New Brunswick Court of Appeal, 44

C.C.C. (3d) 18, 66 C.R. (3d) 134, and restored the accused's conviction for the offence under this section, holding that the jury had been properly directed. The issue in the case was the mens rea of the offence and the trial judge, in directing the jury, had distinguished between a threat innocently made which was no offence and a threat which was an actual menace.

The fact that the victim of the offence was unknown at the time the threat was made did not preclude a conviction for the offence under this section. A threat to cause the death of a member of an ascertained group of persons contravenes this section: R. v. Rémy (1993), 82 C.C.C. (3d) 176, [1993] R.J.Q. 1383 (C.A.).

ASSAULT / Application / Consent / Accused's belief as to consent.

265. (1) A person commits an assault when

- (a) without the consent of another person, he applies force intentionally to that other person, directly or indirectly;
  - (b) he attempts or threatens, by an act or a gesture, to apply force to another person, if he has, or causes that other person to believe upon reasonable grounds that he has, present ability to effect his purpose; or
  - (c) while openly wearing or carrying a weapon or an imitation thereof, he accosts or impedes another person or begs.
- (2) This section applies to all forms of assault, including sexual assault, sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm and aggravated sexual assault.
- (3) For the purposes of this section, no consent is obtained where the complainant submits or does not resist by reason of
- (a) the application of force to the complainant or to a person other than the complainant;
  - (b) threats or fear of the application of force to the complainant or to a person other than the complainant;
  - (c) fraud; or
  - (d) the exercise of authority.
- (4) Where an accused alleges that he believed that the complainant consented to the conduct that is the subject-matter of the charge, a judge, if satisfied that there is sufficient evidence and that, if believed by the jury, the evidence would constitute a defence, shall instruct the jury, when reviewing all the evidence relating to the determination of the honesty of the accused's belief, to consider the presence or absence of reasonable grounds for that belief. R.S., c. C-34, s. 244; 1974-75-76, c. 93, s. 21; 1980-81-82-83, c. 125, s. 19.
